Ver. 11.

Houb.—11 וישָׁקוּ מִים, Et potum ei dederunt aquam. Castigant Codices verbum וישָׁקוּ, pro וישָׁקוּ, deficienter scriptum. Sic sæpe alibi Masoretæ; quibus adeo non placebat, ut τὸ ἰ, numeri pluralis nota, deleteretur, quanquam in ejus locum punctum Kibbutz supponebatur.

Ver. 12.

Au. Ver.—12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and when he had eaten, his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.

Pool.—Three days and three nights. This is to be understood synecdochically of one whole day, and part of two others, as the same phrase is taken Matt. xii. 40, as appears from the next verse, where he saith, three days ago I fell sick, but in the Hebrew it is, this is the third day since I fell sick.

Ver. 14.

אֲנִי־נָכְנֵה פָּשָׁמִי נֶגֶב הַחֲרֵתִי וְעַל־

καὶ ἡμεῖς ἐπεθέμεθα ἐπὶ τὸν Νότον τοῦ Χελεθι, καὶ ἐπὶ τὰ τῆς Ἰουδαίας μέρη, καὶ ἐπὶ Νότον Χελοῦβ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—14 We made an invasion upon the south of the Cherethites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of Caleb, &c.

And upon (the coast) which (belongeth) to Judah.

Dathe, Ged., Booth.—And on the south of Judah.

Houb.—Et versus Judam.

Ver. 15.

Au. Ver.—15 And David said to him, Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

And I will bring thee down to this company. Houb., Ged., Booth.—And I will bring thee down to this horde. And David swore to him [Syr., Arab., Vulg., and some copies of LXX].

Houb.—הוּחַ. Post ultimum id verbum, addenda hæc sunt, וישָׁנַע לוֹ דָּוִד, et juravit ei David, quæ librarius omisit ex similitudine verbi דָּוִד cum verbo הַגִּיד desinente. Hæc verba non aberant ab Codice Syri Intt. apud quem legitur, ויִמָּא לֵה דָּוִד, et juravit illi David, quomodo et apud Vulgatum hæc necessaria sunt. Postulatur a servo Ægyptio jusjurandum, quod nisi datum fuisset, non se præbuisset Davidis in itinere ducem. Ergo datum fuit. Atqui si datum fuit, necesse est, non omitti datum fuisse; aliter sacra pagina omisisset postulatum fuisse.

Ver. 17.

וַיָּבֹאוּ דָּוִד מִחֲנֹשֶׁת וְעַד־הָעֶרֶב
לְמַחֲרָתָם וְלֹא־נִמְלָט מֵהֶם אִישׁ וְגו'

Au. Ver.—17 And David smote them from the twilight even unto the evening of the next day [Heb., their morrow]: and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels, and fled.

And David smote them.

Ged., Booth.—17 And David came upon them [LXX], and smote them.

Unto the evening of the next day. So Ged., Booth.

Houb.—למחרת, In crastinum eorum. Sic Arias, nulla sententia, quia ex vitiosa scriptura. Nam si affixum ם, eorum, pertinet ad Amalecitas, de quibus antea dictum est, et percussit eos, quid rei erit crastinus dies Amalecitarum? Cur vero non etiam dies crastinus Davidis hominumque ejus? Sed hoc absurdum, ut et illud; ut non mirum sit, hoc uno exemplo affixum legi post adverbium מחר, vel מחרה, cras, vel postridie; propterea etiam nemo veterum illud ם interpretatur: Syrus, במחרתו, a tergo eorum; legit במחרה. Vera scriptura est למחרה, postera die, τῷ ם ex fine verbi ad initium rejecto.

Maurer.—למחרת.—[Affixum in h. v. prorsus otiosum est, neque ab ullo interpretum antiquiorum expressum, præterquam a Syro, qui vero aliam vocem legit. Legendum est

Ver. 20.

וַיִּקָּח דָּוִד אֶת־כָּל־הַצֹּאֵן וְהַבָּקָר
נָחֲגוּ לִפְנֵי הַמֶּלֶכָה הָהוּא וַיֹּאמְרוּ זֶה
נִשְׁלַל דָּוִד :

καὶ ἔλαβε πάντα τὰ ποίμνια, καὶ τὰ βουκόλια, καὶ ἀπήγαγεν ἔμπροσθεν τῶν σκύλων· καὶ τοῖς σκύλοις ἐκείνοις ἔλεγετο. ταῦτα τὰ σκύλα Δαυὶδ.

Au. Ver.—20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drove before those other cattle, and said, This is David's spoil.

Bp. Horsley.—This 20th verse is certainly corrupt. I should guess that the sense of it, as it stood originally, hath been, that David recovered his own flocks and herds, and that they were driven in triumph in the front of the recovered spoil, and proclaimed to be David's own property. Perhaps the true reading may be thus :

נָחֲגוּ לִפְנֵי וְגו'

"And David took all his flocks and his herds. They drove before him all that cattle, and they said, This is David's spoil."

Ged., Booth.—20 And David took all the flocks and the herds of the Amalekites; which they drove [Ged., were driven] before the recaptured cattle, and said [Ged., were called], This is David's spoil.

Dathe.—20 Cepit quoque David omne pecus et armentum, quod agebant ante reliquam prædam et spolia Davidis vocabant.

Houbigant.—20 Cepit etiam David omnes greges et armenta, quæ quidem ante ipsum abegerunt : nam constituerant ut pecorum illorum præda cederet Davidi.

Duxerunt ante pecus illud, et dixerunt. Vera scriptio et verus ordo est, וַיִּנְחֲגוּ לִפְנֵי וַיֹּאמְרוּ הַמֶּלֶכָה הָהוּא, vel וַיִּנְחֲגוּ, vel וַיִּנְחֲגוּ לִפְנֵי וַיֹּאמְרוּ, non omisso nexu, quem legunt Græci Intt. qui καὶ ἀπήγαγεν, et duxit : quod non fuisse omitendum, docet vel ipsum punctum Athnac ante נָחֲגוּ positum : nam membro altero in נָחֲגוּ inchoante, necessarius est nexus ו. 20. לפני, ante eum (Davidem) ut legit Vulgatus. 30. Rejectis post וַיֹּאמְרוּ verbis, quæ planum est nihil significare, nisi pertinent ad homines Davidis, qui dicant hæc pecora... In eam sententiam Græci Intt. καὶ τοῖς σκύλοις ἐκείνοις ἔλεγετο, et spoliis illis dicebatur, quanquam quædam mutant, ut rem expendant.

Au. Ver.—1 Now the Philistines fought against Israel : and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down slain [or, wounded] in Mount Gilboa.

Fell down slain.

Ged., Booth.—Lay slaughtered.

Gesen.—חָלַל m. adj. 1. pierced, wounded, i. e., mortally, Job xxiv. 12, Psalm lxix. 27, Jer. li. 52. Often also killed, slain, in a private feud, Deut. xxi. 1, 2, 3, 6; oftener in battle, Josh. xi. 6, Judges ix. 40, al. also collect. Deut. xxxii. 42, Ezra vi. 7, וַיִּפְּלוּ, slain with the sword, Num. xix. 16; and trop. on account of the antith. וַיִּפְּלוּ slain of famine, Lam. iv. 9; comp. Au. Ver.—2 And the battle went sore against Saul, and the archers [Heb. shooters, men with bows] hit him [Heb. found him]; and he was sore wounded of the archers.

Houbigant.—הַמּוֹרִים אֶת־שָׁאוֹל, jaculantes homines arcu : Ordo pravus, nec Hebraicus, ut participium collocetur ante id nomen, à quo regitur; itaque legendum, אֶת־שָׁאוֹל הַמּוֹרִים אֶת־שָׁאוֹל; quem ordinem Syrus conservat.

Au. Ver.—4 Then said Saul unto his armour-bearer, Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these uncircumcised come and thrust me through, and abuse me [or, mock me]. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was sore afraid. Therefore Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

Abuse me.

Gesen.—Hithpa. יִחַלְתִּי. 1. pp. to quench thirst, trop. of lust, seq. אֶ, upon any one, Judg. xix. 25. Also to gratify or indulge oneself in vexing, abusing, deriding any one, Sept. well, ἐμπαίζω, Vulg. illudo, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4; 1 Chr. x. 4; Num. xxii. 29; Jer. xxxviii. 19.

Saul took a sword.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Dr. Delaney has some good observations on this part of the subject: "Saul and his armour-bearer died by the same sword. That his armour-bearer died by his own sword is out of all doubt, the text expressly tells us so; and that Saul perished by the same sword is sufficiently evident. Draw thy sword, says he to him, and thrust me through; which, when he refused, Saul, says the text, took the sword (אֶת הַחֶרֶב, the very sword), and fell upon it. What sword? Not his own, for then the text would have said so; but, in the plain natural grammatical construction, the sword before-mentioned must be the sword now referred to, that is, his armour-bearer's, 1 Chron. x. 4, 5. Now it is the established tradition of all the Jewish nation that this armour-bearer was Doeg, and I see no reason why it should be discredited; and if so, then Saul and his executioner both fell by that weapon with which they had before massacred the priests of God. So Brutus and Cassius killed themselves with the same swords with which they stabbed Cæsar; and Calippus was stabbed with the same sword with which he stabbed Dio."

Ged.—So Saul took the sword, and rushed upon it; and, the sword entering into his belly, he died [Arab., and partly Syr.].

Au. Ver.—7 And when the men of Israel and they that were on the other side Jordan, saw that the men of Israel fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, they forsook the cities, and fled; and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

Bp. Horsley.—On the other side of the valley—on the other side Jordan—rather, with Houbigant, beside the valley—on the banks of Jordan. The valley meant, I think, must be the valley of Jezreel.

Pool.—On the other side Jordan; or rather, on this side Jordan; for these were in the most danger; and the Hebrew preposition is indifferently used for on this side, or for beyond.

Bp. Patrick.—The other side of the valley.]
Of Jezreel. The other side Jordan.] Or rather on "this side Jordan [so Pool];" for the Hebrew word signifies either side. And there was no occasion for those beyond Jordan to flee.

Au. Ver.—12 All the valiant men arose, and went all night, and took the body of Saul and the bodies of his sons from the wall of Beth-shan, and came to Jabesh, and burnt them there.

13 And they took their bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabesh, and fasted seven days.

Bp. Patrick.—Came to Jabesh and burnt them there.] Some think they burnt their flesh, which was rotten and putrid: others, that they poured upon their flesh aromatic hot spices, such as Joseph ordered for the embalming of his father: or, as the Targum understands it, they burnt upon or over them.
Where Kimchi notes, that the paraphrast had respect to the custom delivered down from their ancestors, of burning the beds and other utensils of the dead upon their graves; or to the burning of spices. Certain it is, there was no such custom as this among the Jews, of burning the bodies of the dead. Though some think that these people imitated the heathenish custom, affecting singularity, as appears from the story of the Benjamites, Judg. xxi. 8, where we read, they alone would not come to the assembly of the whole nation. Such a sin-gularity Gierus thinks they were now guilty of; and, therefore, in a parallel place to this, 1 Chron. x. 11, there is no mention made of this burning: either because it was an unwonted practice, or unworthy to be remembered.

Dr. A. Clarke.—And burnt them there.]
It has been denied that the Hebrews burnt the bodies of the dead, but that they buried them in the earth, or embalmed them, and often burnt spices around them, &c. These no doubt were the common forms of sepulture, but neither of these could be conveniently practised in the present case.
They could not have buried them about Beth-shan without being discovered; and as to embalming, that was most likely out of all question, as doubtless the bodies were now too putrid to bear it. They therefore burnt them, because there was no other way of disposing of them at that time so as to do them honour; and the bones and ashes they collected, and buried under a tree or in a grove at Jabesh.

Au. Ver.—6 And the young man that told him said, As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul leaned upon his spear; and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

Leaned upon his spear. So Houb., Gesen., Ged., Booth.

Bp. Patrick.—Saul leaned upon his spear.] Endeavouring to run it through his body [so Le Clerc, Edm. Calmet].

Gesen.—נֹשֵׁן in Kal not used; found only in Niph. 1. To lean upon, to rest upon, e. g. a spear, seq. ל' 2 Sam. i. 6.

Houb.—Et ecce Saül erat innixus hastæ suæ, quia vulnere debilitatus erat, nec jam stare poterat, nisi hasta, quam tenebat, se fulciret. Nam verbum נֹשֵׁן ita significat inniti, ut aliquo fulcimento incumbere. In eam sententiam Vulgatus, incumbebat super hastam suam, quam eandem omnes veteres sequuntur. Nam Græci Intt. ἐπεστήρικτο, fulciebatur. Similiter Arabs מהכיא innixus, ut Chaldæus ac Syrus, qui utuntur verbo סָכַךְ, fulcire. Hæc notamus, quia novi interpretes in verbo נֹשֵׁן allucinantur, quod ejusdem sententiæ esse putant, atque id, quod lib. i., cap. xxxi. 4 legitur, Saül gladio incubuit; quem errorem Clericus erravit in suo Commentario sic docens: "Incumbebat suæ hastæ." Atqui ex historia, quæ extat 1 Sam. xxxi. 4, "gladio se transadegit, eo-que ictu mortuus est." Neque cogitavit eo loco legi יָפַל, cecidit (in gladium suum) non autem נֹשֵׁן, innixus est, et aliam rem in verbo cecidit indicari, aliam in verbo innixus est. Similiter errabat Edm. Calmet, cum hæc notaret, le texte marque clairement son épée, dans le véritable récit de cette histoire, 1 Reg. xxxi. Et mirum est quamobrem hæc Vulgatæ verba, Saül incumbebat super hastam, idem Calmet sic converterit, Saül se jettâ sur la pointe de son épée, cum non neget scriptum esse in Hebraico fonte הִנִּיחוּ, hastam suam; sed credat juvenem, qui hæc narrabat, fuisse mentitum. Nam si juvenis mentiebatur, verba ejus fuerant, ut erant, convertenda; nec licebat hastam, pro gladio, mutare, nisi crederet Edm. Calmet, fuisse vitiose scriptum hastam, cum debuisset scribi gladium.

וַיֹּאמֶר אֵלָיו עֲמָדָנָה עָלַי וּמַתְּהִנִּי כִּי יִחְזְנִי הַשִּׁבְעָץ קִרְכָּל-עוֹד בְּכַשִּׁי :

καὶ εἶπε πρὸς μέ, Στήθι δὴ ἐπάνω μου καὶ θανάτωσόν με, ὅτι κατέσχε με σκότος δεινόν, ὅτι πάντα ἡ ψυχὴ μου ἐν ἐμοί.

Au. Ver.—9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me: for anguish is come upon me, because my [or, my coat of mail, or, my embroidered coat hindereth me, that my, &c.] life is yet whole in me.

Anguish is come upon me, &c.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew word shabat is variously translated. By some trembling, by others convulsions, by the LXX σκότος, darkness. Kimchi saith it was a disease, which some say was the cramp: but in Scripture, as Braunius observes (lib. i. De Vestitu Sacerd. Hebr. cap. xvii. sect. 9), it never signifies any one of these things, but some ornament in a garment. And therefore our marginal translation is better, "my embroidered coat" hinders the spear from going far into my body: or his "coat of mail," as Diodate translates it: for it consisted of little rings one within another, which made it hard to penetrate. And thus Ralbag among the Jews understands it.

Bp. Horsley.—"For anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me." Baruk says, this should be rendered—"for I am seized with convulsions, for nothing of life remains in me." With respect to the first clause, "I am seized with convulsions," he is right. In the latter, his sense cannot be drawn from the Hebrew words. The passages which he alleges to prove, that ל is used to signify "nothing at all," are not to the purpose. ל is "nothing at all," and ל is "not any." But ל, not connected with a negation, is "all." His note, however, is worth reading, p. 64—69.

Ged.—For I am already so convulsed, that life hardly remaineth in me.

Booth.—For convulsion hath seized me, so that there is scarcely life in me.

Obrigui. Vocabulum ἀπαξ λεγόμεν. שבֹּץ apud Arabes شَبَّصَ significat perplexum esse horrore obrigescere. Hinc substantivum eum mentis horrorem et membrorum rigorem notat, qui Saulem adeo pervaserit, ut ne ferrum quidam contra pectus vertere valeret. Sic locum explicat Schroeder in Comment. de Vestitu Mulierum Hebr. p. 22.

Vigor.—וְעוֹר ה. 1. non est particula adhuc, sed substantivum, vigorem notans ex significatione verbi שָׁבַח iterari. Sic Schultensius in Comment. al Job. xxvii. 3; cf. Glassius p. 362. Cum hæc verba non bene cohæreant cum antecedentibus, meminisse debemus, Amalekitam mentiri atque sperare præmium a Davide, si diceret, se Saulum interfecisse.

Maurer.—פָּצַח הַשֶּׁבַע, Nam corripuit me vertigo. פָּצַח propr. confusio, perturbatio animi (א. מִצָּח, confudit, شَبَّصَ V. perplexus fuit), hinc vertigo. פָּצַח בִּי Schulzius: "ל ab Arab. כל vertendum: defatigatus erat." Dathius: "וְעוֹר h. 1. non est particula adhuc, sed substantivum vigorem notans ex significatione verbi שָׁבַח, iterari." Quarum explicationum una altera pejor est. Verte: nam omnis adhuc vita in me est=et omnis cet., nam posterius plane ut prius pendet ex וְעוֹר וְעוֹר. Utriusque sententiæ planissimus sensus hic est: age jam et me interfice, nam neque vivere valeo neque mori. Vocula וְעוֹר interjecta est, ut in loco parallelo Job xxvii. 3: פָּצַח וְעוֹר נִשְׁכָּחִי. Cf. E. § 566, adn.

Ver. 18.

וְיָאָמַר לְלֵמֵד בְּנֵי־יְהוּדָה הַקֶּשֶׁת הִנֵּה כְתוּבָה עַל־סֵפֶר הַיָּשָׁר:

καὶ εἶπε τοῦ διδάξαι τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰούδα ἰδοὺ γέγραπται ἐπὶ βιβλίου τοῦ εὐθεοῦς.

Au. Ver.—18 (Also he bade them teach the children of Judah the use of the bow: behold, it is written in the book of Jasher [or, of the upright].)

Pool.—The children of Judah: these he more particularly teacheth, because they were the chief, and now the royal tribe, and likely to be the great bulwark to all Israel against the Philistines, upon whose land they bordered; and withal, to be the most friendly and true to him, and to his interest. The use of the bow, i. e., the use of their arms, which are all synecdochically expressed under the name of the bow, which then was one of the chief weapons; and for the dexterous use whereof Jonathan is commended in the following song: which may be one reason why he now gives forth this order, that so they might strive to imitate Jonathan in the military skill, and to excel in it, as he did.

Bp. Patrick.—18 He bade them teach the children of Judah.] Among whom he now was, and over whom he first reigned. This comes in as a parenthesis between the former verse and what follows, to show his early endeavours to promote the good of the people.

The use of the bow.] While he made lamentation for the dead, he did not neglect the care of the living, that they might be provided with better means to defend themselves. For they now looking upon him as the king God designed should rule over them, he ordered they should immediately learn the skill of using bows and arrows, in which the Philistines excelled them (see what I have noted, 1 Sam. xxxi. 3). Some indeed make this the title of the following song, which they were to sing among their military exercises; but the former seems a more natural interpretation, which Conradus Pellicanus proposed in the beginning of the Reformation. The Jews, saith he, hitherto used only slings and swords, but now were taught to shoot with bows and arrows; for it did not misbecome them to learn the art of defending themselves from infidels. And indeed the benefit of having good archers in an army is so great, that Cato took the pains to describe it in his book of Military Discipline, as Vegetius tells us: who says that Scipio hoped for no success in Africa against the Numantines, nisi in omnibus centuriis lectos sagittarios miscuisset, “unless he had mingled some choice archers with every company of soldiers, commanded by a centurion” (lib. i., cap. 15.) And as this was done among the footmen, so in the next book he makes it the qualification of a captain of horse, sagittas doctissime mittere, “to shoot arrows most skilfully” (lib. ii., cap. 14).

Bp. Horsley.—

17 And this was the lamentation of David over Saul and Jonathan his son.

18 And he commanded, that the children of Israel should learn it (viz.),
The bow. Behold it is written in the book of Jasher.

Commentaries and Essays.—The word קש here has greatly embarrassed the commentators, nor is it easy to give a clear solution to the difficulty it occasions. Some suppose, that “the bow” was the name by which this song was distinguished so, as it was a custom with the Jews to call their songs and hymns by particular names, of which we find examples in the titles of the Psalms. It might be so; yet the name is here introduced so awkwardly, and abruptly, and so confounds the genuine sense, that I am persuaded it was not in the text originally, but afterwards introduced. The ó read no such word in their copies, and their version is plain and clear, καὶ εἶπε τοῦ διδάξαι τοὺς υἱοὺς Ἰουδα. This word then being omitted, all will be right, and the version will run, ver. 17, “And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul and Jonathan his son.” Ver. 18 “And he commanded (it) to be taught” (i. e., the lamentation above-mentioned) “to the children of Judah [so Booth.]” Meaning, that he ordered it to be made public, that they might learn it. “Behold, it is written in the book of Jasher.” Perhaps the Jews might distinguish this song afterwards by the name of קש, from that word occurring in it, ver. 22, or for some other reason; or it might be some musical direction, as Higgaion, Selah, and was at first placed in the margin (as the place it now occupies does not seem proper for it, even in that view), and from thence might slide into the text, as many other marginal notes have done. The book of Jasher, in which it was inserted, might be translated, “the authentic register,” and was perhaps a collection of historical songs, the usual method at that time of recording national events.

Ged.—17 Now David lamented over Saul and over Jonathan, with the following lamentation: 18 The measure of which he ordered to be taught to the children of Judah. Lo! it is written in the book of Jasher.

The measure, &c., i. e., the air or musical modulation. One of our first translators renders it not badly staves.

The book of Jasher, i.e., the Book of Songs. See the note on Josh. x. 13.

Gesen.—קִשְׁרָה β) Song of the bow [so Houb., Lowth, Clarke, Maurer], 2 Sam. i. 18, i.e., the lament of David over Saul and Jonathan, in which there is mention of a bow in v. 22. On this mode of inscribing poems and books, so common among oriental writers, see Jones de Poësi Asiat., p. 269, Comment. on Is. xxii. 1.

Hoc carmen. Hebr. קִשְׁרָה, arcus notio h. l. parum apta. Lowth de Poësi s. Hebr., Prælect. xxiii., p. 464, edit. Goett., putat, hoc carmen קִשְׁרָה fuisse appellatum vel in memoriam cladis ab hostium sagittariis acceptæ 1 Sam. xxxi. 3, vel ex arcu Jonathani, cujus præcipua fit mentio vers. 22. Hanc conjecturam non improbat Michaëlis, aliam tamen addit. Nempe posse quoque קִשְׁרָה, metrum significare, i.e., carmen metricè compositum, a قوس, mensurare.

Behold it is written in the book of Jasher. See notes on Josh. x. 13, vol. ii., p. 59, &c.

Pool.—It is written; not the following song, as many think, for that is written here, and therefore it was needless to refer us to another book for it; but this foregoing counsel and course which David took to repair the last loss, which is here mentioned but briefly, and in general terms; but, as it seems, more largely and particularly described in the book of Jasher; of which see on Josh. x. 13.

Bp. Patrick.—It is written in the book of Jasher.] That is, this order for teaching the children of Judah the use of the bow was more largely recorded there. But what book this was is very uncertain: yet Victorinus Strigelius adventures to say, "Haud dubie fuit historia ecclesiastica, qualis nunc est Eusebiana, aut Theodoretica:" "Without doubt it was an ecclesiastical history, like that which we now have of Eusebius or Theodoret" (see my notes upon Josh. x. 13). I should rather say, that Jasher signifying right, it was a book concerning the right art of making war, upon which subject the ancient Romans wrote many books, particularly Cato, Cornelius Celsus, Frontinus, and Paternus; which were abridged, as he himself tells us, by Vegetius, De Re Militari, lib. i., cap. 8. Procopius Gazæus thinks these words declare, hanc historiam ex multis libris collectam esse, "that this history was gathered out of many prophetic books."

Gesen.—Neut. קִשְׁרָה, uprightness, integrity, Ps. xxxvii. 37; cxi. 8. Hence קִשְׁרָה הַיָּשָׁר, book of the upright, (Vulg., liber justorum, Engl. Vers., book of Jasher,) a collection or anthology of ancient Hebrew poems, twice quoted in the Old Testament, Josh. x. 13; 2 Sam. i. 18; so called as celebrating the praises of upright men, or perhaps for some other cause; since the Orientals often derive the titles of their books from words or things having little connexion with the argument. See various conjectures in Wolf Bibl. Hebr. ii. 219.

Lowth.—Cum de libro יִשָּׁר ejusque titulo multi multas fecerunt conjecturas, neque certi quidquam de eo adhuc statuitur, quid vetat et nosmet? Bis citatur liber יִשָּׁר; primo Josh. x. 13 ubi quæ inde proferuntur manifeste sunt poetica, ac tria quidem disticha conficiunt: tum hoc in loco exinde deprimunt threnus Davidis. Notus est veterum Hebræorum mos libros suos ex prima cujusque voce inscribendi: ut בְּרֵאשִׁית Genesis, ויבר Numeri; vel ex præcipua aliqua primæ sententiæ voce; sic idem liber Numerorum vocatur etiam בְּמִדְבָּר. Videmus etiam apud eosdem cantica, insigni aliqua occasione edita, hujusmodi forma, qua ea notetur occasio, induci: או יִשָּׁר, sive פְּלִיטֵי אֱלֹהֵינוּ, sic או יִשָּׁר מִשָּׁה, Exod. xv. 1, וחֲשֵׁר דְּבוּרָה, Jud. v. 1. Vide etiam inscriptionem Psalmi xviii. Itaque librum Jasher fuisse opinor aliquam syllogen canticorum sacrorum, variis de rebus, et diversis temporibus conditorum, eumque habuisse titulum ex eo quod et ipse liber et singula pleraque cantica cum voce יִשָּׁר inciperent. In ea sane opinione fuisse videtur vetus interpretes Syrus, qui in horum locorum altero vocem hanc reddidit per אֲשִׁיר, hoc est, cecinit; (cujus interpretatio, inquit Arabs eum in hoc loco secutus, est liber Canticorum) in altero hujus tituli significationem ipse exposuit voce הַתְּשֻׁבָּה id est, HYMNORUM. Porro eorum sententiæ accedo, qui ex ver. 17 existimant, hunc Threnum titulo קִשְׁרָה inscriptum fuisse; vel in memoriam cladis ab hostium sagittariis acceptæ (vid. 1 Sam. xxxi. 3), vel ex arcu Jonathani, de quo præcipua fit mentio vers. 22. Huic opinioni favere videntur LXX.

Maurer.—"Librum, qui sub titulo 'ס' ה' in

In hoc loco legimus elegiam illam pulcherrimam a Davide in memoriam Jonathanis et Sauli scriptam. In origine nominis יִשְׂרָאֵל tantum laborant interpretes." Dathe. Lectorum arbitrio permitimus, utrum reddere velint: liber probi, i. e., collectiv. proborum, i. e., quoniam hoc nomine κατ' ἐξοχὴν Israelitæ vocantur (Ps. cvii. 42; cxi. 1; Dan. xi. 17) liber Israelitarum, liber nationis Hebr. proprius (Hebräisches National- [Lieder-] Buch), an: liber probi, i. e., proborum s. fortium hominum, fortasse: probitatis s. fortitudinis (cf. Ps. xxxvii. 37; cxi. 8), qua interpretatione admissa habebis carmina, quæ versabantur in laudandis Israelitis bene meritis, qualia sunt apud Jes. Sir., capp. 44—50.

Au. Ver.—19 The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places: how are the mighty fallen!

20 Tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon; lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice, lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain, upon you, nor fields of offerings: for there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, the shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

22 From the blood of the slain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the sword of Saul returned not empty.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleasant [or, sweet] in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were swifter than eagles, they were stronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights, who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle! O Jonathan, thou wast slain in thine high places!

26 I am distressed for thee, my brother

Jonathan: very pleasant hast thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women.

27 How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war perished!

Ver. 19.

Pool.—The beauty of Israel; their flower and glory, Saul and Jonathan, and their army. Upon thy high places, i. e., those which belong to thee, O land of Israel.

Bp. Horsley.—

How are mighty warriors fallen!

Ken.—

Dr. A. Clarke.—In verses 19, 22, and 25, הָלַל and הָלַלְתִּי occur, which we translate the SLAIN, but which Dr. Kennicott, I think from good authority, renders soldier and soldiers; and thus the version is made more consistent and beautiful.

הָלַל signifies to bore or pierce through; and this epithet might be well given to a soldier, q. d., the PIERCER, because his business is to transfix or pierce his enemies with sword, spear, and arrows.

If it be translated soldiers in the several places of the Old Testament, where we translate it SLAIN or WOUNDED, the sense will be much mended; see Judg. xx. 31, 39; Ps. lxxxix. 11; Prov. vii. 26; Jer. li. 4, 47, 49; Ezek. xi. 6, 7; xxi. 14. In several others it retains its radical signification of piercing, wounding, &c.

Gesen.—הָלַל adj. m. 1) confossus inde a) vulneratus, sauciatus, &c. 2) Profanus, Ez. xxi. 30. Fem. הָלַלְתִּי, profanata, i. e., meretrix, Lev. xxi. 7, 14. Fuerunt, qui nomini הָלַל etiam militis significationem vindicare studerent, ut Kennicottus (diss. i. super ratione textus Hebr. V. T. ed. Teller, p. 87—112) laudatis locis 2 Sam. xxiii. 18; Jud. xx. 31; Ps. lxxxix. 11; Prov. vii. 26; Ezek. xi. 6, 7; 2 Sam. i. 19, 22, 25, et provocans ad Alex. interpr., qui 2 Sam. xxiii. 18 in cod. Holmesianam), et in omnibus locis laudatis nullus sit, in quo militis significatio aptior sit, nedum necessaria, multi contra, quibus hæc ita inepta est, ut per singula exempla id persequi tædeat (v. ad Jes. xxii. 2).

Ged.—

O antelope of Israel!

O antelope, &c. An apostrophe to Jonathan. Comp. ver. 25. The antelope is, over all the east, regarded as the emblem of beauty and agility; and has always afforded an ample field of metaphor to the Oriental bards.

Ib. Pierced on thine own mountains. I believe it is common to all the deer-kind, when closely pursued, to run at last to their usual original haunt, and there to meet the fatal stroke.—Whose heart is not deeply touched by this allusion?

ظَبْيٌ, Chald. ܕܪܟܐ, Syr. ܕܪܟܐ. It is very timid, Is. xiii. 14; and fleet, 2 Sam. ii. 18. 1 Chr. xii. 8, Prov. vi. 4, compare Sirac. xxvii. 22 or 20; and the flesh was and is regarded as a delicacy, Deuteronomy xii. 15, 22, xiv. 5, xv. 22, 1 Kings iv. 23 [v. 3]. See Bochart Hieroz. I. p. 895 sq., 924 sq., or II. p. 304 Lips., where he shows that ܕܪܟܐ is to be referred to the whole genus of the roe and antelope, and not to a particular species. To their fleetness pertains Cant. ii. 9, Compare v. 8, 2 Sam. i. 19, Thy [so Maurer] antelope, O Israel, is slain upon thy mountains! i. e. Jonathan, as being swift of foot, comp. v. 25, ii. 18. The roe or antelope, and especially the gazelle, is highly prized by the Orientals for its elegance, and they even obtest by it; Cant. ii. 7, I adjure you, O daughters of Jerusalem, בְּצִנְאוֹת אוֹ בְּאֵילוֹת הַשָּׂדֶה by the roes and by the hinds of the field, iii. 5.—Plur. צִנְנִים 2 Sam. ii. 18; צִנְנָאִים 1 Chron. xii. 8; fem. צִנְנָאוֹת Cant. ii. 7, iii. 5.

Clericus, o caprea Israelis, quod quidem risu est, quam confutatione dignius. Licebat Saülis pernecitatem comparare velocitati caprearum, minime vero Saülem vocare capream Israelis. David, Saülis, et Jonathæ velocitatem confert, ver. 23, cum aquilæ volatu, non cum capreæ cursu; ut satis appareat non dixisse de Saüle Davidem, eum esse cursu capream.

Dathe.—19 O caprea Israël in montibus tuis confossa! quomodo ceciderunt heroes!

Caprea. Sic verto צִנְיָ non per decus, ut a multis fit. Sed tropica significatio hujus vocabuli h. l. haud dubie aptior est, qua solent poetæ Orientales virum propter pulchritudinem suam corporisque agilitatem cum caprea, animali in illis regionibus pulcherrimo, comparare, quamque adeo in stilo prosaico usurpant. Cf. cap. ii. 18; 1 Chron. xii. 8. Clericus et Michaëlis ad h. l. Ille quidem Saulum potissimum putat indigitari, hic vero Jonathanem. Quam sententiam etiam placuisse vidi peritissimo illi poësoes Hebrææ judici, S. R. Herdero, p. ii., p. 306 de genio poësoes Hebr. Alia elegiæ hujus pulcherrimæ versio Germanica legitur in S. R. Fields of offerings.

Pool.—i. e., fruitful fields, which may produce fair and goodly fruits fit to be offered unto God [so Houb., Dathe, Gesen., Winer.].

The shield of Saul, &c.

Bp. Patrick.—The shield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil. As if he had been a common soldier [so Pool]. So these words are generally interpreted, as spoken of Saul. But the words, “as though he had,” are not in the Hebrew; where there is only “not anointed with oil:” which may as well relate to the shield, as the Jews interpret it, and thus explain it:—By the holy oil men were set apart for some great office, as that of priests, and sometimes kings. Now when any person, in a sudden danger of the State, was chosen to be captain-general of their army, they were wont to anoint him; that by this sight he might be animated to fight the Lord’s battles courageously. And such a person was called “The anointed of war:” nay, sometimes (they say) their armour was anointed, to increase their confidence, just as the vessels of the tabernacle were which the priests used, unto which they think David alludes in these words. See Guil. Schickardus, cap. 1, Theor. 4 of his Jus Regium, where Carpzovius observes, that these words Isa. xxi. 9 favour this interpretation, and are alleged by Rasi and Ralbag as parallel to this place. But he confesses he can find nowhere that their shields or other warlike instruments were anointed with holy oil, to make them fight with greater boldness.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—In verse 21 I have inserted כִּי [so Kennicott, Horsley, Geddes, Boothroyd] for בִּלְיָ. Dr. Delaney rightly observes that the particle בִּלְיָ is not used in any part of the Bible in the sense of quasi non, as though not, in which sense it must be used here if it be retained as a genuine reading: The shield of Saul as though it had not been anointed with oil.

In a MS. written about the year 1200, numbered 30 in Kennicott's Bible, ל is found; and also in the first edition of the whole Hebrew Bible, printed Soncini 1488. Neither the Syriac nor Arabic Versions, nor the Chaldee paraphrase, acknowledge the negative particle ל, which they would have done had it been in the copies from which they translated. It was easy to make the mistake, as there is such a similarity between ל and כ; the line therefore should read thus: The shield of Saul, weapons anointed with oil.

Bishop Horsley.—

21 Ye hills of Gilboa, upon you be neither rain nor dew, Nor harvest heaps for spontaneous offering;
For there was thrown away the shield of mighty warriors,
The shield of Saul—armour anointed with oil.

Ged.—

Ye mountains of Gilboa!
On you be neither dew nor rain;
Nor fields affording oblations:
Since, there, hath been vilely cast away
The shield of the brave! the shield of Saul!
The armour of the anointed with oil!

Nor fields affording oblations, i. e., Let thy fields, O Gilboa, henceforth produce nothing worthy to be offered to the Lord.

Armour. From the small change of one letter into another, of a very similar form, arises this apposite rendering. Interpreters make a shift to translate the present text thus: as if he had not been anointed with oil. By what rules of translation I know not.

Booth.—

Ye mountains of Gilboa, on you be no dew,
Nor rain, nor fields of first-fruits.
Since there hath been vilely cast away,
The shield of the mighty, the shield of Saul!
The armour of him anointed with oil!

Hoob.—21 Montes Gelboe, ne ros in vos defluat, ne in vos imber, arva pingua; ibi enim repulsus est clypeus fortium; ibi clypeus Säulis; nec jam Christus Domini est super.

pingues, seu excellentes, ex quibus primitiæ Deo offerendæ decerpuntur. Idem male, agri excelsi; nam hic opponuntur montibus agri; pertinet ros ad montes, imber ad agros. Quod nisi ita esset, attribuisset David, ut montibus rorem, ita eundem agris excelsis: nam coincidunt agri excelsi et montes. ... ל, non, sive non est amplius, seu periit (Christus Domini). Plana est hæc interpretatio, et verbo ex ipso nata. ... משיח בשמן: verbum pro verbo, unctus oleo. Nos, Christus Domini, ne unctus de clypeo intelligeretur, qui unctus potiùs de Säule, cum Syro, interpretandus. Nam hujus versus sententia princeps est, clypeum Säulis fuisse repulsum; nec ad rem venit, ut addatur clypeum non fuisse unctum oleo.

Oblationes. Hebr. מזבחי תרומה Michaëlis ad Lowthum l. c. et in versione German. hæc verba vertit: ros O agri sacri! quos nempe coli nefas erat. Concedo, sententiam carmini aptam esse, dummodo verba Hebræa hanc explicationem admitterent. Sed תרומה alias semper de oblationibus sacris primitiarum dicitur, nec potest cum רום conferri, aut ab eo derivari. — Non minus autem digna videtur hæc sententia poëta, quam in versione indicavi, et quam eleganter expressit interpres l. l. Niemeyerus: euer Gefilde sey dürr, gebe dem Opferer nichts.

Maurer.—[מזבחי תרומה] His verbis primo oculorum obtutu eundem sensum tribui, quem postea etiam placuisse vidi Fäsio, nempe hunc: neque in vos, campi editi scil. descendat ros aut pluvia! Plerique, in his Schulz, Dath., Ges., Win., מזבחי תרומה, agri oblationum, i. e., unde sumuntur primitiæ ad templum deferendæ, vertunt, monentes, תרומה alias semper de oblationibus sacris primitiarum dici. Sed contextus orationis magis favet priori explicationi. כִּי שָׁם נָפַל, Ibi enim abjectus est clypeus heroum. Ita bene jam Vulg. Alii e significatione Chaldæa: pollutus, inquinatus est clypeus. [כִּי שָׁם נָפַל לְכִישׁוֹ בְּשָׁמֶן] abjectus est clypeus Sauli, oleo non unctus. Clypeos vel potius obducta clypeis coria ungere solebant, ne siccitate fatiscerent ictuque gladii dissili- rent. Cf. Jes. xxi. 5. Igitur sensus hic est: abjectus est clypeus quasi res inutilis et molesta. Alii, in his Dathius, verba לְכִישׁוֹ בְּשָׁמֶן ad שָׂמַל referentes: abjectus est clypeus Sauli, oleo non uncti, i. e., frustra oleo uncti. Prior ratio præferenda videtur.

Ver. 22.

Dr. A. Clarke.—In ver. 22 נָשׁוּב, to obtain, attain, seems to have been written for נָשׁוּב, to recede, return. The former destroys the sense; the latter, which our translation has followed, and which is supported by the authority of thirty MSS., makes it not only intelligible but beautiful.

Gesen.—I. שָׁנָה, To go off from, to draw back, i. q., שָׁנָה No. I. So Niph. נָשׁוּב 2 Sam. i. 22, where however many MSS. and editions have שָׁנָה.

Dathe.—22 A cæde occisorum, a sanguine heroum arcus Jonathanis non avertébatur, gladius Sauli vacue non redibat.

A sanguine. Hebr. שָׁחַב, ab adipe, pro quo tres codices Kennicotti, 174, 250, 260, habent שָׁחַב, a gladio. Digna videbatur hæc sive lectio, sive emendatio critici cujusdam, quam h. l. commemorarem. Sed versiones antiquæ omnes in lectione textus recepta consentiunt.

Ken.—22—Let us now see whether the word שָׁחַב, see notes of Clarke and Gesen. on ver. 19, p. 491, and notes of Kennicott on 2 Sam. xxiii. 8], we have been thus considering, has not been improperly translated in three places here, as it seems to have been in so many elsewhere; in one of these three places I think it is indisputable; and every single improvement in so celebrated a passage must be particularly valuable.

The place, where this noun seems most evidently mistaken, is verse 22: מִדָּם שָׁחַבִּים כִּשְׁחַד יְהוֹנָתָן לֹא נָשׁוּב אַחֲרָיו. Which words (as שָׁחַב is allowed by Noldius frequently to signify sine) may be thus rendered, "Sine sanguine militum, sine adipe fortium, arcus Jonathanis non retrocesserat." If this version could want a recommendation, let it be opposed to the present interpretations, which are generally to the following purpose, "A sanguine interfectorum, ab adipe fortium, arcus Jonathanis," &c. Upon the preceding construction then, we see militum and fortium are very strongly connected; (•) rather adipe fortium is a beautiful gradation upon sanguine militum: just as in the passage of Proverbs before quoted, "Multos enim milites dejecit, et fortissimi quique ab ea interfecti sunt."

But if this noun, here plural, necessarily signifies milites, it will be a very fair presumption, that it signifies the same in the two other places of this same lamentation; especially as the word גִּבּוֹרִים, fortes, which is connected with it here, is also remarkably connected with it in both the other places. Thus, in the very first exclamation of David, his beloved Jonathan is praised in the first break, and lamented in the second; but evidently with the same idea, הַצְבִּי יִשְׂרָאֵל עַל בְּמוֹתָיִךְ חָלָל

אֵיךְ נָפְלוּ גִבּוֹרִים

"O decus Israel! super excelsa tua miles!

Can anything be more worthily conceived, or more happily expressed, than this applause given to his dear friend Jonathan, the ornament and the defence of his country; "O et præsidium (miles) et dulce decus Israelis!" But, "how are the mighty fallen!" since this Jonathan and Saul also are slain in battle. Whoever recollects the preceding history of David will see the truest nature in his thus breaking forth in the praise of Jonathan only (and that without naming him here, at first), and then in his decently lamenting the king and the prince together. And, that the first break was thus expressive of Jonathan's praise only, is evident from ver. 25; where the same words are repeated, and Jonathan's name is expressly mentioned.

But how languid and unmeaning are the several translations of this first exclamation at present! The English translation is, "The beauty of Israel is slain upon thy high places:" but, whose high places? And then, the lamentation couched in the next words ("how are the mighty fallen," or slain) is entirely anticipated by the term slain, which is now read in the words before them. It seems therefore but reasonable to infer, that this noun שָׁחַב, which signifies miles in the second instance, should have the same idea annexed to it in this first instance; especially as in the first instance also it has the word גִּבּוֹרִים, fortes, closely connected with it. And lastly, if this signification be allowed it in these two instances, we must allow it in the third; as that is only a repetition of the first, and has the very same connexion with fortes, גִּבּוֹרִים.

It may be proper to observe, that the verb נָשׁוּב has been mistranscribed for נָשׁוּב: and that שָׁחַב was probably at first כָּלִי (according to the excellent remark of Dr. Delany) as the particle שָׁחַב seems not to signify quasi non anywhere in the Bible; and especially, as the negative particle is omitted in the Syriac and Arabic versions, and in the Chaldee paraphrase; which it could not well be, if the word was לֹא in their several copies. And now, that the propriety of thus translating the noun דָּל in these three places, and especially in the second, may more fully appear, I shall here subjoin a close version of this inimitable lamentation; endeavouring to preserve, as much as possible, the spirit and tenderness and sublimity of the great original.

O DECUS Israelis, super excelsa tua MILES!
 Quomodo ceciderunt FORTES!
 Nolite indicare in Gath,
 Nolite indicare in plateis Ascalonis:
 Ne lætentur filiæ Philisthæorum,
 Ne exultent filiæ incircumcisorum.
 Montes Gilboani, super vos
 Nec ros, nec pluvia, neque agri primitiarum;
 Ibi enim abjectus fuit clypeus fortium,
 Clypeus Saulis, arma inuncti oleo!
 Sine sanguine MILITUM,
 Sine adipe FORTIUM,
 Arcus Jonathanis non retrocesserat;
 Gladiusque Saulis non redierat incassum.
 Saul et Jonathan
 Amabiles erant et jucundi in vitis suis,
 Et in morte suâ non separati.
 Præ aquilis veloces!
 Præ leonibus fortes!
 Filiæ Israelis, deflete Saullem;
 Qui coccino cum deliciis vos vestivit,
 Qui vestibus vestris ornamenta imposuit aurea!
 Quomodo ceciderunt FORTES, in medio belli!
 O Jonathan, super excelsa tua MILES!
 Versor in angustiis, tui causa,
 Frater mi, Jonathan!
 Mihi fuisti admodum jucundus!
 Mihi tuus amor admodum mirabilis,
 Mulierum exuperans amorem!
 Quomodo ceciderunt fortes,
 Et perierunt arma belli!

Bp. Patrick.—Ish-bosheth.] Called Esh-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 33, as there are several other names which end indifferently, either in Bosheth, or Baal. For instance, Gideon is called Jerubbaal, Judg. ix. 1, and Jerubesheth, 2 Sam. xi. 21, and Mephibosheth is called Meribbaal, 1 Chron. viii. 34. For Bosheth signifies shame and confusion; and Baal being an infamous idol, the Holy Scripture makes these names end promiscuously either in Baal, or Bosheth, or Besheth. So Pool.

Bp. Patrick.—The Ashurites.] The Chaldee paraphrast understands hereby, the tribe of Asher; who, though remote from Mahanaim, were forward to acknowledge him.

Ged.—The present text has, the Ashurites. Some of the ANT. VERSIONS, Geshur. But I am convinced that Asher, i.e., the tribe of Ashur, is the true reading.

Boothroyd's Heb. Bible.—הַאֲשּׁוּרִי. The text is here incorrect; for Ishbosheth did not reign over the Assyrians. All the versions are obscure and contradictory. The Vulg. and Syr. read הַנְּשׁוּרִי; the Talmud, על שֵׁבט אֲשֵׁר. The ὁ, ὁ Θασουρι. Geddes follows the Talmud, as the true reading, but Michaëlis maintains this tribe was too remote from the places mentioned to be meant. I do not see any force in this objection, and think it highly probable that אֲשֵׁר is the true reading, as the northern tribes seem to have adhered to the house of Saul.

Houb.—הַאֲשּׁוּרִי, Et in Assuri. Vulgatus, Gessuri ex scriptione הַנְּשׁוּרִי. Utrum præstet incertum, quoniam potest esse vel tribus Aser, vel Gessuri, prope Galaad. Græci Intt. θασυρι, in Codice Romano; in Alexandrino, θασουρι, ex scriptione הַאֲשּׁוּרִי.

Dathe.—Lectio Hebr. הַאֲשּׁוּרִי videtur esse corrupta, nam de Assyriis h. l. sermo esse non potest. Versiones antiquæ dissentiunt: οἱ ὁ habent καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν Θασυρι, in cod. Alex. legitur ὁ Θασουρι. Au. Ver.—10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years. But the house of Judah followed David.

11 And the time [Heb., number of days] that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah was seven years and six months.

12 And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to Gibeon.

Pool.—Reigned two years, to wit, before the following war broke forth; compare 1 Sam. xiii. 1; for that he reigned longer, may appear both from the following verse, and from chap. iii. 1, and from the following history; though some think he reigned only two years, and that the rest of David's seven years the Israelites by Abner's instigation stuck to the house of Saul, but were in suspense whether they should confer the crown upon Mephibosheth the right heir, but a child; or upon Ishbosheth, a grown man, whom with some difficulty, and after long debates amongst themselves, they preferred.

Bp. Patrick.—10 And reigned two years] Before there was any hostility between him and David. So Ralbag expounds it, who makes this cohere with ver. 12, it being a mere fancy of the Jews, in Seder Olam Rabba, that the throne was vacant, and there was no king in Israel for five years. Victorinus Strigelius's conjecture is far better; who, after he had given the foregoing interpretation of Ralbag, adds, that after the war broke out between David and Ishbosheth, and David waxed stronger and stronger (iii. 1), Ishbosheth being an inactive prince, and unfit to command, Abner took the administration of the government upon himself, and managed the war the other five years which passed before David came to the throne of Israel. These five years the Scripture doth not reckon as a part of Ishbosheth's reign; because he had the mere name of a king, but no authority at all.

11 So long, therefore, Ishbosheth reigned over Israel. Unless we will suppose, either that the Israelites were five years deliberating whether he or Mephibosheth should be king (whose right it was by the laws of succession), or that he reigning two years immediately after the death of Saul, they were five years deliberating whether they should own David or not: neither of which is probable, as Ralbag thinks; who judiciously observes, that those words, "he reigned two years," are to be joined with ver. 12, "And Abner, the son of Ner, went out," &c. That is, saith he, the first two years of his reign there was no war between the house of Saul and David: and there had been no open war, if Abner had not been the author of it, &c.

Dr. A. Clarke.—10 Ish-bosheth—reigned two years.] It is well observed that Ishbosheth reigned all the time that David reigned in Hebron, which was seven years and six months. Perhaps the meaning of the writer is this: Ish-bosheth reigned two years before any but the tribe of Judah had attached themselves to the interest of David. Some think that Abner in effect reigned the last five years of Ish-bosheth, who had only the name of king after the first two years. Or the text may be understood thus: When Ish-bosheth had reigned two years over Israel, he was forty years of age.

Houbigant, dissatisfied with all the common modes of solution, proposes to read ששה שנים, six years, for the שנים שנים, two years, of the text, which he contends is a solecism; for in pure Hebrew the words would be שנים שנים, as they are everywhere read in the first book; and שנה is the reading of eleven of Kennicott's MSS., and nine of De Rossi's; but the number two is acknowledged by all the ancient versions, and by all the MSS. yet collated. The critical reader may examine Houbigant on the place. After all, probably the expedition mentioned in the succeeding verses is that to which the writer refers, and from which he dates. Ish-bosheth had reigned two years without any rupture with David or his men, till under the direction of Abner, captain of his host, the Israelites passed over Jordan, from Mahanaim to Gibeon; and being opposed by Joab, captain of David's host, that battle took place which is described in the following verses.

Boothroyd's Heb. Bible.—10 ושנים שנים. Many critics have supposed that there must be some error in this number; for Ishbosheth began to reign on the death of his father, and his reign must be nearly as long as that of David in Hebron, over the house of Judah. If we include what follows to the end of 11th com. in a parenthesis, and consider the two years that he reigned, before he commenced war against David, the text may be vindicated. The 10th and 12th com. properly connect, and what follows supports this opinion.

Houb.—10 שנים מלך, Et duos annos regnavit (Isboseth). Ita omnes interpretantur, etsi de mendo solecismus admonebat. Nam Hebraice duo anni sunt שנים שנה, non שנים. Ita passim legitur in libro Samuelis primo. Non mirum igitur interpretes, ut eam temporis notationem explicarent, multa movisse, nihil promovisse. Difficultas est, quomodo Isboseth, a quo, in Israel regnante, David impediatur, ne in omnes tribus Israel regnaret, duos tantum annos regnavit, quamvis David annos totos septem cum dimidio anno in tribum Judæ unam regnavit, præsertim cum constet Davidem, ut primum Isboseth mortuus est, in omnes tribus regnasse. Piget nos referre ac confutare hæc, quæ comminiscuntur alii atque alii interpretes, cum, sine historia teste, inducunt interregnum in Israel, alii post Saülis, alii post Isboseth mortem. Nodum solvi posse credit explanator Gallicus librorum Regum quatuor, si statuitur notari, non quot annos Isboseth in Israel regnaverit, sed quot annos rex Israel fuerit, antequam cum Davide, duce Abner, in Gabaon decertaret, et si convertitur, annos duos Isboseth regnaverat, in tempore Plusquam-perfecto, non in Præterito regnavit. Cui contradicunt ea quæ sequuntur. Nam additur continenter, David autem regnavit in Hebron septem annos cum anno dimidio. Ergo erit pariter interpretandum, David regnaverat... Quod si David regnaverat in Judam plus annis septem, antequam cum exercitu Isboseth decertaret, qui fieri potest, ut Isboseth non regnarit in Israel annos plusquam duos. Nam utriusque regna, post Saülem mortuum simul incæperunt. Ergo nodus relinquitur, ut erat, nedum solvatur. Planum est, et membrana ipsa loquitur, notari quot annos Isboseth regnaverit, donec moreretur, quot annos David in Judam, donec eum omnes Tribus regem haberent. Itaque æqualia, aut fere æqualia utriusque regni tempora esse debere, quoniam unus, ne alter in Israel regnaret, obstabat. Ergo pro שנים שנה, quæ verba falsam temporum notationem habent, et solecismo laborant, legendum ששית שנים, sex annos, ordinali numero, pro cardinali, ut solet, posito. Nimirum post Saülis mortem primus annus regni Isboseth occupatus fuit in resarcienda clade a Philistæis accepta, ita ut anno tantum secundo Isboseth regem habere Israelitæ possent. Postea Isboseth annis sex regnavit. Ex iis annis conficiuntur anni septem, quos annos David in Judam regnavit. Relinquitur annus dimidius, qui quidem elapsus est, dum David cæteras Tribus in suam obedientiam cogebat.

Au. Ver.—16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together: wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, [that is, the field of strong men], which is in Gibeon.

Pool.—Helkath-hazzurim, or, the field of rocks, i. e., of men who stood like rocks, unmoveable, each one dying upon the spot where he fought.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew words signify, “the field of strong men;” as hard and firm as a rock.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Helkath-hazzurim [“The portion of the mighty;” or, “The inheritance of those who were slain,” according to the Targum.

Ged., Booth.—Helkath-hazzurim [the field of grapplers], which is by Gibeon.

Pool.—It will be bitterness in the latter end; it will produce dreadful effects, and many bloody slaughters, if by a further prosecution thou makest them desperate ; which is against all the rules of policy.

Au. Ver.—27 And Joab said, As God liveth, unless thou hadst spoken, surely then in the morning [Heb., from the morning] the people had gone up [or, gone away] every one from following his brother.

Pool.—Unless thou hadst spoken ; unless thou hadst made the motion that they might fight, ver. 14. It was thou, not I, that gave the first occasion of this fight. Withal, he intimates that Abner was the sole cause of this war ; and that if he had not given commission and command, the war had never been undertaken, but all things had been ended by an amicable agreement ; which might have been made that very morning, if he had so pleased.

Ged.—27 Joab answered : “As the Lord liveth ; if thou hadst so spoken at first, the people should, even from the morning, have returned from pursuing their brethren.”

The present text is evidently, I think, corrupted. I have followed Houbigant's emendation ; which is agreeable to the Vulgate ; and to the context. Others, however, would render thus : If thou hadst not spoken, that is, provoked us by proposing a preludical combat.

Booth.—And Joab said, As God liveth, if thou hadst so spoken, surely from the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.

Houb.—27 Joab respondit : Vixit Dominus, si tu istud dixisses, populus a mane desiisset persequi suos quisque fratres.

tudine pronuntiandi, vel ex margine in contextum allatum, cum scriba crederet τὸ לא, quod in margine legebat, fuisse omissum, deceptus eo, quod לאל est verbum Hebraicum. Clericus, nisi aliter dixisses. Sed cui, vel tyroni, persuadebat esse nisi dixisses, idem ac nisi aliter dixisses ? Idem docet in Commentario, illud dixisses pertinere ad id, “quod dixerat Abner se velle pugnare, cum pro ludium pugnae petierat, quo peracto, accensum erat prælium,” neque attendit se in orationem inducere hominem sibi ipsi contradicentem. Num enim dixerit Joab, nisi tu dixisses, te velle pugnare, abisset quisque a fratre suo insequendo ? Nimirum hæc verba, quisque a fratre suo insequendo, demonstrant pugnam jam factam, et alios fugientes, alios persequentes ; neque erat fugæ locus, ubi non fuisset certamen ; ut planum sit, Joab ad Abner ultima verba respondere, postquam Abner dixerat, an perpetuam stragem edet gladius.

Dathe.—27 Tum Joabus, Per Deum immortalem, inquit, nisi nos provocasses, jam mane discessisset quisque ab insequendis fratribus suis.

Au. Ver.—31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that three hundred and threescore men died.

Boothroyd's Heb. Bible.—מרו. This is wanting in the ὁ, Syr., and Arab. I am inclined to think it has been inserted from the preceding com. If retained the ו must be added ומרו, or otherwise it will follow that though three hundred men were smitten, only שנים died.

CHAP. III. 1.

Au. Ver.—1 Now there was long war between the house of Saul and the house of David: but David waxed stronger and stronger, and the house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

Houb.—1 ויחדי המלחמה ארכה, et fuit bellum diuturnum. Hæc et quæ sequuntur, domum Saülis in dies decrevisse, mendum confutant, quod supra correximus, in quo dicitur Isboseth regnasse annos tantum duos. Nam si Isboseth regnavit annos tantum duos; si ei, anteqam bellum Davidi inferret, resarcienda fuit clades a Philistæis accepta, si denique bellum fuit adversus Davidem comparandum, quæ omnia fieri vix poterant intra unum annum, liquet non satis jam regni ac vitæ Isboseth superesse, ut gerat bellum diuturnum, neque ut ejus res paulatim decrescant et sublapsa referantur. Sed sex anni sunt satis, ut bellum dicatur esse diuturnum: vide notam nostram ad caput superius.

Ver. 6.

וַיַּבְנֶה אֲבִנֶר הַיִּזְרְיָה מִתְחַזֵּק בְּבֵית שָׁאֻל :

— καὶ Ἀβεννήρ ἦν κρατῶν τοῦ οἴκου Σαούλ.

Au. Ver.—6 And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

Made himself strong, &c.

Pool.—He used all his endeavours to support Saul's house; which is mentioned, to show the reason of his deep resentment of the following aspersion. Or, he strengthened himself in the house of Saul, i. e., he so managed all affairs, as to get all the riches and power into his own hands; which made Ish-bosheth suspect that he aimed at the kingdom, and sought to marry the king's concubine in order to it, as the manner was. See 2 Sam. xii. 8; xvi. 21; 1 Kings i. 17.

Bishop Horsley.—Made himself strong; rather, made himself of consequence.

Ged., Booth.—Exerted himself for the house of Saul.

Gesen.—חֲזַק Hithp. 3. To show oneself strong for any one, i. e., to help, to aid, seq. 3 et 2 Sam. iii. 6; 1 Chr. xi. 10; Dan. x. 21.

Dathe.—Abnerus Sauli partes defenderat.

Ver. 7.

Au. Ver.—7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was Rizpah, the daughter of Ahiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner, Wherefore hast thou gone in unto my father's concubine?

And Ish-bosheth.

Ged.—All the antient versions (except Chald.) with ten MSS. read Ish-bosheth. The Greek adds, the son of Saul [so Houb., Horsley].

Houb.—7 ויאמר, Et dixit. Adde אִשׁ בֹּשֶׁת בן שאול, Isboseth, filius Saülis, quæ verba legebant Græci Intt. Cæteri non omittunt Isboseth, nisi Chaldæus. Nemo antecedit in oratione, qui dicat, neque Isboseth fuit nominatus; ut fieri non possit ejus nomen fuisse hic omissum. Nec proprio id marte addidere Græci Intt. neque enim adderent, filius Saülis, quod non erat necesse, nisi et legerent. Caligo facta fuerit scribæ ut, postquam שאול bis legerat, omitteret hæc verba, אִשׁ בֹּשֶׁת בן שאול, similiter desinentia.

Ver. 8.

וַיִּחַר לְאַבְנֶר מְאֹד עַל-דִּבְרֵי אִישׁ-בֹּשֶׁת וַיֹּאמֶר הֲרָאשׁ כָּלֵב אֲנֹכִי אֲשֶׁר לִיהוּדָה הַיּוֹם אֶעֱשֶׂה-חֶסֶד עִם-בָּיִת ו אֲשָׁאֵל אֶבְיָד אֶל-אֶחָיו וְאֶל-מִרְעָהוּ וְלֹא הִמְצִיתִי בֶן-דָּגֵר וְתַפְקֹד עָלַי עֲוֹן הָאִשָּׁה הַזֹּאת :

καὶ ἐθυμώθη σφόδρα Ἀβεννήρ περὶ τοῦ λόγου τούτου τῷ Ἰεβοσθέ· καὶ εἶπεν Ἀβεννήρ πρὸς αὐτόν, μὴ κεφαλὴ κυνὸς ἐγὼ εἰμι; ἐποίησα σήμερον ἔλεος μετὰ τοῦ οἴκου Σαούλ τοῦ πατρός σου, καὶ περὶ ἀδελφῶν καὶ περὶ γνωρίμων, καὶ οὐκ ἠτομόλησα εἰς τὸν οἶκον Δαυὶδ, καὶ ἐπιζητεῖς ἐπ' ἐμέ σὺ ὑπὲρ ἀδικίας γυναικὸς σήμερον;

Au. Ver.—8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am I a dog's head, which against Judah do shew kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

So equivalently Pool, Dathe, Ged., Booth.

Pool.—A dog's head, i. e., a vile and contemptible creature, as a dog was. See Deut. xxiii. 18; 1 Sam. xxiv. 14; 2 Sam. ix. 8; xvi. 9; Job xxx. 1; Eccles. ix. 4. And a dog's head is put for a dog by a synecdoche, usual both in the Hebrew and in other languages, as the head is oft put for the whole man in the Latin tongue. Which against Judah; so the particle lamed is well rendered, as el, which among the Hebrews is confessedly of the same nature and use, is used Eccles. ix. 14; Jer. xxxiv. 7; Ezek. xiii. 9, 20; Amos vii. 15. Have not delivered thee into the hand of David, which I could oft and easily have done. That thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman; either, that thou accusést me falsely concerning this matter; or, that thou canst not wink at so small a fault (for so he esteemed it) as conversation with this woman, who, whatsoever she formerly was, is now so impotent and inconsiderable, that she can do thee no service, as I have done.

Ged., Booth.—8 Then was Abner very wroth on account of the words of Ishbosheth, and said, Am I, who, in opposition to Judah, have, to this day, shown kindness to the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hands of David, such a dog's head, that thou chargest me to day with a fault concerning this woman [Ged., that thou shouldst, now, charge me with a crime, in regard to that woman]?]

Houb.—8 Excanduit Abner ad hæc verba Ishobeth, eique dixit: num caput canis ego sum? Scilicet ego reliquii domus Judæ in contemptum nunc veni, quoniam bene meritus sum de domo patris tui Saulis, de fratribus ejus et amicis, nec te Davidis in manum tradidi, propterea tu me, ob mulierculam, increpas.

הָרָאשׁ כָּל אֲנִי אֲשֶׁר לַיהוָה: Arias, num caput canis ego sum quod Judæ; quæ verba Latina, ut nihil sonant, ita non licet aliter Hebraica interpretari; ita ut vel hoc ipso vitium debeat subolere. Nec licet, cum Syri Latino Interprete, num caput canum Juda sum? Neque enim כָּל potest ad יְהוָה pertinere, postquam pronomen אֲנִי, quod medium est, utrumque separavit. Id norunt, qui Hebr. Grammaticam vel a primo limine salutarunt. Denique non licet cum Clerico, an videor Judæ caput canis, posito Judæ, in dandi casu, quia legeretur לַיהוָה eis, qui sunt Judæ. Adjuvat etiam ad explorandum mendum, quod אֲנִי in futuro legitur, non præeunte ו conversivo, ut fiat præteritum. Nam sententia flagitat feci, non faciam. Omittunt לַיהוָה, Græci Intt. quæ verba Vulgatus adversum Judam, parum fideliter. Arabs autem divertit ad paraphrasin, nescio quam, ne nihil diceret. Sed ex Chaldæo discimus hunc locum fuisse mutilatum. Nam sic apud eum legitur: הָרָאשׁ דְּכָלְבָא אֲנִי כִמְעַן, הִירִי גַבְרִי דְּהוּיִט לְשָׂרָא דְּבֵית דָּוִד, Numquid caput canis ego sum? Ex nunc fui vir ab-jectus reliquii domus Judæ; ex quibus Chaldaicis intelligitur, Chaldæum sic legisse, דְּרָאשׁ כָּל אֲנִי מֵהוּיִט דְּהִירִי אִישׁ נִקְדָּה לְשָׂרָא דְּיְהוָה... וְהוּיִט, et scribas hod. codicum posuisse אֲשֶׁר, ubi scribendum fuerat לְשָׂרָא, reliquii; et, quia legebatur וְהוּיִט... וְהוּיִט, quibusdam interjectis, saltum fecisse a מֵהוּיִט in וְהוּיִט, et ea, quæ in medio erant, ut fit, omisisse. Nos igitur huic Chaldæi scriptioni obsequimur, ut Abner, ironice dicat, se ab hominibus Judæ esse jam contemnendum, nec ab eis nimium cupide amplectendum, si a domo Saulis ad domum David deficiat. Quod si hæc omnia, quæ ex Chaldæo eruimus, non adsciscuntur, erit tantummodo sic legendum, לְשָׂרָא דְּיְהוָה דְּהוּיִט אֲנִי, (num caput canis ego sum) reliquii Judæ, cum tamen hodie bene meritus sim... Vocat Abner Judæenses reliquias Judæ, quia sic appellari solet numerus parvus cum magno comparatus. ...הַמְצִיחַ; duplici mendo id scriptum; deest enim תּוֹ personæ primæ, quod lego in uno Codice Orat. ubi הַמְצִיחַ; deest etiam א, verbi מֵנָא. This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

SYNOPSIS OF CRITICISMS.

A

UPON THOSE PASSAGES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT, IN WHICH
MODERN COMMENTATORS HAVE DIFFERED FROM THE AUTHORIZED VERSION; TOGETHER WITH AN EXPLANATION OF VARIOUS DIFFICULTIES IN THE HEBREW AND ENGLISH TEXTS.

BY THE REV. RICHARD A. F. BARRETT, M.A., FELLOW OF KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

All flesh is as grass,
And all the glory of man as the flower of grass.
The grass withereth,
And the flower thereof falleth away;
But the word of the LORD endureth for ever.—1 PETER i. 24, 25.

κατανησάτωσαν ἐπὶ κεφαλὴν Ἰωάβ καὶ ἐπὶ πάντα τὸν οἶκον τοῦ πατρὸς αὐτοῦ, καὶ μὴ ἐκλείπειν ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου Ἰωάβ γονορρύτης, καὶ λεπρός, καὶ κρατῶν σκυντάλης, καὶ πίπτων ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ καὶ ἐλασσούμενος ἄρτοις.

Au. Ver.—29 Let it rest on the head of Joab, and on all his father's house; and let there not fail [Heb., be cut off] from the house of Joab one that hath an issue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

Let it rest.

Houb.—יָהֳלֹץ. Notatur in codicibus יָהֳלֹץ, deficit י, benè. Nam radix est יָהֳלֹץ, manere; atque hoc indicat punctum Kibbutz. Sed malè, numero plurali. Vult verbum יָהֳלֹץ subsequens, ut sit יָהֳלֹץ, numeri sing. ut legitur plerique veteres.

Who leaneth on a staff.

Ged., Booth.—Upon a crutch.

3. A round staff, crutch, 2 Sam. iii. 29. Sept. σκυντάλη.

Prof. Lee.—פָּלָה, m. פָּלָה. Arab. فَلَكٌ rotundus fuit; فَلَكٌ, pars rotunda et maxima; orbis cælestis; فَلَكٌ, res quælibet rotunda; orbiculus fusi muliebris. Any thing round, (a) A spinning wheel. (b) Circuit, district. (a) 2 Sam. iii. 19; Prov. xxxi. 19. (b) Neh. iii. 9, 12, &c.

Dathe.—Qui fusum verset.

Houb.—Fusum tractans.

Maurer.—29 פָּלָה פָּלָה Plerique interpretes de tenente baculum s. fulcrum intelligunt, cæcum potissimum indicari existimantes. Ita LXX, κρατῶν σκυντάλης. "Quia vero Prov. xxxi. 19 פָּלָה, fusus est, et Vulg., Syr., Aquila h. l. nostro habent:

tenens fusum" (cf. فَلَكٌ fusus, Talmud. פָּלָה fila duxit de colo), "equidem malim accedere huic sententiæ, maribus enim apud Israelitas agricolas tum turpe erat, fusum tenere, nec nisi ad summas incitas reducti muliebre hoc opus suscipiebant. Schulz. Videtur sane fusi notio huic quoque loco convenire, neque opus esse novo significatu. cf. verba ultima פָּלָה.

Ver. 31.

Au. Ver.—31 And David said to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, Rend your clothes, and gird you with sackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himself followed the bier [Heb., bed].

Mourn before Abner. So Houb., Dathe, Maurer.

Ged., Booth.—Mourn for Abner.

Maurer.—וְסָפְדוּ לְכִנֵּי אֲבִנֵּר "h. e. et Abnerum plangite." Schulz. Ita et Winerus: "plangite propter Abnerum, ita ut Abnerus oculis, menti obversetur (den Abn. im Auge habend, hinsichtlich d. Abn.)" Non placet. Contextus orationis, nisi me omnia fallunt, postulat: et plangite Abnerum i. e. funus Abneri præcedentes, cf. quæ proxime sequuntur וְסָפְדוּ לְכִנֵּי אֲבִנֵּר, cf. etiam vs. 32. Erit autem in notione præ, ante eo magis acquiescendum, quod אֲבִנֵּר alias nunquam propter significat.

ver. 34. מ' נ' 3

33 καὶ ἐθρήνησεν ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐπὶ Ἀβεννήρ, καὶ εἶπεν, Εἰ κατὰ τὸν θάνατον νάβαλ ἀποθανεῖται Ἀβεννήρ; 34 αἱ χεῖρές σου οὐκ ἐδέθησαν, οἱ πόδες σου οὐκ ἐν πέδαις· οὐ προσήγαγεν ὡς νάβαλ, ἐνώπιον υἱῶν ἀδικίας ἔπρασας. καὶ συνήχη πᾶς ὁ λαὸς τοῦ κλαῦσαι αὐτόν.

Au. Ver.—33 And the king lamented over Abner, and said, Died Abner as a fool dieth?

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before wicked men [Heb., children of iniquity], so fellest thou. And all the people wept again over him.

Ged., Booth.—As a criminal.

Pool.—33 As a fool, i.e., as a wicked man; for such are oft called fools in Scripture. Was he cut off by the hands of justice for his crimes? Nothing less; but by Joab's malice and treachery. Or did he die by his own folly, because he had not wisdom or courage to defend himself? Ah no. The words may be thus rendered: Shall or should Abner die like a fool, or a vile, contemptible person? i.e., unregarded, unpitied, unrevenged; as fools or vile persons die, for whose death none are concerned. Or, How is Abner dead like a fool! pitying his mischance. It being honourable for a great man and a soldier to fight, if met with by an enemy, and not (having his arms at liberty) stand still like a fool to be killed, without making any resistance or defence; which, by this treachery of Joab, happened to be his case.

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters; thou didst not tamely yield up thyself to Joab, as his prisoner, to be bound hand and foot at his pleasure. Joab did not overcome thee generously and honourably in an equal combat, nor durst he attempt thee in that way, as a general or soldier of any worth would have done. Before wicked men; or, before, i.e., in the presence or by the hands of froward, or perverse, or crooked men, by hypocrisy and perfidiously, whereby the vilest coward may kill the most valiant person. Thus he reproached Joab to his very face, before all the people; which was a great evidence of his own innocence herein; because otherwise Joab, being so powerful, and proud, and petulant to his sovereign, would never have taken the shame and blame of it wholly to himself, as he did.

Bp. Patrick.—33 Josephus looks upon what follows as a kind of epitaph upon Abner, whom David buried magnificently, as he speaks, Θάψας δ' αὐτὸν μεγαλοπρεπῶς καὶ ἐπιταφίους συγγραψάμενος θρήνους, &c. By a fool in Scripture is often meant a wicked man, a malefactor; and so the sense, according to this translation is, Did he die by the hand of justice, for some notorious crime committed by him? Or, Did he die by his own folly? No such matter. But the words may be translated out of the Hebrew, "How like a fool died Abner?" Or, "Should Abner have died like a fool?" That is, what a pity is it, that such a valiant man should die on this fashion! By treachery, without any power to defend himself.

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters.] He was not a prisoner, but had both hands and feet at liberty, and yet could make no use of them for his own preservation. Victorinus Strigelius thinks that David, in these words, distinguishes him from those criminals, whose hands being tied behind them, are carried to execution; and from those idle soldiers, who, being taken captive in war, have fetters clapped upon their legs, to keep them from running away. He was none of these; neither a notorious offender, nor a coward: but perfidiously murdered by one in seeming friendship with him. But the plain meaning seems to be, that if his enemy had set upon him openly, he had been able to make his part good with him.

As a man falleth before wicked men.] That is, before a secret murderer.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—

Died Abner, &c.

Or thus:

Shall Abner die

A death like to a villain's?

Thy hands not bound,

Nor were the fetters to thy feet applied.

Like as one falls before the sons of guilt,

So hast thou fallen!

He was not taken away by the hand of justice, nor in battle, nor by accident: he died the death of a culprit by falling into the hands of a villain.

This song was a heavy reproof to Joab; and must have galled him exceedingly, being sung by all the people.

Houb.—33 הכסח נבל, An sicut ignavus moritur. Habet interrogacionem cum admiratione conjunctam. Miratur et conqueritur David, hominem fortem cecidisse inultum. Nam eum Joab interfecerat per insidias et nihil tale metuentem. Itaque aberrant, qui per interrogationem sine admiratione convertunt, an, ut moritur stultus, mortuus est Abner, quod fecit Clericus.

34 כנשל, barbare, pro כנל, sicut cadit. Melioris notæ codices habent כנל, sine י; melius, כנל, sicut cadunt.

Ver. 36.

וַיִּיטָב בְּעֵינֵיהֶם כָּל־אִשְׂרָאֵל
הַמֶּלֶךְ בְּעֵינֵי כָל־הָעָם טוֹב :

— και ἡρεσεν ἐνώπιον αὐτῶν πάντα ὅσα ἐποίησεν ὁ βασιλεὺς ἐνώπιον τοῦ λαοῦ.

Au. Ver.—36 And all the people took notice of it, and it pleased [Heb., was good in their eyes] them: as whatsoever the king did pleased all the people.

As whatsoever, &c.

Houb.—כנל. Lege יכל, vel כל, sine nexu. Alterum hic membrum inchoatur, ut monet punctum Athnac, quod præfixum est. Si relinquitur כנל, hæc dicentur: et placuit in oculis eorum, secundum omne quod fecit rex in oculis eorum bonum, quæ non sunt Hebraica, ut nec Latina. Veteres hæc vitabant, et a mendo, ut quisque voluit, declinabant: vide Polyglotta.

Ver. 39.

וְאֵלֵי תָיוֹם רָחַ וּמִשְׁתָּה קֶלֶךְ
וְהַאֲנָשִׁים תֵּאֱלָה בְּנֵי צִרְיָהָ הָשִׁים מִמֶּנִּי וּבִי

και οτι ἐγώ εἰμι συγγενὴς σήμερον, και καθεστამένος ὑπὸ βασιλέως; οἱ δὲ ἄνδρες οὗτοι υἱοὶ Σαρουίας σκληρότεροί μου εἰσίν κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—39 And I am this day weak, though anointed king; and these men the sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the Lord shall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedness.

Pool.—Weak, or tender, in the infancy of my kingdom, not well rooted and settled in it. The metaphor is taken from a young and tender child or plant. Too hard for me, i. e., too powerful.

Though anointed king.

Bp. Patrick.—Though anointed king.] Or, as the words may be translated, "and anointed king." That is, not born to a kingdom, but newly called to it, without any hereditary right to the authority; which made it more slender, than if it had been of long standing. This seems to have been the reason why he did not punish Joab for this murder, because he himself was not well established.

Houb.—39 Ego vero adhuc sum rex humilis ac infirmus.

Qui convertunt משה, unctus [sic Dathe, Lee, &c.] non cogitant unctum regem esse משה, non משה.

CHAP. IV. 1.

Au. Ver.—1 And when Saul's son heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble, and all the Israelites were troubled.

Ged., Booth.—1 And when Ishbosheth [LXX, Syr., Arab., Vulg.], the son of Saul, heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, he was discouraged, and all the Israelites were in a state of confusion. (4) For, though Jonathan, Saul's son, had a son, he was lame of his feet. He was but five years old when the tidings came of the death of Saul and Jonathan from Jezreel, and his nurse took him up and fled: and in the hurry of her flight, he fell, and became lame. And his name was Mephibosheth.

4 And all the Israelites, &c. They had now lost Abner; Ishbosheth was a weak pusillanimous prince; and the son of Jonathan, the next hope of the royal family, was lame. The fourth verse, which mentions this circumstance, comes, therefore, naturally in here; which it does not after ver. 3; as every common reader must perceive.—Ged.

Ver. 2, 3.

Au. Ver.—10 When one told me, saying, Behold, Saul is dead, thinking to have that I would have given him a reward for his tidings [or, which was the reward I gave him for his tidings]:

Au. Ver.—3 So all the elders of Israel came to the king to Hebron; and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the LORD: and they anointed David king over Israel.

Before the Lord; either, 1. Before the ark, which might be here, though that be not mentioned in this place. Or, 2. Before the priest clothed with the ephod; whereby he was in a manner put into God's presence. Or rather, 3. In the congregation of the mighty, or magistrates, where God used to be present, Psalm lxxxii. 1; in the public assembly now met together in God's name and fear, and as in his presence, to call upon him, to appeal to him as the witness and judge of their transactions. Compare Judg. xi. 11; 1 Sam. xxiii. 18.

Bp. Patrick.—Before the Lord:] The ark of God's presence was not in Hebron; and therefore it is a question how it could be said, that he made a league before the Lord. But see what I have said of this, Judg. xx. 1. [Judg. xx. 1, As for that phrase, unto the Lord, it is no argument that either the ark was here, or so much as a place of prayer; for where all the people of God were assembled in any place, there God was in a special manner present; as when they all assembled to make David their king, it is said, he made a league with them "in Hebron before the Lord," though there was no ark nor altar there (2 Sam. v. 3).]

Au. Ver.—6 And the king and his men went to Jerusalem unto the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land: which spake unto David, saying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither: thinking [or, saying, David shall not, &c.], David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheless David took the stronghold of Zion: the same is the city of David.

8 And David said on that day, Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, he shall be chief and captain. Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house [or, because they had said, Even the blind and the lame, he shall not come into the house].

Pool.—6 Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither; or, Thou shalt not come in hither, but the blind and the lame shall remove or hinder thee. By the blind and the lame they understand, either, 1. Their own people; and so they imply that the place was so impregnable, that a few blind and lame men were able to defend it against all David's assaults. And these may be called and were the hated of David's soul, ver. 8, not because they were blind and lame, but because they were Jebusites, a people hated and accursed by God: and the Jebusites of this place were more hateful to him than the rest of that nation; partly because they possessed this place, which David knew was designed for the one and only place of God's solemn worship; and partly because they did so wickedly and insolently defy the armies of Israel, and consequently, the God of Israel. Or, 2. Their gods or images; which, after the manner of the heathens, they worshipped as their tutelary gods, and placed in their gates and walls. These they call blind and lame sarcastically, and with respect to David's opinion; as if they said, These gods of ours, whom you Israelites reproach, as blind and lame, Psal. cxv. 5, 6, and so unable to direct and protect us, they will defend us against you; and you will find they are neither blind nor lame, but have eyes to watch for us, and hands to fight against you; and you must conquer them before you can take our city. And these may well be called the hated of David's soul. But I prefer the former sense, as being most easy, and natural, and proper; whereas the latter is metaphorical, and seems doubtful and forced. David cannot come in hither; concluding their fort to be impregnable.

7 The stronghold of Zion; either, 1. A very strong fort which they had built upon Mount Zion; which being taken, the city quickly yielded. Or, 2. The city of Zion, which was very strongly fortified.

8 Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, i.e., whosoever scaleth the fort, or getteth up to the top of it, where the gutter was. And the lame and the blind, or even, or especially (for the Hebrew particle vau signifies both ways) the lame and the blind; i.e., those of them who are set to defend that place; who, as they pretend, should be only the lame and the blind. Others understand it of their idols or images. But they could not properly be said to be smitten, i.e., killed; as that word is used here, and elsewhere. That are hated of David's soul: this belongs to the Jebusite, and the lame and the blind; and it is explained in ver. 6. He shall be chief and captain: these words are fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 6, where they are expressed; and they must needs be understood to make the sense complete. And such ellipses or defects of a part of the sentence are usual in promises, and oaths, and conditional offers, such as this was. Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house, i.e., whence it became a proverb, or a common saying, used by David and others upon this occasion. Or otherwise, The blind and the lame Jebusites were set to keep the house, i.e., the fort of Zion; and to keep others from coming into it; but now they are shut out of it, and none of them, to wit, either, 1. Of the Jebusites; or, 2. Of blind and lame persons, shall be admitted to come into it again; which David might resolve, and ordain, to keep up the memory of this great exploit, and of the insolent carriage of the Jebusites, and their unhappy success. Or, the blind and the lame shall not come into my house, to wit, into the king's palace. And although this might be a general rule and decree of David's, yet he might dispense with it in some special cases, as in that of Mephibosheth. But it is not necessary that this should be a proverb; for the words may be thus rendered, as it is in the margin of our Bible, Because they had said, Even the blind and the lame, He (i.e., David) shall not come into the house; or, Because they (i.e., the Jebusites) had said, The blind and the lame shall hinder him; (which words are easily supplied out of ver. 6, where having spoken of this more largely, it was sufficient here to mention the most emphatical words, as is usual in such cases); he shall not come into the house, or hither, as they say, ver. 6, i.e., into the fort; for the word house is used very largely and generally in the Hebrew language, for any place, as Judg. xvi. 21.

Bp. Patrick.—6 The inhabitants of the land:] That is, of that part of the land (Josh. xv. 63), Judg. i. 21, xix. 10, 11).

Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou shalt not come in hither:] They imagined their fortress to be so impregnable, that by way of contempt and scorn they told him, the blind and the lame were able to defend it against him and all his forces. So Bochartus translates these words, non huc accedes, &c. "thou shalt not come up hither, but the blind and the lame will drive thee away;" i.e. the most feeble and cowardly among us. Which he thinks is so plain a sense, that he wonders men of great learning should seek for any other (lib. iv. Phaleg. cap. 36). But so it is, a great many, by "the blind and the lame," understand the images of their gods (particularly our learned Gregory hath a whole dissertation about it). As if they had said, Our gods, whom ye call blind and lame, that have eyes and see not, feet and walk not (as it is

Psalm cxv., they shall defend us : and you must overcome them before you overcome us. Luther himself thus explains the sense :—" These blind and lame (saith he) were the idols of the Jebusites ; which, to irritate David, they set upon their walls as their patrons and defenders ; and they did as good as say, Thou dost not fight with us, but with our gods, who will easily repel thee."

8 Whosoever getteth up to the gutter, and smiteth the Jebusites, &c.] i. e., "Cuts off their pipes of water," or their cisterns into which the waters fell; for the Hebrew word tzinnor, which we translate gutter, is nowhere found but in this place, and in Ps. xlii. 7, and by St. Jerome is translated fistulæ. But I know not how we come to transpose the words, "he that smiteth the Jebusites," behind the other, which in the Hebrew are first. "He that smiteth the Jebusites, let him throw down into the ditch (which was by the wall) both the blind and the lame, which David extremely hates." Thus Bochart translates the words in the place above named, which, if it be admitted, there is no need to add those words (out of 1 Chron. xi. 6) to make out the sense, "he shall be chief and captain;" for the sense is complete without them.

Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house.] Or, as it is in the margin, "Because they had said, even the blind and the lame, He shall not come into the house." That is, because they had taunted him with the blind and lame, as if they could defend the fort, and hinder him from coming into it; therefore he was highly provoked to wish they might be thrown down headlong from their walls into the ditch. And then by the house is meant, neither the house of David, nor the house of the Lord (as many take it), but that very fort wherein the Jebusites had dwelt; from which hereafter they were excluded. And indeed it is a very large word in the Hebrew, signifying any place.

The reason of placing this whole sentence together being obvious, let us proceed to consider the several parts of it in the two chapters. The words ישיב ידו, which are not in the original of Samuel, are not in the Vat. copy of the LXX in Chronicles; but the Alex. translates regularly according to the present Hebrew text. In Samuel there is a clause or two in the speech of the Jebusites, which is omitted in Chronicles for brevity; as the history in Chronicles is regular, and the sense complete without it. But though the history be regular and very intelligible in Chronicles, yet the additional clauses in Samuel make the history there remarkably perplexed; and (as Dr. Delany observes) encumber it with more difficulties than are ordinarily to be met with. In full proportion to the difficulties has been the number of different interpretations; and yet there seems to be very sufficient room for offering another interpretation, in some material points differing from them all. The words in Samuel, so far as the text in Chronicles coincides, are clear and determinate in their meaning, "And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither." But the succeeding words in Samuel are very difficult; or, at least, have been variously interpreted. The present English translation is, "Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thinking David cannot come in hither."

The chief difficulty here lies in determining who are these blind and lame; whether Jebusites, or the Jebusite Deities called blind and lame by way of derision. The latter opinion has been maintained by some considerable writers; but yet seems indefensible. For however David and the Israelites might be disposed to treat such idols with scorn and contempt, 'tis not at all likely the Jebusites should revile their own Deities; and we must remember, that these Deities are supposed to be here called blind and lame by the Jebusites themselves. But, admitting them to be idol Deities, what meaning can there be in the Jebusites telling David, "he should not come into the citadel, unless he took away the Deities upon the walls?" If he could scale the walls, so as to reach these guardian Deities, he need not ask leave of the Jebusites to enter the citadel. But (which is much more difficult to be answered) what can possibly be the meaning of the last line, "Wherefore they said, The blind and the lame shall not come into the house?" For, who said? Did the Jebusites say, their own Deities (before expressed by the blind and lame) should not come into the house, should not (according to some) come where they were, or, should not (according to others) come into the house of the Lord? Or, could these Deities say, David and his men should not come into the house? The absurdity of attributing such a speech, or any speech to these Idols, is too clear to need illustration.

But, though these Deities could not denounce these words, yet the Jebusites might; and 'tis possible (it has been said) that the blind and the lame in this latter part of the sentence may signify the Jebusites; not any particular Jebusites so maimed; but the Jebusites in general, called blind and lame, for putting their trust in blind and lame idols. This seems too refined an interpretation; and we may safely conclude that the same expression of the blind and lame means the same beings in the two different parts of the same sentence. It has been farther observed, that these blind and lame are here spoken of as different from the Jebusites, "Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites, and the lame and the blind;" and if they were different, it requires no great skill at deduction to determine they were not the same.

Perhaps then these blind and lame were, in fact, a few particular wretches, who laboured under these infirmities of blindness and lameness; and therefore were different from the general body of the Jebusites. But here it will be demanded at once, how we can then account rationally for that bitterness, with which David expresses himself here against these blind and lame; and how it was possible for a man of David's humanity to detest men for mere unblameable, and indeed pitiable, infirmities? And lastly, the authors of the "Universal History," in their note on this transaction, mention the following as the first plausible argument against the literal acceptation; how could David distinguish the halt, or the lame, or the blind, from able men, when posted upon lofty walls; since those infirmities are not discernible but near at hand? This, it must be allowed, would be a difficulty indeed, if David's information here had been only from his eye-sight. But this objection immediately vanishes, when we reflect that the Jebusites are said in the text to have told David, "the blind and the lame should keep him off;" for certainly David could easily conceive the men who were placed upon the walls to insult him were "blind and lame," when he was told so by the Jebusites themselves, and told so, to render this insult of theirs the greater.

Having thus mentioned some of the present interpretations, it may be now proper to submit another to the judgment of the learned reader. And here, for the sake of clearness, I shall first give what seems to be the true interpretation of this passage; and then subjoin the several arguments in defence of it.

"And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither: for the blind and the lame shall keep thee off, by saying, David shall not come hither. But David took the strong hold of Sion, which is the city of David. And David said on that day, Whosoever (first) smiteth the Jebusites, and through the subterraneous passage reacheth the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's soul, because the blind and the lame continued to say, He shall not come into this house shall be chief captain."

That the connected particles כי אם signify for in this place is evident, because the words following are rather causal than objective, and we have several instances of this sense of the two particles given us by Noldius: thus Prov. xxiii. 18, they are rendered for in the English translation; and so in the English, Greek, Syriac and Arabic versions of Lam. v. 22. That the verb יָסִיד is not here the infinitive, but the preter of Hiphil, is apparent from the sense; that it has been so considered is certain, from the Masoret pointing, as De Dieu and other critics have observed; and we see it is translated as such by the LXX, in the plural number, αυτοισι. From this version then, and from the plurality of the two nouns, which are necessarily the nominatives to this verb, we may infer, that it was originally יָסִידוּ, the vau having been dropped here as in many other places. Thus Gen. i. 28, we have וַיְבָרֶכְהוּ (et sub-jicite eam) instead of וַיְבָרֶכְהָ—twice in the verb וַיְשַׁבְּחוּ (regularly וַיְשַׁבְּחוּ reputavimus eum) in the 3d and 4th verses of the 53d of Isaiah; in this very 7th verse, in the word וַיְבָרֶכְהוּ, which should be וַיְבָרֶכְהָ, as it is in the 9th and other adjoining verses, and this vau is also omitted in the 9th verse in וַיְשַׁבְּחוּ, which we are told in the margin should be וַיְשַׁבְּחָהּ, where the yod has also been corrupted into a vau. Enough having been said of the number, let us now consider the tense of this verb; which being preter, some have translated it by a word expressive of time past. But the sense necessarily requires it to be translated as future in other languages, though it be more expressive in the original in the preter tense: it being agreeable to the genius of the Hebrew language frequently to speak of events yet future, as having actually happened, when the speaker would strongly express the certainly of such event. This observation is peculiarly applicable to the case here. For this castle of Mount Sion had never yet been taken by the Israelites, though they had dwelt in Canaan about 400 years; as we learn from the sacred History, Joshua xv. 63; Judg. i. 21; xix. 10; and from Josephus, lib. vii., cap. 3.

The Jebusites then, absolutely depending on the advantage of their high situation and the strength of their fortification (which had secured them against the Israelites so many hundred years) looked upon this of David's as a vain attempt, which therefore they might safely treat with insolence and raillery. Full of this fond notion, they placed upon the walls of the citadel the few blind and lame that could be found amongst them; and told David, "he should not come thither; for the blind and the lame were sufficient to keep him off;" which they (these weak defenders) should effectually do, only by their shouting הִנֵּה יְהוָה עִמָּךְ, David shall not come hither, No David shall come hither, &c.

That the blind and the lame were contemptuously placed upon the walls by the Jebusites, as before described, we are assured not only by the words of the sacred history before us, but also by the concurrent testimony of Josephus in the following words, "τους πενηρωμενους τας οφεις και τας βασεις και παν το λελωβημενον σθησαντων επι χλευη του βασιλεως επι του τειχους, και λεγουτων κωλευει αυτον εισελθειν τους αναπηρους, ταυτα δε επραττον καταφρονουντες τη των τειχων οχυροτητι."—Lib. vii. cap. 3. Now that these blind and lame, who appear to have been placed upon the walls, were to insult, and did insult David in the manner before-mentioned, seems very evident from the words, "the blind and the lame shall keep thee off;" by saying, &c., and also from the impossibility of otherwise accounting for David's indignation against these (naturally pitiable) wretches. And the not attending to this remarkable circumstance seems one principal reason of the perplexity so visible among the various interpreters of this passage.

It is very remarkable, that the sense before given to כִּי אֵם הָעִוְרִים, For the blind and the lame shall keep thee off, is confirmed by Josephus, who, in the words just cited from him, has "κωλευει αυτον εισελθειν τους αναπηρους." And it is farther remarkable, that the same sense is given to these words in the English Bible of Coverdale, printed in 1535, in which they are rendered, Thou shalt not come hither, but the blinde and lame shal dryde the streete. This is one great instance to prove the credit due to some parts of this very old English version; as the sense of this passage seems to have been greatly mistaken both before and since. That it has been changed for the worse since that edition is very evident; and that it was improperly rendered before appears from Wickliffe's MS. Version of 1383, where we read, Thou shalt not enter hithur: no but thou do amey bynd wen and lame, &c.

After this additional clause of Samuel in the speech of the Jebusites, the two histories agree in saying, "David took the strong hold of Zion, which was afterwards called the city of David." By this strong hold of Zion, or city of David, we are led by the words of the text to understand, not the fortress or citadel (which was not yet taken, as appears from the order of the history in both chapters), but the town of the Jebusites, or City of David, which was spread over the wide hill of Zion: and is what Josephus means, when he tells us, David first took the lower town, την κατω πολιν, the town which lay beneath the citadel; after which he tells us, that the citadel yet remained to be taken, ετι δε της Ακρας λειπομενης.—Lib. vii. cap. 3.

The two chapters having agreed in this last circumstance of David's making himself master of the town or city, they now vary as before; and here also the history in Chronicles is regular, though it takes no notice of some farther circumstances relating to the blind and lame: and indeed these latter circumstances were to be omitted of course, as the historian chose for brevity to omit the former. But as to Samuel, there is in that book a deficiency of several words, which are necessary to complete the sense; which words are preserved in the text of Chronicles. And as the difficulty here also lies entirely in the text of Samuel, let us see whether it may not be cleared up to satisfaction.

David, having now possessed himself of the strong town of the Jebusites situate upon the hill of Zion, proceeds, ביום ההוא, the same day, to attack the citadel or fortress; which was considered by the Jebusites as impregnable. And probably the Israelites would have thought it so too, and David had retired from before it, like his forefathers; if he had not possessed himself of it by stratagem, when he found he could not storm or take it by open force. For this seems in fact to have been the case; and the history of this success may be properly introduced by a similar case or two.

And first, Dr. Prideaux (in his "Connexion," part 1, book 2) tells us of the city of Babylon, that, when it was besieged by Cyrus, the inhabitants thinking themselves secure in their walls and their stores, looked on the taking of the city by a siege as an impracticable thing; and therefore from the top of their walls scoffed at Cyrus, and derided him for every thing he did towards it. (A circumstance most exactly parallel to that of the history before us.) But yet, that Cyrus broke down the great bank or dam of the river, both where it ran into the city, and where it came out; and as soon as the channel of the river was drained, in the middle of the night, while Belshazzar was carousing at the conclusion of an annual festival, the troops of Cyrus entered through these passages in two parties, and took the city by surprise.

And there is a second remarkable case related by Polybius, which will farther illustrate the present history; and was communicated to me by a learned friend. "Rabatamana," says Polybius, "a city of Arabia, could not be taken, till one of the prisoners showed the besiegers (τον Ὑπονομον, δι' οὗ κατεβαλλον ἐπὶ τὴν ὕδρειαν οἱ πολιορκούμενοι) a subterraneous passage, through which the besieged came down for water." Ed. Casaubon, 8vo., vol. i., p. 578.

Now this fortress of the Jebusites seems to have been circumstanced like Rabatamana; in having also a subterraneous passage, which is called in the original חֲזָז, a word, which occurs but once more in the Bible, and does not seem commonly understood in this place. The English version calls it the gutter, the Vulgate, fistulas; Vatablus, canales; Jun. and Trem., emisarium; Poole, tubus aquæ; and Bochart, alveus, &c. But, not to multiply quotations, most interpreters agree in making the word signify something hollow, and in applying it to water: just the case of the ὕπονομος of Rabatamana; a subterraneous passage, or great hollow, through which men could pass and repass for water. That this חֲזָז in the text was such an underground passage might be strongly presumed from the text itself; but it is proved to have been so by Josephus. For, speaking of this very transaction, he says, "ἐπὶ δὲ τῆς Ἀκρας λειπομένης, βασιλεὺς τῷ ΔΙΑ ΤΩΝ ΥΠΟ-ΚΕΙΜΕΝΩΝ ΦΑΡΑΓΓΩΝ ἐπὶ τὴν Ἀκραν ἀναβάντι, καὶ ταύτην ἐλόντι, στρατηγίαν ἀπάντος τοῦ λαοῦ δώσειν ἐπηγγέλτατο, &c."—Lib. vii. cap. 3. Here then we have ὑποκειμενὰ φαραγγες (the subterraneous cavities) most remarkably answering to the ὕπονομος and חֲזָז; and putting this interpretation upon a very solid footing. I shall only add upon this point, that the true sense of the obscure word חֲזָז in this place remarkably occurs in the commentary of Hugo de Vienna before-mentioned; where it is explained by "Cuniculos subterraneos, per quos erat ascensus usque ad tecta."

That the preposition ἵ prefixed to חֲזָז sometimes signifies per, is evident from Noldius; and that it signifies so in this place is certain from the nature of the context, and the testimony of Josephus, who (as we have seen) expresses it by δια. The verb ἵσταν in this sentence is very properly future; as Hebrew verbs in that tense are known to be frequentative, or to express the continuance of doing any thing; and therefore that tense is with great propriety used here to express the frequent repetition of the insolent speech used by the blind and the lame upon the walls of the fortress.

It only remains here to make an observation or two on the reward proposed by David, and the person who obtained it. The text of Chronicles tells us, David said, "Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first, shall be chief and captain," or head and prince. We are to recollect that Joab the son of Zeruiah (David's sister) had been general of his army during the civil war between the men of Judah, under David, and the Israelites commanded by Abner in favour of Ishbosheth the son of Saul: but that the Israelites having now submitted to David, he was king over the whole twelve tribes. David, we know, frequently endeavoured to remove Joab from his command of the army, on account of his haughtiness and for several murders, but complained that this son of Zeruiah was too hard for him. One of these attempts of David's seems to have been made at the time Israel came in to David, by the persuasion of Abner; when it is probable the condition on Abner's side was to have been made David's captain-general: and perhaps Joab suspected so much, and therefore murdered him. The next attempt seems to have been made at the taking this strong citadel of the Jebusites. For David proposes the reward absolutely to every officer of his army; "Whoever smiteth the Jebusites first," i. e., whosoever will ascend first, put himself at the head of a detachment, and march up through the subterraneous passage into the citadel, "shall be head and captain."

This proposal, we may observe, was general; and yet, how much soever David might wish Joab safely removed, it is reasonable to think that he made Joab the first offer. And, we find, that however dangerous and dreadful this enterprise appeared, yet Joab had prudence enough to undertake it, and courage enough to execute it: וַיֵּלֶךְ בְּרִישָׁתָהּ "and Joab went up first," or at the head of a party, and was accordingly declared head, or chief-captain, or (in the modern style) captain-general of the united armies of Israel and Judah.

It is not unlikely that the men of Israel expected that though Abner their general had been basely murdered by Joab, yet David's chief-captain should be chosen from amongst them, or at least they should have a chance for that first post of honour, as well as the men of Judah. And if they had declared any expectation of this kind, David seems to have taken the wisest step for determining so important a point, by declaring, that neither relation, nor fortune, nor friendship should recommend upon the occasion; but, that as the bravest man and the best soldier ought to be commander-in-chief, so this honour should be the reward of the greatest merit; that there was now a fair opportunity of signalizing themselves in the taking this important fortress; and, therefore, his resolution was, that "whosoever would head" a detachment up this subterraneous passage, and should first make himself master of the citadel, by that passage, or by scaling the walls, or by any other method, should be head and captain, i. e., captain-general.

It is remarkable, that the text* in Samuel is very incomplete in this place: David's proposal to the army is just begun, and a circumstance or two mentioned; but the reward proposed, and the person rewarded, are totally omitted. We may presume the text could not have been thus imperfect originally, since no ellipsis can supply what is here wanting; and therefore the words in the coinciding chapter of Chronicles which regularly fill up this omission, were doubtless at first also in Samuel, and are therefore to be restored. The necessity of thus restoring the words not found in the present copies of Samuel is apparent; and we may add, that St. Jerome (in his "Quæstiones seu Traditiones Hebraicæ in lib. Regum") tells us, "Subauditur quod liber paralipomenon declarat, hoc modo dicens, erit princeps et dux: ascendit igitur primus Joab, filius Saruizæ, et factus est princeps."

The English version then of these texts in Chronicles is, And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, Thou shalt not come hither. But David took the strong hold of Zion, which is the city of David. And David said, Whosoever first smiteth the Jebusites, shall be head and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went up first, and was chief-captain. And the English version of these texts in Samuel is, And they spake unto David, saying, Thou shalt not come hither; for the blind and the lame shall keep thee off, by saying, David shall not come hither. But David took the strong hold of Zion, which is the city of David. And David said on that day, Whosoever (first) smiteth the Jebusites, and through the subterraneous passages reacheth the blind and the lame, which are hated of David's soul, because the blind and the lame continued to say, He shall not come into this house—shall be head and captain. So Joab the son of Zeruiah went up first, and was head, or captain-general.

Parkhurst [who is followed by Bishop Horsley].—צִנּוֹר An aqueduct, drain, or subterraneous passage for water, "Tubus per quem aqua in declive fertur, puta ex monte vel ex tecto." Bochart. occ. 2 Sam. v. 8; where Vulg., fistulas, pipes, French transl., le canal, and Eng., the gutter. Ver. 6 And the king and his men went to Jerusalem, to the Jebusite, the inhabitant of the land; and he (the Jebusite) spake to David, saying, Thou shalt not come in hither (כִּי אִם הָיִיד), except thou remove the blind and the lame (with whom I suppose they had, in bravado and contempt of David and his men, manned their walls) to declare, or meaning, David shall not come in hither. 7 Nevertheless David took the strong hold of Zion, the same is the city of David. 8 And, or, For David said on that day (in which he took it, namely), Let every one smite, or (be) smiting the Jebusite, and let him reach by, or through the subterraneous passage both the lame and the blind, who hate the person of David; because they said, The blind and lame (man, sing.) shall not come into the house or castle. Thus have I endeavoured fairly to construe this very difficult passage just as it stands in Forster's Hebrew Bible, without presuming either to make the least alteration in the text, or to transpose the words of it, and add an extraordinary supplement, as in our common translation; and on the 8th verse I desire it may be particularly observed, that the lame and the blind, i.e., the invalids who manned the walls, are said to be those שָׁמַיִם (who) hated (שָׂנְאוּ being understood before the verb שָׂמַיִם, as usual; or if with Walton's and the Complutensian Bible, and with twelve of Dr. Kennicott's Codices, we read שָׂנְאוּ, hating, the sense will be exactly the same, without any supplement at all) שָׁמַיִם, the person of David, כִּי, because they said, The blind and the lame (sing.) shall not come in hither; which if it does not absolutely prove, makes it at least highly probable that David himself was become lame, and had his sight affected, or perhaps had lost an eye by the severe hardships he had undergone, or by the wounds he had received in frequent engagements in which he had been concerned; and this personal insult on the king by the invalids well accounts for his commanding them in particular to be attacked. There are several other instances in history, both ancient and modern, of cities or fortresses being taken by the enemy's entering through subterranean passages. Thus, "all parts of Naples are copiously supplied with water by an ancient aqueduct, which has more than overbalanced its services by affording a passage for besiegers to enter the city: through it Belisarius introduced soldiers that surprised the Gothic garrison; Alphon-sus the first repeated the stratagem with success." 2d vol. of "Swinburne's Travels in the Two Sicilies," in "Annual Register" for 1784-5, Account of Books, p. 176. In "Macpherson's History of Great Britain," vol. i., p. 407, we are told "some were appointed to seize the castle of Stirling by an old gutter or sally-port toward Ballangwith, where no sentinels were ever placed." So our King Edward III. entered the castle of Nottingham, through a subterraneous passage, which is still to be seen, and surprised his mother and Mortimer. See "Rapin's History of England, by Tindal," vol. i., p. 413, fol., and "Taylor's Concordance."

Gesen.—צֶטֶר m. (ר. צֶטֶר) a cataract, water-fall, so called from its rushing sound, Ps. xlii. 8; a water-course, 2 Sam. v. 8. Chald. id.

Ged.—(6) Now when king David [LXX, Syr., Arab., and two MSS.] and his men went unto Jerusalem against the Jebusites, the ancient inhabitants of the land; these, thinking that David could not get in, accosted him thus: "In hither thou shalt not come, unless thou canst remove the sentinels and patrols." (7) David, nevertheless, took the citadel of Zion; which is still called the city of David. (8) For, that day, David said: "Whosoever shall the first, [supplied from p. p. 1 Chron. xi. 6,] reach the summit of the citadel, and smite the Jebusite sentinels and patrols, who hold David in such contempt," (because the sentinels and patrols had said: "In hither thou shalt not come,") "he shall be chief-captain." So Joab, being the first who went up, was made chief-captain [supplied from p. p. 1 Chron. xi. 6].

6—8. Sentinels and patrols. This I take to be the true meaning of the words commonly rendered the blind, and the lame. The rest of the passage, which is confessedly very difficult, I have endeavoured to make intelligible, by inserting the necessary supplements from Chronicles, where the same history is told in a clear though more concise manner.

Booth.—6 And the king and his men went to Jerusalem against the Jebusites, the inhabitants of the land; and they said, Thou canst not come in hither, unless thou canst remove the sentinels and patrols, thinking David could not come in thither. 7 Nevertheless, David took the citadel of Zion, which is now called the city of David. 8 For David said on that day, Whosoever first smiteth the Jebusites, and through the secret passage reacheth the sentinels and patrols, who detest the person of David, (because the sentinels and patrols had said, Into this house he shall not come,) he shall be chief-captain [1 Chron. xi. 6]. So Joab, being the first who went up, was made chief-captain [1 Chron. xi. 6].

Houb.—6 Postea rex cum suis venit Jerusalem ad Jebusæos, qui in terra habitabant. Illi ei hæc dicebant; non huc intrabis, nisi abstuleris cæcos et claudos: quibus verbis hoc significabant, David huc non intrabit. 7 Nichilominus David arcem Sion expugnavit, quæ nunc est urbs David. 8 Eodem autem die David tale mandatum fecerat: quisquis Jebusæum cæsurus est, irrual cum pugione in claudos et in cæcos, qui oderunt animam David: propterea hoc proverbium est; cæcus et claudus non intrabit domum.

6, 8, וְכִי אִם הַסֵּךְ הַזֶּה הָעִרְסָה הַסֵּכָה, Nisi abstuleris cæcos et claudos. Quoniam postea explicatur, quid dicere vellent Jebusæi, hoc ipso intelligitur, id eos in proverbio dixisse; non igitur intelligendum esse, ipsos cæcos et claudos, qui erant in Jerusalem, esse in mœnibus pugnatos, et Davidi cum eis esse decertandum. Enimvero nec cæci, nec claudi, milites esse solent. Sed Jebusæi sic dicere videbantur, priusquam David urbem caperet, abducendos ei esse captivos cæcos et claudos, qui media in urbe erant, quique a militibus circum mœnia fuis protegebantur; quod quia fieri non poterat, nisi capta urbe, opportune subiungitur, Philistæos perinde dixisse, atque tu urbem non capies. Postea autem David jubet ut sui irruant... in cæcos et claudos, qui oderunt (שָׂנִי, qui oderunt, ut Masora emendat, שָׂנִי) animam David. Quo ipso docemur nec Davidem intellexisse, cum hæc diceret, ipsos cæcos et claudos: neque enim isti plus cæteris Jebusæis Davidem oderant; sed Davidem per contemptum nominare Jebusæos cæcos et claudos, quia illi ipsi Jebusæi milites, qui hæc loquebantur, futuri erant instar cæcorum et claudorum, ut pote ex urbe mox eripiendi, nec aliis armis, quam pugione, debellandi; sic tanquam cæci, qui hostem appropinquantem cum non videant, pugione facile occiduntur, aut tanquam claudi, qui hostem insequentem fugere cum non possint, evitare non queunt non modo tela et sagittas, sed neque ipsum pugionem. Sic interpretamur צָנַר, ut fecere Græci Intt. qui παραξίφιδι, pugione; deinde הַסֵּכָה אִם, claudos, non tamen... Clericus merito admiratur Samuelem Bochartum, qui hæc intelligere se crediderit, et per fas et nefas converterit; cujus quidem Bocharti interpretatio non tanti est, ut eam hic exponamus. Sed nos admiramur ipsum Clericum, qui cæcos et claudos intellexerit Deorum Jebusæorum esse statuas, quia Jebusæi imitarentur sermonem Hebræorum, qui Diis Jebusæorum dicebant esse oculos, nec tamen eos videre; esse pedes, nec tamen incedere. Id enim quam contortum et improbabile! Addimus, quam falsum! Num enim statuas illæ Deorum oderant animam Davidis? Convertit Clericus שָׂנִי נֶשֶׁךְ, invisos animo David; cum debuisset, qui oderant David: neque enim legitur שָׂנִי נֶשֶׁךְ, invisos animo, sed שָׂנִי נֶשֶׁךְ, invisam habentes animam (David). Paulo aliter hæc narrantur, 1 Par. ii. 6, sed ita, ut duo loci paralleli non pugnent, et ut ad hanc nostram interpretationem facile accommodentur.

Dathe.—6 Deinde appugnavit cum exercitu suo Hierosolymam, quam Jebusitæ tunc tenebant. Sed hi responderunt: eum urbem non esse expugnaturum, nisi cæcos et claudos repulerit. Quibus verbis indicabant, nunquam urbem ab eo capi posse. 7 Sed cepit David arcem Sionem, quæ postea ab eo nomen habuit. 8 Nam tunc David in exercitu suo edixerat: qui Jebusitis percusserit atque usque ad canales penetraverit, ad claudos istos et cæcos sibi tam exosos, hunc ducem exercitus futurum esse. Hinc in proverbio dici solet: Cæcus et claudus domum ne intrent (a).

Maurer.—6 אִם תִּבְנֶה וְאִם תִּבְנֶה, Hic non intrabis, urbem non expugnabis, nisi cæcos et claudos repuleris, h. e., vel cæci et claudi te repellent. Quæ sequuntur וְהָיָה לְיָהוּדָה דֹּדָה וְיָהוּדָה דֹּדָה sunt verba scriptoris: quibus verbis indicabant: urbem a Davide capi non posse. 8 בְּיָמָיו הָיָה לְיָהוּדָה דֹּדָה וְיָהוּדָה דֹּדָה — וְיָהוּדָה דֹּדָה — נֶשֶׁךְ דָּוִד. Hic locus haud dubie corruptus est. Quum צָנַר Ps. xlii. 8 secundum LXX, Vulg. et orationis contextum sit canalis, aqueductus s. catarracta (ut in Chald. lingua), plerique interpretes hoc quoque loco sub isto vocabulo canalem intelligunt, nempe Siloanensem, qui e Sionis arce aquas in urbem subjectam derivabat, monentes, hostem, canali hoc ac fonte ejus potitum, obsidionem fortiter urgere arcemque expugnare potuisse; apodosin autem ex loco parallelo 1 Chron. xi. 6 supplendam existimant hoc modo: qui Jebusæos percusserit atque usque ad canalem penetraverit, ad (?)

claudos istos et cæcos Davidis animo invisos (אֲנִי K'ri): is princeps et dux erit אֲנִי הָיָה (אֲנִי). Sed si vitium in apodosi quærendum, equidem malim pro priore אֲנִי legi אֲנִי: quicunque Jebusæos ceciderit atque usque ad canalem penetraverit, is clade afficiet claudos istos et cæcos, Davidis osores (אֲנִי vel אֲנִי [אֲנִי]) prius magis placet) h. e. per allusionem ad vs. 6: is urbem expugnabit, nam secundum vs. 6. repellere claudos ac cæcos idem potest valere quod capere urbem, quandoquidem Jebusæi responderant, Davidem urbem non esse expugnaturum, nisi repulerit cæcos et claudos, qui hanc ipsam ob causam h. l. cum irrisione osores s. inimici Davidis dicuntur. Fortasse vero mendum in protasi latet et pro אֲנִי legendum est אֲנִי, acie, i. e., gladio (cf. Ps. lxxxix. 44, אֲנִי). LXX enim habent ἐν παραξίφιδι, h. e., interprete Hesychio: ἐν μάχαρᾳ. Quo significatu admissio sensus loci hic erit: quicunque Jebusæos ceciderit atque, h. e., quicunque eorum, qui Jebusæos cædent, gladio attigerit sive claudos sive cæcos, eum odio habet, habebit (אֲנִי) animus Davidis, i. e., quum contemtim jactitaverint Jebusæi, cæcos et claudos nos esse repulsuros, ego favoris mei periculo proposito veto, ne, si pugnabitur, istorum hominum, i. e., omnino imbellium aliquem offendatis, sc. ut cum dedecore pereant Jebusæi isti magniloqui. Si, quod facile fieri potest, harum interpretationum lectoribus neutra placuerit, eos ut aptiorem dent enixe rogo. Quid sibi velit proverbium quod sequitur: cæcus et claudus domum ne intrent vel potius non intrabunt, ne conjectare quidem audeo. Dathius fatetur, se integrum hoc comma non intelligere.

Sam. ἀπο τῆς ἀκρας, καὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ.

We have here several variations between the two original texts; and the versions are remarkably different and defective. It has been already observed, that some circumstances, mentioned by the author of one history, are omitted by the other; and the author of Chronicles has here inserted a circumstance with regard to Joab, which is not recorded by the author of Samuel. But let us first consider the former part of the verse in Chronicles, with which the words in Samuel coincide; not exactly indeed, but with some variation. The Hebrew words in Chronicles signify literally, "Et ædificavit civitatem a circuitu a Millone et usque ad circuitum;" and the LXX very concisely express the whole of "a circuitu a Millone et usque ad circuitum" by the single word κύκλῳ.

Not to enumerate, at present, a variety of wrong opinions on this part of the sentence, the true meaning seems to be this: David having possessed himself of the castle of Sion, joined the castle to the town beneath it, by building houses from one to the other, and made thereby one round regular city. Millo (מִלּוֹ from מָלָא, plenus fuit, complevit, perfecit—a complete enclosure or fortification) is a word which has greatly perplexed the commentators; but it seems to have been the name of the castle of Sion, or the fortress of the city of David. The LXX generally render it (as in the text) by ἀκρά, a citadel: and in 2 Chron. xxxii. 5, we read וַיְבָרְכָהּ וַיְקַרְאָהָ עִיר דָּוִד, and he fortified Millo in the city of David; or rather, he fortified the castle (or citadel) of the city of David. Thus, Dr. Lightfoot tells us, Millo was a part of Sion, vol. ii., p. 25. And Josephus uses ἀκρά for Millo, when he speaks of this very circumstance, "Δαυιδὸς δὲ τὴν τε κατὼ πόλιν περιλαβὼν, καὶ τὴν ἀκρὰν συναψάς αὐτῇ, ἐποίησεν ἐν σῶμα' καὶ περικτείσας ἐπιμελητὴν τῶν τειχῶν κατέστησεν Ἰωαβόν."—Lib. vii., cap. 3.

Millo then being the name for the citadel, or strong fortress of Sion, 'tis evident that

David begun his works from thence, from Millo (a circuitu) round the lower town, and brought them about (ad circuitum) to the place where the circuit commenced, making a complete communication and regular enclosure: which answers exactly in sense to the following English translation of these words in a MS. Bible writ in 1408, And he builde the citee in compas from Millo till to the compas. The original text in Samuel has not the word הביר, and only says, "David built a circuit (סביב not מסביב) from Millo." But the LXX have αὐτὸν πολὺν after οικοδομήσεν, both in the Alex. and Vatican copies, omitting the name David; and therefore we have reason to think the beginning of this verse was originally the same in Samuel as in Chronicles.

The last word in Samuel ובניה has been greatly mistaken; and the more so, as it bears no resemblance to any word in the corresponding verse. The LXX render it τοῦ οἴκου αὐτοῦ, referring it probably to David; but the suffixed pronoun should then have been masculine. And had the word been thus expressed, though it would have so far vindicated that translation, it would not then have made a proper sense. The truth is, that the ה at the end of בניה being the local particle, the word signifies here et ad domum or et ad locum; and so regularly answers to יד הבנין in the other text. For as that is, "et ædificavit civitatem a circuitu a Millone et usque ad circuitum (ad Millonem)" so will this be, "et ædificavit David circuitum a Millone et usque ad domum (ad Millonem)" i.e., even to the house of the citadel, or to Millo, from which the works were first begun: which is the very sense of the corresponding text. But what puts this interpretation out of all doubt is the use of this word at the end of the preceding verse; and as it there most certainly means the house of Millo, or the citadel (from the walls of which the blind and lame shouted, David shall not come into this house), so it must mean the same house of Millo here: and that the house of Millo is the Scripture name for this strong fortress, see 2 Kings xii. 20 [&c., &c., see notes on 1 Chron. xi. 8].

The English version of the text in Chronicles is, "And he built the city in a circuit from Millo, and round to (the beginning of) that circuit: and Joab was made governor of the city." And the version of the text of Samuel is, "And David built a circuit from Millo, and round to the house of Millo."

Of those beyond Jordan, Og king of Bashan was the last, Deut. iii. 11; Josh. xii. 4; xiii. 12. From the Rephaim on this side Jordan was named the valley of Rephaim, see in רֶפְאִים lett. e. Ged.—Hence the name of that place was called [the Baal of the broken].

Booth.—Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-perazim [Baal of the broken].

Gesen.—פָּרַץ. 6. As denoting the possessor of a thing it is trop. applied also to a place which has or contains anything, i. e., a place in which anything is or is found, equivalent to מָקוֹם No. 5. So in the proper names of cities and places:

Burned them. So Houb., Pool, Patrick, Ged., Booth.

Gesen.—עָזַב 1. To take up, to lift up, &c.

2. To take, to take away, which is often done by taking up; so Lat. tollere, e medio tollere, freq. for auferre. 1 Sam. xvii. 34, and took a lamb from the flock. Judg. xvi. 31; 2 Sam. vi. 21, and David and his men took them away, sc. the idols.

Houb.—וַיִּשָּׂא דָּוִד וְהָעָם, Et tulit eos (deos) David et homines ejus. Non satis est, Davidem tulisse deos Philistæorum, nisi etiam dicitur eos abolevisse. Itaque melius Chaldaeus, וַיִּשְׂרֹף, et combussit eos; legere videtur וַיִּשָּׂא, ex radice שָׂא, ignis. Nihil enim vetat quin שָׂא, ut nomen est, ita et verbum sit, cum שָׂא, ignita, quod in sacrificiis frequentissimum est, participium videatur esse verbi שָׂא, comburare.

Dathe.—21 Reliquerant ibi idola sua, quibus David et milites ejus potiti sunt.

Ver. 23.

Au. Ver.—23 And when David enquired of the LORD, he said, Thou shalt not go up; but fetch a compass behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

And—the Lord.

Houb.—Tum David Dominum sciscitatus est; an, inquit, aggrediar Philistæos? An tu eos mihi traditurus es [Vulg., comp. ver. 19]? &c.

Thou shalt not go up.

Ged., Booth.—Thou shalt not go out to meet them [LXX, Vulg.].

Au. Ver.—24 And let it be, when thou hearest the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that then thou shalt bestir thyself: for then shall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

Bp. Patrick.—In the tops of the mulberry trees.] In the Hebrew it is beroshe, which should not be rendered "in the tops" (for men do not walk on the tops of trees), but "in the beginnings:" in the very entrance of the place, where the mulberry-trees were planted; where God intended to make a sound, as if a vast number of men were marching to fall upon the Philistines. There is no doubt but the Hebrew word rosh signifies not only the head, but the beginning of anything. So Bochart observes in his Phaleg, lib. iii., cap. 22, as in Nah. iii. 10, the top (as we translate it) the head of every street, is the beginning of those streets. And Isa. li. 20, Jer. xxii. 6, Gilead is called "the head of Libanus," because Libanus begins where Gilead ends.

Dr. A. Clarke.—By the going in the tops of the mulberry-trees probably only a rustling among the leaves is intended. The Targum says a noise; the Arabic has it, the noise of horses' hoofs.

Ged., Booth.—24 And when thou hearest the sound of a motion in the mulberry-trees, &c.

Mulberry-trees.

Gesen.—2. Plur. צִדְדָּךְ 2 Sam. v. 23, 24; 1 Chr. xiv. 13, 14, the name of a certain tree, so called from its weeping, i. e., distilling; according to Celsius, Hierobot. i., p. 335—340, i. q. the Arab. شجرة, similar to the balsam-tree, and distilling white tears of a pungent acrid taste.

In cacumine pyrorum. Licet etiam interpretari, in primis pyrorum, sive inter pyros, quæ in primo ordine erant, et per quas in nemus intrabatur; ita ut det Deus Davidi, pro signo, sonitum pedum, quasi multorum hominum inter pyros gradientium humi (non jam in earum cacuminibus) quanquam inter pyros, quæ prospici ab exercitu Davidis poterant, nemo gradiens appareret. Sed retinemus cum plerisque in cacuminibus pyrorum, quia, ut recte observat Thomas Stackouse Anglus, quo magis stupendum erat id, quod Deus pro signo dabat, eo majorem Deus Davidi dabat benevolentiae suæ testificationem. Vide eum, si juvat, "The History of the Bible," lib. v., cap. 4.

2 καὶ ἀνέστη καὶ ἐπορεύθη Δαυιδ καὶ πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ὁ μετ' αὐτοῦ καὶ ἀπὸ τῶν ἀρχόντων Ἰουδα ἐν ἀναβάσει τοῦ ἀναγαγεῖν ἐκεῖθεν τὴν κιβωτὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ, ἐφ' ἣν ἐπεκλήθη τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ Κυρίου τῶν δυναμέων καθεζόμενος ἐπὶ τῶν χειρῶν ἐπ' αὐτήν. 3 καὶ ἐπέβιβασαν τὴν κιβωτὸν ἐν Κυρίῳ ἐφ' ἁμαξαν καυῆν, καὶ ἦσαν αὐτὴν ἐξ οἴκου Ἀμιναδάβ τοῦ ἐν τῷ βουνῷ· καὶ Ὅζα καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ νιοὶ Ἀμιναδάβ ἤγον τὴν ἁμαξαν σὺν τῇ κιβωτῷ, 4 καὶ οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπορεύοντο ἔμπροσθεν τῆς κιβωτοῦ.

Au. Ver.—2 And David arose, and went with all the people that were with him from Baale [or, Baalah, that is, Kirjath-jearim, Josh. xv. 9, 60] of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God, whose name is called by the name of the LORD of hosts [or, at which the name, even the name of the LORD of hosts, was called upon] that dwelleth between the cherubims.

3 And they set [Heb., made to ride] the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was in Gibeah [or, the hill]: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of the house of Abinadab which was at Gibeah, accompanying [Heb., with] the ark of God: and Ahio went before the ark.

Pool.—2 From Baale of Judah. Quest. How from it, when they went to it; as is evident, both from 1 Chron. xiii. 6, and because the ark was there, and to be fetched thence? Ans. Some affirm that the Hebrew preposition mem sometimes signifies to [so Dathe], as Gen. xiii. 11. But there is no need of that; for 1 Chron. xiii. 6 mentions their going to Baalah, and this place mentions their going from it; and the one of these doth manifestly suppose the other; for they went thither, that they might return thence [so Bp. Patrick]. So the sense is plain, They went from Baale of Judah, to bring (or rather to carry, for the word signifies either) up from thence the ark; whereby it is supposed that they first went thither, which is related 1 Chron. xiii. 6. Moreover, this place is commonly called Kirjath-jearim, 1 Sam. vii. 1; 1 Chron. xiii. 5, and formerly Kirjath-Baal, Josh. xv. 60, and Baaluh, Josh. xv. 9, and here Baale of Judah; so called because it was in the tribe of Judah, as is evident from Josh. xv. 1, &c. Whose name is called by the name of the Lord of hosts: thus whose belongs not to the ark, but to God; for what follows is not the name of the ark, but of God. The place may well be, and is by some, rendered thus, Upon (or at, or beside, or before) which (ark) the name, even the name of the Lord of hosts, that dwelleth between the cherubims, is called upon; i.e., by or before which they were to present their prayers to God for counsel and succour upon all occasions. And this is mentioned here as the reason why David put himself and his people to so great trouble and charge, because it was to fetch up the choicest treasure which they had, and so the benefit would abundantly recompense the inconvenience.

3 In Gibeah; or, on the hill, as 1 Sam. vii. 1.

Bp. Patrick.—2 Whose name is called by the name of the Lord of hosts.] Or, "because of which the name is proclaimed, the name of the Lord of hosts." For by reason of the mighty miracles which were done before the ark, the name of the Lord was highly extolled and magnified, not only among the Israelites, but the Philistines. And by this, saith Abarbinel, it was made known, that God dwelt among the Israelites: so that not only the Philistines were affrighted when this ark of God's presence came among them (1 Sam. iv. 7, 8), but the men of Bethshemesh also (vi. 20).

That dwelleth between the cherubims.] The learned Lud. de Dieu thinks the most simple and genuine construction of all these words to be, by referring the word asher (which) not to the ark, but unto God, and translating them thus: "who is called the name, the name of the Lord of hosts, sitting on the cherubims upon it." Which, saith he, is an egregious commendation of the ark, that it is the ark of that God, who, being incomprehensible and unbounded in his essence, is called absolutely the name (see Lev. xxiv. 11, 16), even the name of the Lord of hosts, who sitteth on the cherubims over the ark.

4 In Gibeah.] Or, on the hill, as we read 1 Sam. vii. 1.

Dr. A. Clarke.—2 Whose name is called by the name of the Lord.] That is, the ark is called the ark of the Lord of hosts. But this is not a literal version; the word שם, name, occurs twice together; probably one of them should be read שם, there [so Dathe, Maurer]. There the name of the Lord of hosts was invoked, &c.

Ged.—2 And David and all the people who were with him, of the chiefs of Judah, went to Gibeah [Syr., Arab.], of Kirjath-jearim, to bring thence the ark of the covenant [Arab. and one MS] of God; at which was used to be invoked the name of the Lord, the God of hosts, residing between its cherubs. (3) The ark they placed upon a new cart, and brought it from the house of Abinadab in Gibeah of Kirjath-jearim: Uzah and his brothers, the sons of Abinadab, conducting the cart. (4) Uzah walked by the ark of God, and his brothers walked before the ark.

3, 4, This is partly a conjectural reading. The present text is unintelligible, and runs thus—"And they took it up, from the house of Abinadab in Gibeah; with the ark; and his brethren, or brother, or Ahio walked," &c.

Booth.—2 And David arose, and all the chief people who were with him, of the chiefs of Judah, and went to Gibeah [Syr., Arab.], of Kirjath-jearim to bring up thence the ark of God, at which is invoked the name of Jehovah of hosts, who dwelleth between the cherubs. 3 And they set the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it from the house of Abinadab which was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and his brothers, the sons of Abinadab, drove the new cart. 4 And Uzzah walked by the ark of God; and his brothers went before the ark.

Houb.—2 Deinde surgens cum omni populo qui ei aderat, ex Baal-Judæ profectus est, ut arcam Dei inde transferret, in quâ invocatur nomen Domini exercituum super Cherubim sedentis. 3 Illi arcam Dei sublatam plauastro novo imposuerunt, et domo Abinadab, quæ in colle erat, exulerunt. Oza autem et Ahio frater ejus, filii Abinadab, plaustrum novum ducebant; 4 Ita ut arcam Oza comitaretur, Ahio verò frater ejus ante arcam iret.

Præterea infra dicta docent adfuisse Davidi, in arca deducenda, non solum viros Juda, sed universum Israël. Nos, de Baal-Juda, ex scriptura מבני יהודה, sublato י, quod ante alterum י fuit perperam iteratum. Est בעל eadem urbs, quæ Jos. xv. 60, nominatur קריה בעל, Cariath-Baal, vel urbs Baal, eadem atque Cariathiarim. Conjiciebat Lud. Capellus, omissa hic esse aliqua verba, et sic legendum esse אשר יהודה קריה בעל, ex Baala in Cariathiarim, quæ est Judæ, quia sic legitur 1 Par. xiii. 6, cui assentitur Clericus. Nos vero nihil omissum fuisse credimus, seu legitur בעל, quæ idem sit ac קריה בעל, de qua urbe, Jos. xv. 60, seu denique בעלה, de qua ibid. ver. 30. Itaque recta negabat Buxtorfius quidquam hic desiderari. Idem tamen cavillabatur, cum vellet ut hæc verba מנבלי יהודה, ריכך דוד מבני יהודה, sic converterentur, venit David ex civibus Juda. Nam venire ex civibus, nec Latinum est, nec Hebraicum ... עליו in fine versus non negat superfluum ipse Buxtorfius, Anticrit. p. 997, hoc עליו, inquit, namquam additur, ubi arcæ mentio præcessit. Nos vero non dubitamus, quin istud עליו, sit legendum ירעו, et ascenderunt, et cum sequenti verbo ירכבו, et imposuerunt, conjungendum; itaque punctum majus ante עליו fuisse collocandum. Omisere illud עליו Syrus et Arabs, quia id viderent ad antedicta nequi non posse; quod tamen facere Clericus conatus est hoc modo: insidentis Cherubis arcæ impositis. Sed 10. cum loci infiniti sunt, in quibus dicitur Deus habitare in arca super Cherubim, tum nullus est, in quo Cherubim dicantur arcae impositi. 2o. Ut locum habere istud arcae impositis, oporteret sic fuisse scriptum הכרובים אשר עלי, Cherubim, qui super eam (arcam) non omisso pronomine אשר.

4. וישארו מבית אבינאדב אשר בנגבה, et tulerunt eam de domo Abinadab, quæ erat in colle. Eadem leguntur totidem verbis supra ver. 3, nec otiosa esse Clericus iudicabat: est enim, inquit, repetitio frequens lingua Hebraica. Esse repetitionem Scribæ imperiti, non Hebr. linguæ, probat versio ipsa Clericana, quæ sic habet: sumpserunt eam e domo Abinadabi, quæ erat in colle, una cum arca Dei. Nam quid hæc significant, sumpserunt eam (arcam) una cum arca Dei? Esset igitur Lud. Cappello potius, quam Joanni Clerico, hic auscultandum, ut tollatur hic versus totus, qui quidem non legitur, 1 Paral. xiii. 8. Nos tamen Lud. Cappello assentimur eatenus tantum, ut tollantur hæc quæ leguntur usque ad וְעַם אִיִּו, quæque eadem extant ver. 3, non autem cætera usque ad finem versus, quæ quidem versus 3, non enuntiavit, sed ita, ut ante וְעַם אִיִּו, addatur וְעַם, Oza autem, hoc modo: וְעַם אִיִּו (3) בני אבינאדב נהגים את חצולה חדשה (4) וְעַם אִיִּו: Oza et Ahio filii Abinadab, ducebant plaustrum novum, Oza autem erat cum arca, Ahio autem ibat ante arcam. In iis verbis, Oza autem erat cum arca Dei, præparatur ad id, quod sequitur, Ozam tetigisse arcam, non Ahio ejus fratrem, quoniam Oza comitabatur arcam, Ahio vero antecedeat; simul nectitur series orationis, quæ in verbis וְעַם אִיִּו, manca erat, omisso nomine ejus, qui esset cum arca. Jam vero, cur librarius hæc verba, et tulerunt eam de domo Abinadab, quæ erat in colle, quæ versu 4, superfluunt, bis descripserit, causam hanc recte auguratus est Lud. Cappellus, quod, cum Scriba bis legeret וְעַם אִיִּו, oculi ejus ex posteriori plaustrum novo, ad prius deerraverint, ut quæ erant post prius, eadem post posterius iterum describeret; quo eodem in medio errore accidit, ut וְעַם, quod bis legebatur, semel tantum scriberet: vide versionem et ipsum contextum.

καὶ Δαυὶδ καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ Ἰσραὴλ παίζοντες ἐνώπιον Κυρίου ἐν ὄργανοις ἡρμουςμένους ἐν ἰσχυρί, καὶ ἐν ψαλμοῖς, καὶ ἐν κινύραις, καὶ ἐν νάβλαις, καὶ ἐν τυμπάνοις, καὶ ἐν κυμβάλοις, καὶ ἐν αὐλοῖς.

Au. Ver.—5 And David and all the house of Israel played before the Lord on all manner of instruments made of fir-wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

On all manner of instruments made of fir-wood. So Maurer.

Houb., Ken., Horsley, Dathe, Ged., Booth., "with all their might, and with songs, and with harps," &c. [So the p.p. 1 Chron. xiii. 8.]

Bp. Patrick.—Of all manner of instruments made of fir-wood.] Where Rasi notes, that these words becol atze beroshim, do not signify any particular instrument, but (as we translate it) the wood of which the following instruments are made; viz., either fir or box.

Ken.—Amongst all the assistances for correcting the Hebrew text, one of the best certainly is a comparison of parallel places; not with a design of reducing both to a constant agreement in words, but to a consistency in sense: particularly, where one place is clearly corrupted, that we correct it by the other where it is clearly right. The utility of this method will be very evident from the following passage; which represents David and the Israelites, when bringing up the ark, as playing on all manner of fir-wood, even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals. But the words are literally on all the woods (or trees) of the firs, and on harps, &c. Here then it is fair to presume a corruption; especially, as from this account the whole music was instrumental, and nothing was sung at all. If now we consult and apply the parallel place (1 Chron. xiii. 8) we shall find these matters perfectly right: while the true readings in Chronicles are confirmed by the Greek version in Samuel:—

ובכנרות ובנבלים ובתפים &c. Sam.

. &c. Chron.

Sam. Played on all manner of fir-wood, Chron. Played with all their might, and with Sam. even on harps, &c. Chron. songs, and with harps, &c.

Dr. A. Clarke.—This place should be corrected from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xiii. 8: "All Israel played before God, with all their might, and with singing, and with harps, and with psalteries," &c. Instead of עז, "with all woods" or "trees;" the parallel place is בכל עז, "with all their strength:" this makes a good sense, the first makes none. The Septuagint, in this place, has the same reading: εν ισχυι, with might.

Maurer.—'נבלים וקצים ונ', Variis lignis abietinis, i.e., instrumentis musicis ex ligno abietino confectis: et citharis et nabliis cet. Chronica xiii. 8 exhibent 'נבלים וקצים ונ', omnibus viribus: et canticis et citharis et nabliis cet. Quam insulsam emendationem miror placuisse Dathio.

Au. Ver.—6 And when they came to Nachon's threshing-floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen shook it [or, stumbled].

Nachon's threshing-floor.

Bp. Patrick.—Nachon's threshing-floor.] It is commonly thought that Nachon was the name of a man: but Bochartus thinks it rather the name of a place; so called by anticipation, for the stroke upon Uzzah. For nacha signifies to smite, and Nachon signifies percussion; so this floor was called ever after "the floor of percussion;" because God smote Uzzah in this place. And accordingly in 1 Chron. xiii. 9, it is called the floor of Chidon; which is the very same: for Chid signifies destruction.

Geddes.—The threshing-floor of Nachon. Some render Nachon appellatively, the first at hand. I am apt to think, that if it be not a proper name, it should be rendered a threshing-floor, or granary where corn was ready to be threshed. The sight of this made the oxen break loose, or try to break loose; as is seen immediately after.

Gesen.—נָכוֹן (prepared, r. נָכַן) Nachon, pr. n. of a threshing-floor, 2 Sam. vi. 6. In the parall. passage 1 Chr. xiii. 9 it is קָדַן.

Uzzah put forth his hand.

Houb.—וַיִּשְׁלַח עֲדָנָן. 1o. Legendum עֲדָנָן, ut lego in codicibus tribus; et ut supra legitur. 2o. Addendum עֲדָנָן, (misit Oza) manum suam, quæ verba hic legunt omnes Veteres, quæ ab loco parallelo, 1 Par. xiii. 9 non absunt, quæque Hebr. lingua non solet reticere.

For the oxen shook it.

Bp. Patrick.—There is no greater difference among interpreters about the signification of any word, than this word sametu, which we translate shook it. That which is nearest to the truth, Bochartus thinks, is our marginal translation, they stumbled. Yet this is mere guessing, for it hath no foundation either in the Hebrew or the neighbouring languages. But from the Arabic he takes this to be the sense; that the oxen, coming into a dirty place, stuck in the mire; and could not get out their feet: which Uzzah seeing, and fearing the king and the people, by this accident, might be stopped too long in their procession, "took hold of the ark:" intending, perhaps, to carry it, together with his brethren, to Mount Zion, which was not far off.

Bp. Horsley.—For the oxen shook it; perhaps "for they were loosing the oxen," in order to put in fresh oxen. But the whole distance from Kiriath-jearim to Jerusalem seems to have been too short to make a change of cattle necessary.

Ged., Booth.—For the oxen started.

Gesen.—פָּשַׁע 1. pp. i. q. פָּשַׁע, to smite, to strike; also to thrust, to cast, to throw down; comp. Arab. شمس, to strike, to smite, also to urge on a beast violently. Hence a) 2 Sam. vi. 6 פָּשַׁע הַבָּקָר, for the oxen kicked, were restive; Vulg., calcitrabant. Au. Ver.—7 And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him there for his error [or, rashness], and there he died by the ark of God.

And God smote him there for his error.

Bp. Patrick.—God smote him there for his error.] Or, "for his rashness," in touching the ark: some think it was because he was not a Levite, and therefore should not have touched it. But it is pretty plain that he was; being the brother of Eleazar, who was consecrated to look after the ark: which was the office of a Levite (1 Sam. vii. 1). But being a Levite, he was guilty of a double error: first, in not carrying the ark upon his shoulders, together with his brethren; and secondly, in touching it; which he ought not so much as to have seen: but it being covered by the priests, the Levites were to take hold of the staves, and carry it (Numb. iv. 15).

He died by the ark of God.] Or, "before the Lord," as it is expressed 1 Chron. xiii. 10, because the ark was the symbol of God's special presence.

Houb., Ken., Ged., Booth.—7 And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Uzzah; and God smote him because he put forth his hand to the ark, &c.

Ken.—As there has been a mistake then in the words expressing Uzzah's crime [in ver. 6]; so has there been in this verse which expresses his punishment. His crime was, that he put forth his hand to the ark; and we naturally expect to read, that the Lord smote him, because he put forth his hand to the ark. This reason indeed is not expressed in the Hebrew text; but it is in the Syr. and Ar. Versions. The Hebrew text reads על היסוד; and the noun יסוד occurs nowhere else. But, had such a noun been ever found, signifying error or temeritas; it certainly would have had the pronoun here suffixed to it. The Vat. and Ald. editions of the Greek version omit these words; but the Alex. edition has (inserted) ἐν προπετεια: words, which seem to have been adopted into this copy from Theodoret. For Nobilius says, Theodoretus proponens quæstionem, cur Oza sit a Deo percussus, ac narrans quosdam pulasse eum dedisse pœnas tps pponereias, videtur indicare hanc dictionem non se habuisse in Scriptura. Probably then the Syr. and Ar. versions have preserved the true reading; according to which the text will be, And the Lord smote him על אשר שלח אר יד, because he put forth his hand. So that we have here two letters transposed, and one changed; השל. The parallel place, 1 Chron. xiii. 9, 10, strongly confirms both these corrections; for there we read יד אשר שלח, and afterwards על אשר שלח יד.

Au. Ver.—8 And David was displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon [Heb., broken] Uzzah: and he called the name of the place Perez-uzzah [that is, the breach of Uzzah] to this day.

Pool.—David was displeased, or grieved [so Ged., Booth.], both for the sin, which he acknowledgeth, 1 Chron. xv. 2, 13, and for God's heavy judgment.

Bp. Patrick.—David was displeased.] He took it very heavily: and was angry (as the word signifies), that there was any cause for such a breach; that is, such a destruction. For it detracted much from his authority and esteem, to have such an accident in the beginning of his reign, and at such a solemnity of great joy: which was hereby disturbed and interrupted. Perhaps he was troubled, being afraid that he also might suffer, for taking no better care about the carrying of the ark.

Au. Ver.—12 And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that when they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed oxen and fatlings.

14 And David danced before the LORD with all his might; and David was girded with a linen ephod.

12 So David went, &c.

Ged.—So David went, and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom unto the city of David, with joyful solemnity: for there were with him seven choirs, and victims for sacrifices [LXX, Vulg., and so partly Josephus].

Booth.—12 So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness: for there was with David seven choirs, and victims were slaughtered [LXX, Vulg.].

Dr. A. Clarke.—12 So David—brought up the ark.] The Vulgate adds to this verse: And David had seven choirs, and a calf for

A good piece of flesh, and a fagon of wine.

Bp. Patrick.—The Talmudists have a conceit, that the Hebrew word eshpar, which we translate “a good piece of flesh,” signifies the sixth part of a bullock: deriving it from three words put into one; viz., echad, one, shesh, six, and par, a bullock. But every one sees this is a very forced fancy; and it is not in itself credible, that he could, among such a multitude, deal a sixth part of a bullock to every one; or that they could well carry it away, with the bread and wine. Bochartus more reasonably thinks (as some of the Jews do) the word is derived from shapar, which signifies decorus: and so the meaning is, as we translate it, he gave to every one a handsome or decent portion of flesh (see his Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 18).

Gesen.—עֶשְׂפָר an obscure word, found only twice, 2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chr. xvi. 3. Vulg., assatura bubulæ carnis, deriving it absurdly enough from עֵשֶׂה, fire, and עֶשֶׂה, bullock; so Engl. Vers., a good piece of [roasted] flesh. But there can be little doubt that it was a certain measure of wine or drink, a measure, cup, for עֶשֶׂה c. Aleph prosthet. from r. עֶשֶׂה No. 3, i. q. Ethiop.

נִמְדַּלְ: to measure, whence סִמְדַּלְ: a measure, cyathus, see Ludolph Lex. Ethiop., p. 187; comp. cogn. עֶשֶׂה, to number. An approach to the truth was made by L. de Dieu, who, following the same etymology, understands a portion of the sacrifice measured out.

עֶשְׂפָר f. 2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chr. xvi. 3; Plur. עֶשְׂפָרִים Hos. iii. 1, and עֶשְׂפָרִים Cant. ii. 5, a cake, cakes, Lat. liba, spec. such as were prepared from dried grapes or raisins, pressed or compacted into a certain form, from r. עֶשֶׂה; so עֶשְׂפָרִים עֶשְׂפָרִים, raisin-cakes, Hos. i. c. They are mentioned as delicacies with which the weary and languid are refreshed, 2 Sam. Chr. Cant. ii. cc., and were also offered to idols in sacrifice, Hos. i. c. Different from עֶשֶׂה, i. e., grapes dried, but not compacted into the form of cakes; and also from עֶשֶׂה, i. e., figs pressed into cakes. The etymology is doubtless to be sought in the idea of pressing together (see the root, and comp. עֶשֶׂה a cake, from עֶשֶׂה to make firm, also עֶשְׂפָרִים from עֶשֶׂה, to spread out); and not in that of fire, עֵשֶׂה, as if cakes prepared with fire. The same word occurs in Pseudo-jon., Ex. xvi. 31, where עֶשְׂפָר is for Heb. עֶשֶׂה; also in the Mishna, Nedarim vi. 10, where עֶשְׂפָר denotes a kind of food prepared from lentiles, prob. cakes made from boiled lentiles.

Prof. Lee.—עֶשְׂפָר, occ. 2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Ch. xvi. 3. Various interpretations have been given, which may be seen in Poole, &c.; I prefer that proposed by Gesenius. De Dieu had suggested the Æthiop. ሰፈረ, mensuravit, and taken the word to mean A certain portion, or measure, of the sacrifice. Gesenius thinks a measure, as a cup of wine, the most suitable. The Syr. gives, in each place, كاس خمر, which Bar Serushoi says, signifies a cup of wine; and, in the former place, the Arabic of the Polyglott renders this by

I. Food, affording support, nourishment, delight, &c. What it was no one can now say particularly. It probably was a sort of cake soaked either in honey or wine. See 2 Sam. vi. 19; 1 Chron. xvi. 3; Cant. ii. 5; Hos. iii. 1; in Exod. xvi. 31, the Targum of Jonathan has עֶשְׂפָר, for the Heb. עֶשְׂפָר, which Castell renders by “Laganum melle obductum,” on the authority of the Arabic textit: صَفِيحَة, lamina, &c. From the passage in Hosea it seems probable that these were offered to idols. The distinctions which Gesenius makes between this word, עֶשְׂפָר, and עֶשֶׂה, cannot, I think, be maintained. II. עֶשְׂפָר, foundations of, according to some. De Dieu thinks lagenæ, bottles, or jars, must be the sense, Isaiah xvi. 7, to suit עֶשְׂפָר, following, which he translates “Utique confractæ sunt.” I see no reason for departing from the sense first given ; for, if we may consider this a sort of food given for support, (Cant. ii. 5)—or, as bread is spoken of in Isaiah iii. 1—there can be no impropriety in speaking of its being broken to pieces; וַיִּשְׁבֹּר וַיִּתֵּן, may, therefore signify the supports, refreshments, &c. of kirkhareth; and may mean the men of that place, as Jeremiah seems to have paraphrased it, Ch. xlviii. 31. In this respect Gesenius's remark is good ; while his interpretation of the word by foundations, as well as his appeal to Isaiah lviii. 12, is quite groundless.

Commentaries and Essays.—Before the Lord. Some words seem to be dropped in this verse in the Hebrew. The LXX in the beginning read ἀρχήσονται, "I will dance before Jehovah," and at the close, "yea, I will play, and dance before Jehovah." The sense requires the first.

Ged.—21 Yes, said David to Michal, in the presence of the LORD; who chose me in preference to thy father, and in preference to all his house; to appoint me ruler over the whole of the LORD's people, the Israelites! Au. Ver.—5 Go and tell my servant David [Heb., to my servant to David], Thus saith the Lord, Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in?

6 Whereas I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel spake I a word with any of the tribes [1 Chron. xvii. 6, any of the judges] of Israel, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of cedar?

5 Shalt thou build me, &c.

Ged., Booth.—Wouldst thou build for me a house to dwell in?

6 Out of Egypt.

Ged., Booth.—Out of the land of [Syr., Vulg., Arab., and one MS.] Egypt.

But have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle. See notes on Exod. xxvi. 1, vol. i., p. 33.

Bp. Horsley.—Rather, “but have been going about under an outer and an inner covering.” See the appropriate senses of the words מִשְׁכָּן and מִדְבָּר, Exod. xxvi. 1.

7 With any of the tribes of Israel.

Pool.—With any of the tribes: in 1 Chron. xvii. 6, it is of the judges; and to them, not to the tribes, the following words agree, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel. Either therefore the tribes are here put synecdochically for the rulers of the tribes, as the word church is sometimes used for the governors of it; or the word here rendered tribes may be rendered sceptres, as it is used Gen. xlix. 10, and sceptres put for sceptre-bearers or rulers, as is very frequent.

Bp. Patrick.—7 Any of the tribes of Israel. That is, “of the judges of Israel,” as it is interpreted, 1 Chron. xvii. 6. For the word shibte signifies not only tribes but sceptres; and, consequently, supreme governors and rulers: such as the judges were who had the supreme authority in Israel. And so the following words explain it.

Whom I commanded to feed my people Israel. He did not command the tribes, but the supreme governors of them, to feed, that is, to rule his people and take care of their happiness. Here, again, feeding is governing (as I observed, v. 2), and the Hebrew word for feed being raga, as some pronounce it (in the Syriac, rega), very learned men thence derive the Latin words regere and reges: kings being designed by God to be the pastors of their people.

Bp. Horsley.—7 Of the tribes. שְׁבִיטֵי, “the sceptered rulers.”

Houb., Dathe, Hallet, Clarke, Ged., Booth.—Spake I a word with any of the judges, &c.

Dr. A. Clarke.—7 With any of the tribes. “Spake I a word to any of the judges” is the reading in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 6; and this is probably the true reading. Indeed, there is but one letter of difference between them, and letters which might be easily mistaken for each other: שְׁבִיטֵי, tribes, is almost the same in appearance with שָׁפֵט, judges; the י and the ט being the same letter, the apex under the upper stroke of the ט excepted. If this were but a little effaced in a MS., it would be mistaken for the other, and then we should have tribes instead of judges. This reading seems confirmed by ver. 11.

Hallet.—7 שְׁבִיטֵי שָׁפֵט. It seems very strange that God should talk of any of the tribes of Israel as feeding, or ruling his people Israel. It is natural to suspect an error committed by the transcribers in this place. And if we look into the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 6, we shall find where the error lies, and how it must be corrected. The words are, Spake I a word to any of the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to feed (or rule) my people—? It is very just to say, that the judges were commanded to rule the people. The Hebrew word here is שָׁפֵט, judges; whereas the transcribers in Sam. have altered one letter, and written שְׁבִיטֵי, tribes. I could not forbear smiling to read Bishop Patrick's note on this place, on the words, of the tribes of Israel: which is, “That is, of the judges of Israel, as it is interpreted, 1 Chron. xvii. 6. For the word shibte, not only signifies tribes, but sceptres; and consequently supreme governors and rulers: such as the judges were, who had the supreme authority in Israel. And so the following words explain it, whom I commanded to feed my people Israel. He did not command the tribes, but the supreme governors of them, to feed, i. e., to rule his people.” Would it not have been a more natural inference from this, that the word should not have been shibte, tribes, but shopthe, judges, as it is correctly written in Chron. and in ver. 11 of this same chapter? Is it not more natural to say, that this word is corrected, than that it is interpreted, by 1 Chron. xvii. 6? I cannot but determine for this correction, though all the versions of Samuel agree with the present Hebrew in reading, tribes. As to the parallel place in Chronicles, it is to be observed, that all the versions there agree with the Hebrew of the place to read judges, except the δ which reads, tribes, as in Sam. But the Alexandrian copy of the δ in Chron. reads both tribes and judges. This error was committed by the transcribers before any of the versions were made.

Au. Ver.—9 And I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off all thine enemies out of thy sight [Heb., from thy face], and have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as beforetime, 11 And as since the time that I commanded Judges to be over my people Israel, and have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the Lord telleth thee that he will make thee an house.

12 And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 He shall build an house for my name, and I will stablish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men:

15 But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

16 And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee; thy throne shall be established for ever.

17 According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

Pool.—10 I will appoint a place, i. e., I will make room for them; whereas hitherto they have been much constrained and distressed by their enemies. Or, I will establish (for so that verb sometimes signifies) a place for them, i. e., I will establish them in their place or land. Some learned men render the verse thus, and the Hebrew words will bear it: And I have appointed (or assigned, or given) a place for my people Israel, (to wit, the land of Canaan,) and have planted them in it, that they may dwell in their own place, and be no more driven to and fro; or rather, and they shall dwell in their own place, &c.; i. e., as I did long ago appoint it to them, and afterwards planted them, or put them into actual possession; so now they shall continue or dwell in it, in spite of all their enemies. For my people Israel. Among the favours which God had vouchsafed, and would vouchsafe to David, he reckons his blessings to the people of Israel, because they were great blessings to David; partly because the strength and happiness of a king consists in great part in the multitude and happiness of his people; and partly because David was a man of a pious and public spirit, and therefore no less affected with Israel's felicity than with his own. In a place of their own, i. e., in their own land, not in strange lands, nor mixed with other people. As beforetime; either, first, as in the land of Egypt; and so he goes downward to the judges. Or, secondly, as in Saul's time; and so he ascends to the judges.

11 Nor as they did under the judges, neither so oft nor so long. But all this is to be understood with a condition, except they should notoriously forsake God, or rebel against him; which being so oft declared by God in other places, it was needless to mention it here. Or this may relate to the latter ages of the world, when the people of Israel shall be converted to Christ, and recalled out of captivity, and planted in their own place; when they shall enjoy a far greater degree of tranquillity than ever they did before. And this agrees best with the future tense, I will appoint—and will plant them, &c.; otherwise the work was already done, God had already appointed this land for them, and actually planted them in it. And have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies, i. e., and until this time in which I have given thee rest. But these words, though according to our translation they be enclosed in the same parenthesis with the foregoing clauses, may seem to be better put without it, and to be taken by themselves. For the foregoing words in this verse, and in ver. 10, do all concern the people of Israel; but these words seem to concern David alone, to whom the speech returns after a short digression concerning the people of Israel. And they may be rendered either thus, and I have caused thee to rest, &c., or, and I will cause thee to rest, &c., to wit, more fully and perfectly than yet thou dost. He will make thee an house; for thy good intentions to make him an house, he will make thee an house, to wit, a sure house, as is expressed, 1 Kings xi. 38, i. e., he will increase and uphold thy posterity, and continue thy kingdom in thy family.

12 I will set up thy seed after thee; I will set up in thy stead and throne thy posterity, first Solomon, and then others successively, and at last the Messias. So the following words may be understood diversely, part of his posterity in general or indefinitely taken, part of Solomon, and part of Christ only, according to the differing nature of the several passages.

13 He shall build an house: this is meant literally and immediately of Solomon, who alone did build the material house or temple; but mystically and ultimately of Christ, who is the builder of God's spiritual house or temple, Heb. iii. 3, 6; 1 Pet. ii. 5. For my name, i. e., for my service, and worship, and glory. I will stablish the throne of his kingdom: this is not meant of Solomon, for his kingdom was not for ever. And though the phrase for ever is sometimes used of the time of a man's life, yet it cannot be so understood here, because the mercy here promised to David's son is of another nature, and of far longer continuance, than that which was given to Saul, ver. 15, who yet enjoyed the kingdom as long as he lived. But it is to be understood of David's posterity in general, but with special respect to Christ, in whose person the kingdom was to be lodged for ever, Isa. ix. 7; Dan. ii. 44; Luke i. 32, 33.

14 I will carry myself towards him as becomes a father, with all affection and tenderness, and I will own him as my son. This is intended both of Solomon, as a type of Christ; and of Christ himself, as is evident from Heb. i. 5. If he commit iniquity: this agrees only to Solomon and some others of David's posterity; but not to Christ, who never committed iniquity, as Solomon did, who therein was no type of Christ, and therefore this branch is terminated in Solomon; whereas in those things wherein Solomon was a type of Christ, the sense passeth through Solomon unto Christ. With the rod of men; either, first, With such rods as men use to correct their sons, or to beat other men; which are here opposed to the rods or strokes which an angry God inflicts. See Job xxiii. 6; Psal. xxxix. 11; Isa. xlvii. 3; Rom. ix. 22; Heb. x. 31; xii. 29. Or, secondly, With such rods as are gentle and moderate, and suited to man's weakness; as a tolerable and resistible temptation is called human, or common to men, 1 Cor. x. 13.

15 My mercy, or, my kindness, i. e., the kingdom which I have mercifully and kindly promised to thee and thine. As I took it from Saul; in regard of his posterity, for the kingdom was continued to his person during life.

16 Before thee; thine eyes in some sort beholding it; for he lived to see his wise and godly son Solomon actually placed in the throne, with great reputation and general applause, 1 Kings i. 39, 40, which was in itself a good presage of the continuance of the kingdom in his family; and being considered, together with the infallible certainty of God's promise to him and his for ever, of the accomplishment whereof this was an earnest, gave him good assurance thereof; especially considering that he had his eyes and thoughts upon the Messiah, Psal. cx. 1, &c., whose day he saw by faith, as Abraham did, John viii. 56, and whom he knew that God would raise out of the fruit of his loins to sit on his throne, as is affirmed, Acts ii. 30, and that for ever; and so the eternity of his kingdom is rightly said to be before him. The LXX and Syriac read before me, which is a usual phrase, which makes no great variation in the Hebrew text.

Bp. Patrick.—10 I will appoint a place.] Or, "I have constituted (or established) a place for my people," viz., the land of Canaan.

Neither shall the children of wickedness.] The idolatrous people round about them.

Afflict them—as beforetime.] When they were in the land of Egypt.

11 Since the time that I commanded judges.] In whose days they were sorely afflicted by the Moabites, Canaanites, Midianites, and other people.

Have caused thee to rest.] Given him a quiet possession of the whole kingdom of Israel; which never was in so happy a condition as now.

12 I will set up thy seed.] To sit upon his throne.

Which shall proceed out of thy bowels.] This shows that he speaks of one who was not yet born, viz., Solomon: and that Absalom, Adonijah, and the rest who pretended to the kingdom, were not designed for it: being already proceeded from him.

I will establish his kingdom.] He reigned a long time himself; and so did his posterity after him.

13 The latter part of this verse can belong to none but the Messiah; if the words for ever be taken in their full extent.

14 I will be his father.] This the Apostle shows is meant of Christ, Heb. i. 5. For though Solomon was called Jedidiah, in token that he was beloved of God, yet, in the complete sense of the word, Christ only is intended: who is "God's beloved Son, in whom he is well pleased."

If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, &c.] This is a mixed prophecy, some part of which belongs to Christ, and the other part to Solomon, and his successors in the kingdom of Israel: who, it is plain, is solely intended in these words. And by "the rod of men, and the stripes of the children of men," is meant gentle correction; such as parents give their children.

15 He promises not to translate the kingdom into another family; as he took it from Saul, to give it to David: but the kingdom shall continue in his line.

16 That is, saith Kimchi, for a long time, between four and five hundred years, which was a rare thing, and seldom known, that the kingly authority continued in any one family so long. But this is chiefly intended of the kingdom of Christ, as Procopius Gazærus here observes: from whence the Jews said (John xii. 34), "We have heard out of the law that Christ abideth for ever." This is confirmed by the rule which Maimonides lays down in his More Nevochim, that though olam alone doth not necessarily signify eternally, yet when it is joined with ath, either before or after it, it doth so signify. And that is the case here; this kingdom is said to be established ath olam: which can belong to none but Christ; for David's kingdom had an end, but Christ's hath none (par. ii. cap. 28).

Ken.—This chapter is one of the most important in the Old Testament; and yet some of its most interesting verses are very improperly rendered in our translation: it therefore demands our most careful consideration. And as, in the course of these remarks, I propose to consider, and hope to explain some of the prophecies descriptive of the Messiah, which were fulfilled in Jesus Christ; amongst which prophecies, that contained in this chapter is worthy of particular attention: I shall introduce it, with a general state of this great argument.

It having pleased God, that, between the time of a Messiah being first promised, and the time of his coming, there should be delivered by the prophets a variety of marks, by which the Messiah was to be known, and distinguished from every other man; it was impossible for any one to prove himself the Messiah, whose character did not answer to these marks: and of course it was necessary, that all these criteria, thus divinely foretold, should be fulfilled in the character of Jesus Christ. That these prophetic descriptions of the Messiah were numerous, appears from Christ and his apostles (Luke xxiv. 27, 44; Acts xvii. 2, 3; xxviii. 23, &c.), who referred the Jews to the Old Testament, as containing abundant evidence of his being the Messiah, because he fulfilled all the prophecies descriptive of that singular character. The chief of these prophecies related to

His being miraculously born of a virgin;
The time, and place, of his birth;
The tribe, and family, he was to descend from;
The miracles he was to perform;
The manner of his preaching;
His humility and mean appearance;
The perfect innocence of his life;
The greatness of his sufferings;
The treachery of his betrayer;
The circumstances of his trial;
The nature of his death and burial;
And, to his miraculous resurrection.

Now amongst all the circumstances, which form this chain of prophecy; the first reference made in the New Testament relates to his descent: for the New Testament begins with asserting, that "Jesus Christ was the son of David, the son of Abraham." As to the descent of Christ from Abraham; every one knows that Christ was born a Jew; and consequently descended from Jacob, the grandson of Abraham. And we all know, that the promise given to Abraham concerning the Messiah is recorded in the history of Abraham's life, in Gen. xxii. 18. Christ being also to descend from David, there can be no doubt, but that this promise, as made to David, was recorded likewise in the history of David. 'Tis remarkable, that David's life is given more at large than that of any other person in the Old Testament; and it cannot be supposed, that the historian omitted to record that promise, which was more honourable to David than any other circumstance. The record of this promise, if written at all, must have been written in this chapter; in the message from God by Nathan to David, which is here inserted. Here (I am fully persuaded), the promise was, and still is, recorded: and the chief reason why our divines have so frequently missed it, or been so much perplexed about it, is owing to our very improper translation of the 10th and 14th verses.

This wrong translation, in a part of Scripture so very interesting, has been artfully laid hold of, and expatiated upon splendidly, by the deistical author of "The Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion," who pretends to demonstrate, that the promise of a Messiah could not be here recorded. His reasons (hitherto I believe unanswered) are three. 1st Because, in ver. 10, the prophet speaks of the future prosperity of the Jews, as to be afterwards fixed, and no more afflicted; which circumstances are totally repugnant to the fate of the Jews, as connected with the birth and death of Christ; 2dly Because the son, here promised, was (ver. 13) to build an house; which house, it is pretended, must mean the temple of Solomon; and of course Solomon must be the son here promised; and 3dly, Because ver. 14 supposes, that this son might commit iniquity; which could not be supposed of the Messiah. The first of these objections is founded on our wrong translation of verse 10; where the words should be expressed as relating to the time past or present. For the prophet is there declaring what great things God had already done for David and his people—that he had raised David from the sheepfold to the throne—and that he had planted the Israelites in a place of safety; at rest from all those enemies, who had so often before afflicted them. That the verbs יָשַׁעְתִּי and יִשְׁמְרִי may be rendered in the time past or present, is allowed by our own translators; who here (ver. 11) render וַיִּחַדְתִּי and have caused thee to rest, and also render וַיִּבְנֶה and telleth; which construction, made necessary here by the context, might be confirmed by other proofs almost innumerable. The translation therefore should run thus: "I took thee from the sheepcote—and have made thee a great name—and I have appointed a place for my people Israel; and have planted them, that they dwell in a place of their own, and move no more. Neither do the children of wickedness afflict them any more; as before time, and as since the time that I commanded judges to be over Israel; and I have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies."

Objection the 2d is founded on a mistake in the sense. David indeed had proposed to build an house to God; which God did not admit. Yet, approving the piety of David's intention, God was pleased to reward it by promising, that he would make an house for David; which house, to be thus erected by God, was certainly not material, or made of stones; but a spiritual house, or family, to be raised up for the honour of God and the salvation of mankind. And this house, which God would make, was to be built by David's seed; and this seed was to be raised up, after David slept with his fathers: which words clearly exclude Solomon, who was set up, and placed upon the throne, before David was dead. This building, promised by God, was to be erected by one of David's descendants, who was also to be an everlasting king: and indeed the house and the kingdom were both of them to be established for ever. Now that this house or spiritual building was to be set up, together with a kingdom, by the Messiah, is clear from Zachariah; who very emphatically says (vi. 12, 13):—"Behold the man whose name is the Branch; he shall build the temple of the Lord. Even he shall build the temple of the Lord; and he shall bear the glory, and shall sit and rule upon his throne," &c. Observe also the language of the New Testament. In 1 Cor. iii. 9—17, St. Paul says, "Ye are God's building—Know ye not, that ye are the temple of God?—the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." And the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews seems to have his eye upon this very promise in Samuel concerning a son to David, and of the house which he should build; when he says (iii. 6):—"Christ, as a son, over his own house; whose house are we."

As to the third and greatest difficulty, that also may be removed by a more just translation of verse 14; for the Hebrew words do not properly signify what they are now made to speak. 'Tis certain, that the principal word בָּרַשָׁע is not the active infinitive of Kal, which would be בָּרַשָׁע; but רָשָׁע from רָשָׁה is in Niphal, as רָשָׁע from רָשָׁה. 'Tis also certain, that a verb which in the active voice signifies to commit iniquity, may in the passive signify to suffer for iniquity: and hence it is, that nouns from such verbs sometimes signify iniquity, sometimes punishment. See Lowth's Isaiah, p. 187, with many other authorities, which shall be produced hereafter. The way being thus made clear, we are now prepared for abolishing our translation, "if he commit iniquity;" and also for adopting the true one, "even in his suffering for iniquity." The Messiah, who is thus the person possibly here spoken of, will be made still more manifest from the whole verse thus translated:—"I will be his father, and he shall be my son: even in his suffering for iniquity, I shall chasten him with the rod of men (with the rod due to men) and with the stripes (due to) the children of Adam." And this construction is well supported by Isaiah liii. 4, 5, "He hath carried our sorrows (i. e., the sorrows due to us, and which we must otherwise have suffered); he was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." See Note, p. 479, in Hallet, on Heb. xi. 26. Thus then God declares himself the father of the Son here meant (see also Heb. i. 5); and promises, that, even amidst the sufferings of this Son (as they would be for the sins of others, not for his own), his mercy should still attend him: nor should his favour be ever removed from this king, as it had been from Saul. And thus (as it follows) "thine house (O David) and thy kingdom shall (in Messiah) be established for ever, before me (before God): thy throne shall be established for ever." Thus the angel, delivering his message to the virgin mother (Luke i. 32, 33) speaks, as if he was quoting from this very prophecy, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever: and of his kingdom there shall be no end." In ver. 16, לְעֶלְמָךְ is here rendered as לְעַלְמֵי, on the authority of one Hebrew MS., with the Gr. and Syr. versions; and indeed nothing could be established for ever in the presence of David, but in the presence of God only. So Dr. S. Clarke.

Having thus shown, that the words fairly admit here the promise made to David, that from his seed should arise Messiah, the everlasting king; it may be necessary to add, that, if the Messiah be the person here meant, as suffering innocently for the sins of others, Solomon cannot be; nor can this be a prophecy admitting such double sense, or be applied properly to two such opposite characters. "Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?" This was a question properly put by the Ethiopian treasurer (Acts viii. 34), who never dreamt, that such a description as he was reading could relate to different persons: and Philip shews him, that the person was Jesus only. So here, it may be asked, Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of Solomon, or of Christ? It must be answered, Of Christ: one reason is, because the description does not agree to Solomon; and therefore Solomon, being necessarily excluded in a single sense, must also be excluded in a double. Lastly: if it would be universally held absurd to consider the promise of Messiah made to Abraham as relating to any other person besides Messiah; why is there not an equal absurdity, in giving a double sense to the promise of Messiah thus made to David?

Next to our present very improper translation, the cause of the common confusion here has been, not distinguishing the promise here made, as to Messiah alone, from another made as to Solomon alone; the first brought by Nathan, the second by Gad; the first near the beginning of David's reign, the second near the end of it; the first, relating to Messiah's spiritual kingdom, everlasting without conditions; the second, relating to the fate of the temporal kingdom of Solomon, and his heirs, depending entirely on their obedience or rebellion. 1 Chron. xxii. 8—13, and xxviii. 7. Let the first message be compared with this second in 1 Chron. xxii. 8—13; which the

Syr. version (at ver. 8) tells us was delivered by a prophet, and the Arab. says, "by the prophet Gad." This second message was after David's many wars, when he had shed much blood; and it was this second message, that, out of all David's sons, appointed Solomon to be his successor. At the time of the first message Solomon was not born; it being delivered soon after David became king at Jerusalem: but Solomon was born at the time of this second message. For though our translation very wrongly says (1 Chron. xxii. 9), "A son shall be born to thee, and his name shall be Solomon;" yet the Hebrew text expressly speaks of him as then born, "Behold, a son, (נָדָה, natus est) is born to thee;" and therefore the words following must be rendered, "Solomon is his name, and I will give peace in his days; he shall build an house for my name, &c."

Bp. Horsley.—10 I will appoint—I will plant—that may dwell—and move no more—neither shall; rather, I have appointed—have planted—and they dwell—and are disturbed no more—neither do.

11 Israel, and have caused thee to rest; rather, Israel: and I have given thee rest.

14 If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men: 15 But my mercy shall not depart away from him, &c.; rather, inasmuch that when guilt is laid upon him, although I chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men; 15 Yet my mercy shall not depart from him, &c.

When guilt is laid upon him. בַּדְּשָׁתוֹ . בַּדְּשָׁתוֹ , is the gerund, in the Niphal form, of the verb דָּשָׁן . Now the verb, in Piel, signifies to find guilty, or to condemn, in a judicial process [see Psalm cxix. 78]. Hence, in Niphal, it should signify to be found guilty, or to be condemned. Here it denotes the imputation of guilt to the Messiah.

The rod of men, the rod due to men. See Kennicott's Posthumous Dissertations.

This rendering of this clause entirely removes its apparent incoherence, as it has been generally understood, with the rest of the prophecy. This clause as it has been generally understood, is inapplicable to the Messiah. All the rest of the prophecy is applicable to him, and some parts of it, in the full extent of the terms, is inapplicable to any one else. It is very remarkable, however, that the whole clause, if he commit iniquity—men, is omitted in the parallel place in the first Book of Chronicles.

16 Before thee. Read, with LXX, and some MSS. of Kennicott's and De Rossi's, wh, before me.

Thy house—thy kingdom—thy throne;—his house—his kingdom—his throne. LXX.

This whole verse is conceived in much stronger terms in the parallel place of the First Book of Chronicles, xvii. 14.

"But I will establish him in my house and in my kingdom for ever, and his throne shall be firm for evermore."

Commentaries and Essays.—16 And thy house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee; thy throne, &c. There is a considerable difference between Samuel and Chronicles in their parallel accounts of this prophecy. In Samuel, these words seem to be spoken of David, thy house, thy kingdom, thy throne. In 1 Chron. xvii. 14, the prophecy relates to the son of David, I will settle him, in my house, and in my kingdom; and his throne, &c. That this relates to the son of David is most probable from the context, as the prophecy relates not to David himself, but the son of David; and that it was originally his house, his kingdom, his throne, here, in Samuel, appears from the Greek version, which has ὁ οἶκος αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁ θρόνος αὐτοῦ. Further, instead of before thee, the Greek has before me, which is undoubtedly right, (so also Syriac, and one MS. reads now wh, and fortè another,) as it certainly refers to God, the speaker here, before me, and so David understood it, as appears from verse 29. This verse then in Samuel, should run thus, and his house and his kingdom shall be established for ever before me, and (the LXX. read the ἡ), his throne shall be for ever firm, and the reading in Chronicles should be settle him in his house, and in his kingdom, and his throne, &c. The LXX. have here βασιλεία αὐτοῦ.

Ged.—9 I have been with thee, in all thy expeditions, and have cut off, from before thee, all thine enemies. Thy name I will render as great as the names of the grandees of the earth: (10) a place, also, I will secure for my people, the Israelites, and so plant them in it, that they shall no more be removed, but remain in their own place: nor shall iniquitous men any more oppress them, (11) as formerly, from the time when I appointed judges to be over my people, the Israelites. To thyself, too, I will give tranquillity from all thine enemies. The Lord moreover assureth thee, that he will build a house for thee: (12) for when thine own days shall be completed, and when with thy forefathers thou shalt sleep, I will place on thy throne a son of thine own seed, of thine own body begotten; and his kingdom I will establish. (13) He will build a house for my name; and I will establish, for ever, the throne of his kingdom. (14) I will be his father, and he shall be my son: if he commit iniquity, I will chastise him with the rod of men, and with human stripes: (15) but my benevolence I will not [LXX, Syr., Arab., Vulg., and two MSS.] withdraw from him, as I did from Saul, whom I rejected from before me [LXX, Syr., and four MSS.]: (16) but his [LXX] house and his [LXX] kingdom shall, for ever, be established, before me: his [LXX] throne shall be, for ever, established.

Booth.—9 And I have been with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have cut off from before thee all thine enemies. Also thy name I will make as great as the name of the great ones, who are on the earth. 10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will so plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and move no more; nor shall wicked men afflict them any more, as formerly; 11 As from the time I appointed judges over my people Israel. To thee also will I give rest from thine enemies. Moreover, I Jehovah declare to thee, that I will build up thy house. 12 For when thy days shall be completed, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will raise up thy seed after thee, the offspring of thine own body, and I will establish his kingdom. 13 He shall build a house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever. 14 I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chastise him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men: 15 But my kindness I will not [LXX., Vulg., Syr., Arab., and two MSS.] withdraw from him as I did from Saul, whom I removed from before thee. 16 And his house and his kingdom shall be established for ever before me: his throne shall be established for ever.

Ver. 18.

יְהוָה הָאֵלֹהִים דָּוִד יָשָׁב לִפְנֵי יְהוָה

καὶ εἰσῆλθεν ὁ βασιλεὺς Δαυὶδ, καὶ ἐκάθισεν ἐνώπιον κυρίου, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—18 Then went king David in, and sat before the Lord, and he said, Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

Pool.—Sat: this word may note either, first, His bodily gesture; for there is no certain gesture to which prayer is limited; and we have examples of saints praying in that posture, Exod. xvii. 12; 1 Kings xix. 4; or he might sit for a season whilst he was meditating upon these things, and then alter this posture (though it be not here expressed), and betake himself to prayer. Or rather, secondly, His continuance there, as this Hebrew word is oft used, as Gen. xxvii. 44; Lev. xiv. 8; 1 Sam. i. 22; xx. 19, that he did not barely present himself before God but abode there for some competent time, that he might with God's leave pour out his soul freely before him.

For howsoever one may in some cases pray sitting, yet it is most probable that David would in this holy place, and upon this occasion, use a more humble and reverent gesture, such as kneeling is, which therefore David prescribeth or adviseth, Psal. xcvi. 6, and Solomon accordingly practiseth, 1 Kings viii. 54; 2 Chron. vi. 13.

Bp. Patrick.—18 Then went king David in, and sat before the Lord.] That is, before the ark; which, as I have often said, was the symbol of his Divine presence. Sitting, among the heathens, was thought a posture proper enough in the Divine service; as Vossius hath observed, lib. ii. De Orig. et Progressu Idololat., cap. 34. Quippe index animi magis compositi, et hoc agentis; “being an indication of a more composed mind, and attending to what they were about.” But among the Israelites none were allowed to sit in the temple, except the king: unto whom this was indulged, if we can believe the Talmudists; whose general maxim was this, “It was not lawful for any one to sit in the court of the house of God; but only for the king of the house of David” (see Selden, lib. ii. De Synedriis, cap. xiii., sect. 4). But they have framed this notion merely from this single passage; there being no other place in the whole Scripture to support this assertion, that the king might sit at prayer; but, on the contrary, on the sabbath, and on festival days, when he came to the temple, he stood by the exterior pillar of the inward court of the house of God; as may be learnt from Ezek. xlvi. 1, 2, compared with 2 Kings xi. 14, and 2 Chron. xxiii. 13. Nor is their any other posture of worship mentioned in Scripture, but standing, or kneeling, or falling on the face. And therefore Abarbinel ingenuously confesses, that this is not the opinion of all their doctors, several of which in this forsake the Talmudists; and allege a weighty reason for it: because the angels themselves, who are higher than kings, are not permitted to sit before the Lord: but Isaiah saith, vi. 2, that the seraphim stood about the throne; and Micaiah saith, he saw the host of heaven stand before the Lord, 1 Kings xxii. 19, and see Zech. iii. 7. From which they conclude, if there be no sitting allowed above, by what right was it granted to the kings of David’s family here below? Many great men therefore translate the Hebrew word jashab, not sat, but remained before the Lord; particularly Vatablus, upon 1 Chron. xvii. 16. And others, who allow the king might sit in the temple, yet confess he might not sit at prayer; and therefore expound this place thus: “He took his seat in the tabernacle before the ark;” and then he made the following prayer, standing up, as the manner was, when they worshipped God.

Ken.—And king David went in and sat before the Lord, &c. It seems very strange, that David, when coming before the ark, to express his solemn thanks, should sit and not rather stand, as Solomon did, 1 Kings iii. 15. The original word here has two significations, as derived from different verbs; in the first verse of this chapter it signifies he sat; but in the twentieth verse of the preceding chapter it signifies, and is properly translated, he returned. David was come back from the ark to his own house, there he passed the night, there he was visited the next day by Nathan, and then he returned to the ark, there to offer up to God his thanksgiving.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—Sat before the Lord]. Sometimes, when a Hindoo seeks a favour from a superior, he sits down in his presence in silence; or if he solicits some favour of a god, as riches, children, &c., he places himself before the idol, and remains in a waiting posture, or repeats the name of the god, counting the beads in his necklace.—Ward.

Ged.—Then David went into the tabernacle; where placing himself before the Lord, he said, &c.

Booth.—Sat before Jehovah]. Sitting as the Arabs do was expressive of the greatest humiliation, and therefore no improper posture for one that appeared before the ark of God.

Dathe.—18 Tum hic locum sacrum rursum adiit et sic coram Jova est precatus.

Rursum adiit. Pro וַיָּשָׁב, et consedit, aliis punctis subjectis, lego וַיֵּשֶׁב. Frustra laborant interpretes in afferenda ratione, cur Davidi licuerit, in loco sacro sedere. Sic quoque Michaelis. Nec tamen diffiteor, ex usu loquendi in hac constructione illud וַיֵּשֶׁב legendum esse ante וַיָּשָׁב.

Ver. 19.

וַתִּקְרָא עוֹד זֶמֶת בְּעֵינֶיהָ אֶלֶּן
יְהוָה וַתִּדְבֹּר בָּם אֶל־בְּרִית־עֲבָדָהּ

לְמַרְיָהוּ וְנָתַת הַתִּיבָה הָאֵלֶּם יְדִנִי

καὶ κατεσμεκρύνθη μικρὸν ἐνώπιόν σου κύριε μου κύριε, καὶ ἐλάλησας ὑπὲρ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ δούλου σου εἰς μακράν. οὗτος δὲ ὁ νόμος τοῦ ἀνθρώπου κύριε μου κύριε.

Au. Ver.—19 And this was yet a small thing in thy sight, O LORD God; but thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. And is this the manner [Heb., law] of man, O LORD God?

Pool.—Is this the manner of man, O Lord God? do men use to deal so freely and kindly with their inferiors, as thou hast done with me? No: this is the prerogative of Divine grace, to give such promises and largesses as this. So these are words of admiration; which very well suit with the foregoing and following words. Or, And is this the manner, or law, or custom of mean or obscure men, &c.? as the Hebrew adam is confessed sometimes to signify, as Psalm xlix. 2; lxii. 9; Isaiah ii. 9; i. e., Is this the manner of men's dealing with mean and obscure persons, such as I am? So the Hebrew haadam is the genitive case of the object, which is frequent in the Hebrew and other languages. And this seems more probable, because it exactly agrees with the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 17, where the words are, thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, i. e. thou hast dealt with me as if I had not been a poor mean shepherd, but the son of some great monarch, to whom such honours best agree.

Bp. Patrick.—19 Next, he magnifies the loving-kindness of God, who did not think it enough that he had made him a great king, but promised his posterity, and at last the Lord Christ, should sit upon his throne. So Abarbinel himself expounds these words, "a great while to come;" intimating, saith he, the Messiah, the son of David. He acknowledges there was no example of such kindness to be found in this world: where kingdoms are not perpetuated, as Abarbinel observes; but this is the manner of angels, who always continue in their dignity.

Ken.—From David's address to God, after receiving the message by Nathan, 'tis plain that David understood the son promised to be the Messiah; in whom his house was to be established for ever. But the words, which seem most expressive of this, are in this verse now rendered very unintelligibly, "and is this the manner of man? Whereas the words וְנָתַת הַתִּיבָה הָאֵלֶּם literally signify, and this is (or must be) the law of the man, or of the Adam, i. e., this promise must relate to the law, or ordinance, made by God to Adam, concerning the seed of the woman; the man, or the second Adam: as the Messiah is expressly called by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 45, 47. This meaning will be yet more evident from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 17: where the words of David are now miserably rendered thus, "and thou hast regarded me, according to the estate of a man of high degree." Whereas the words וְנָתַת הַתִּיבָה הָאֵלֶּם literally signify, and thou hast regarded me, according to the order of the ADAM THAT IS FUTURE, or, THE MAN THAT IS FROM ABOVE (for the word וְנָתַת very remarkably signifies hereafter as to time, and from above as to place): and thus St. Paul, including both senses, "the second man is the Lord from heaven"—and, "Adam is the figure of him that was to come, or the future," Rom. v. 14. See the preface of the late learned Mr. Peters, on Job, referred to, and confirmed as to this interesting point, in a note subjoined to my sermon on "A virgin shall conceive," &c., p. 49—52, 8vo. 1765, a part of that note here follows:—"The speech of David (2 Sam. vii. 18—29) is such, as one might naturally expect from a person overwhelmed with the greatness of the promised blessing: for it is abrupt, full of wonder, and fraught with repetitions. 'And now, what can David say unto thee?' What, indeed! 'For thou, Lord God, knowest thy servant:' thou knowest the hearts of all men, and seest how full my own heart is. 'For thy word's sake,' for the sake of former prophecies; 'and according to thine own heart,' from the mere motive of thy wisdom and goodness; 'hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know them.' I now perceive the reason of those miraculous providences, which have attended me from my youth up; 'taken from following the sheep,' and conducted through all difficulties 'to be ruler of thy people;' and shall I distrust the promise now made me? 'Thy words be true.' If the preceding remarks on this whole passage are just, and well-grounded; then may we see clearly the chief foundation of what St. Peter tells us (Acts ii. 30) concerning David, 'that, being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne.' "

Bp. Horsley.—19 "And is this the manner of man, O Lord God?"

אדם וזאת תורת האדם 2 Sam. vii. 19.

המעלה יהוה אלהים 1 Chr. xvii. 17.

When these two passages are considered in their respective contexts, it is manifest that they are exactly parallel; and both, when rightly understood, must render the very same sense. The varieties in the expression being only such, as the writer in the Book of Chronicles has introduced, according to his manner for the sake of greater accuracy in relating the words of another, or to explain words and phrases that might seem doubtful in the narrative of the more ancient author. Hence it is to be inferred that the words יהוה in Samuel, and אדני in the Book of Chronicles, are words of the very same import, and are to be referred to the same root, differing only in the gender, which is feminine in Samuel, and masculine in Chronicles. The writer of the Book of Chronicles probably preferred the masculine form, to prevent the necessity of referring the noun to the root ירה, from which the feminine יהוה may, but the masculine אדני cannot, be derived. The true root, therefore, in the judgment of the inspired writer of the Book of Chronicles, was אדני; and the two passages may be thus expounded:

2 Sam. vii. 19. "And this [namely, what was said about his house in distant times] is the arrangement about the MAN, O Lord Jehovah."

1 Chron. xvii. 17. "And thou hast regarded me in the arrangement about the MAN that is to be from above, O God Jehovah." That is, in forming the scheme of the incarnation, regard was had to the honour of David and his house as a secondary object, by making it a part of the plan, that the Messiah should be born in his family. This is indisputably the sense of both passages, though far more clearly expressed by the later writer. Compare Dr. Kennicott's Posth. Dr. Kennicott, not perceiving the identity of the two words יהוה and אדני, was not aware that the two passages render the very same sense, with no other difference than the advantage of perspicuity, and perhaps of accuracy, in reciting David's very words, on the side of the author of the Book of Chronicles. I owe, however, to Dr. Kennicott the important hint, that האדם, in Samuel, and האדם המעלה, in Chronicles, allude to Christ, and to none else, which led me to the right understanding of both passages.

Ged.—19 And, as if this were but a small thing, in thy sight, O Lord God! thou hast spoken of thy servant's house, for a great while to come! Such, O Lord God! is the custom of mankind!

Such—is the custom, &c., i. e., as I understand it. This condescension is great indeed! for God to conform himself to our human usages, and show the same solicitude about my posterity, as a parent shows for his own.

Booth.—18 Who am I, O Lord Jehovah! and what is my house, that hitherto thou hast so promoted me? 19 And, as if this was but a small thing in thine eyes, O God Jehovah, thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house, for a great while to come. And is this the manner of man, O God Jehovah?

19 And is this the manner.] Geddes renders, "Such, O Lord God, is the custom of mankind." So Houbigant and others, and they suppose that David wondered that God should show the same solicitude about his posterity, that parents do about their own children. Our version considers it as denoting that the kindness which God had shown, was far beyond what man has either the inclination, or the ability to bestow; and this seems as probable as any.

Houb.—19 Sed et parum tibi hoc fuit, Domine, Deus, meus: Tu enim de domo servi tui in posterum longè provides, ut mos est filiorum hominum.

... וזאת תורה, Ut mos est... Hæc leguntur sic in 1 Paral. xvii. 17, וראיתי בך יהוה המעלה, feciisti me aspectabilem, secundum formam viri excellentis. Incertum nobis est, utrum varia ex scriptura. Sed sententia utraque cum bona sit, nihil hoc loco mutandum. Admiratur David, Deum velle sibi benefacere, vel mortuo, ut mos est hominum, qui benevolentiam suam erga proximos testamento sanciant, voluntque in filios derivari, et esse perpetuam.

* Some of Kennicott's MSS. have אדני, which seems to be the better reading of the two. The sense according to either will be the same.

Dathe.—19 Atque hoc tibi parum visum est, nisi quoque posteris meis longe remotis promiseris, quæ legis instar a te latæ hominibus erunt observanda.

Quæ legis, &c. Ex tot interpretationibus ad verba hæc difficilia וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי allatis eam eligo, quam obiter dedit Celeb. Schnurrerus in fascic. ii. animadv. ad Jobum, p. 9. Nomen rectum sæpe denotat eum, ad quem lex pertinet, ut Levit. xii. 7 וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי, hæc est lex, quæ spectat puerperam; Levit. xiv. 2 וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי; Num. vi. 13, וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי. Sic in nostro loco וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי, lex hominibus observanda, et sensus verborum est: promissio hæc tua vim legis habebit apud homines, quam abs te latam nemo mortalium poterit reddere irritam.

Maurer.—19 וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי Schnurrerus, Schulzius, Dathius hunc horum verborum sensum esse statuunt: et hæc erit lex hominum, hominibus observanda, i. e., promissio hæc tua vim legis habebit apud homines, quam abs te latam nemo mortalium poterit reddere irritam. Coll. Lev. xii. 7: וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי, hæc est lex puerperæ, h. e., quæ spectat puerperam, ib. xiv. 2: וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי, hæc esto lex leprosi, leproso servanda al. At enim vero, quum nostro hoc loco in antecedentibus non, ut in ll. ll. de lege, sed de promissione sermo sit, acriptori, si dicere voluisset, promissionem illam apud posteros vim legis habituram esse, haud dubie dicendum fuisset: וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי. Equidem assentior Grotio ita interpretanti: atqui hæc est consuetudo hominis, non dei (וְהָיָה כְּמִצְוֵי, agendi ratio), i. e., ita familiariter mecum agis, ut homines cum hominibus agere solent. Cf. vs. 14. Quam interpretationem etiam Gesenio et Winero probari video.

23 καὶ τίς ὡς ὁ λαὸς σου Ἰσραὴλ ἔθνος ἄλλο ἐν τῇ γῇ; ὡς ὠδήγησεν αὐτὸν ὁ θεὸς τοῦ λυτρώσασθαι αὐτῷ λαὸν, τοῦ θέσθαι σε ὄνομα, τοῦ ποιῆσαι μεγαλῶσύνην καὶ ἐπιφάνειαν, τοῦ ἐκβαλεῖν σε ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ λαοῦ σου, οὗς ἐλυτρώσω σεαυτῷ ἐξ Αἰγύπτου ἔθνη καὶ σκηνώματα; 24 καὶ ἡτοίμασας σεαυτῷ τὸν λαόν σου Ἰσραὴλ εἰς λαὸν ἔως αἰῶνος, καὶ σὺκύρι ε ἐγένου αὐτοῖς εἰς θεόν.

Au. Ver.—23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?

24 For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, Lord, art become their God.

Hallet.—23 In this verse there are three errors of the transcribers.

1. They have written אֵלֹהִים, i. e., God, they went, as if the word Elohim, required a verb of the plural number. But in the parallel place of the Chronicles, 1 Chron. xvii. 21, the verb is, as it should be, in the singular number, וָיָךְ, he went. The transcribers have taken the ה from the beginning of the latter word, turned it into a י, and then placed it at the end of the former word. See on Gen. xxxi. 53.

2. The transcribers have put in the word, you, and quite spoiled the grammar of this verse. When David was retired from all the world, and speaking to God, it cannot be thought he would, in the manner as here represented, address himself to the Israelites. Every reader will see the error, when he reads this part of the sentence, thus, God went—to do for you great things—before thy people. The sense demonstrates, we should read, them, i. e., thy people Israel, before mentioned. For לָהֶם, it should be לָהֶם: so the Vulgar Latin reads, and the Arabic. The LXX omit the word, and so did the transcriber of Chronicles.

3. The words, for thy land, come in oddly, and disturb the sense. Instead of לפני, for thy land, it should be לשם, to drive out, as it is in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xvii. 21. And then there will be no occasion to supply the word, from, in the last clause of the verse, as our translators have here done; but all would run smooth and easy, as in Chron. thus; to do for them great things and terrible, to drive out before thy people (which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt) the nations and their gods; i. e., to drive out the nations and their gods before thy people.

Ken.—23, 24 Among all the methods of discovering the errors in the present Heb. text, the best is to compare parallel places; the great use of which has been already demonstrated, and will the more fully appear, the more carefully such places are compared. The verses, parallel to those here referred to, are 1 Chron. xvii. 21, 22; and the following comparison of them will discover some corruptions, not variations only, but corruptions, properly so called. For this thanksgiving, or prayer, of David was spoke in only one certain manner; consequently where two copies of it express the same parts in a different manner, it may be presumed that one of the copies is there corrupted.

There being mistakes here in both copies, I shall subjoin what seems to have been the true text; for certainly both places, as they contain the same parts of one and the same appeal to God, must have been one and the same originally.

And what one nation on earth is like thy people, like Israel! whom God went to redeem for a people to himself, and to make himself a name, and to do for them things great and terrible, to drive out from before thy people (whom thou redeemedst to thee out of Egypt) the nations and their gods! And thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel, to be a people unto thee for ever; for thou, JEHOVAH, hast been their God.

I shall now compare the variations, with which the name of God is expressed in these two copies of David's prayer.

1. S. 18. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 16. יהוה אלהים Jehovah Elohim
2. S. 19. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 17. אלהים Elohim
3. S. 19. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 17. יהוה אלהים Jehovah Elohim
4. S. 20. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 19. יהוה Jehovah
5. S. 22. יהוה אלהים Jehovah Elohim
C. 20. יהוה Jehovah
6. S. 25. יהוה אלהים Jehovah Elohim
C. 23. יהוה Jehovah
7. S. 26. יה. צבאות
C. 24. יה. צבאות אלהי ישראל
S. 26. אלהים על ישראל
C. 24. אלהים לישראל
8. S. 27. יהוה צבאות אלהי ישראל
C. 25. אלהי
9. S. 28. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 26. יהוה Jehovah
10. S. 29. אדני יהוה Adonai Jehovah
C. 27. יהוה Jehovah

The first remark on these strange variations may be, that ידני Adonai, being a word of very inferior dignity (used by a servant to his master) is a mean word to be substituted instead of that name, "which is above every name," the awful and incommunicable name Jehovah. That the Jews have superstitiously omitted the latter, and supplied it by the former, has been observed page 158 and 321. And from some places it appears, that where they have retained the word Jehovah, they have put in Adonai before it, to strike the reader's eye first, and so to prevent his pronouncing the word Jehovah after it. We have here several instances, in which the words יהוה אלהים have been changed into יהוה אלהי, as appears from Chronicles, where the word יהוה אלהי is not found once; but even in Samuel the words יהוה אלהים are preserved in the fifth and sixth instances. That the words in the first instance were formerly in Samuel, as they are now in Chron., appears from the Syr. version, the Vulgate, and the Chald. paraphrase; which same authorities are uniform in the second, third, and fourth instances. That Chron. had formerly יהוה אלהי in the second instance, may be presumed from the Chald. paraphrase; and that it had יהוה אלהים in the fourth is confirmed by Kyprie o Theos in the Gr. version. As to the seventh instance, the words יהוה אלהי have perhaps been inserted by mistake; for they are not in Sam. and seem redundant. The eighth instance seems greatly defective in Chronicles. And the ninth and tenth instances seem to have been יהוה אלהים in both copies; Camb. MS. 1 has it so in ver. 28, in Samuel. In the six places in Samuel now יהוה אלהי, the points belong to יהוה אלהים; so that these were certainly the words when the points were first invented: and these are now the words in the Chald. paraphrase. I shall only add, that there appears to be a necessity for allowing, that, in these two copies of the same prayer, spoke once only, the preceding invocations were at first the same.

Ged.—23 For what one nation on the earth is like thy people, the Israelites? What nation is there, which any god hath gone to redeem for a peculiar people; hath, thereby, acquired so great a name, or done so great and wonderful things, as thou hast done, by expelling from before thy people, whom thou redeemedst, for thyself, out of Egypt, whole nations, and their gods? (24) For thy people, the Israelites, thou hast decreed to be thy people for ever; and thou, O Lord! art to be their God.

Booth.—23 And what one nation on the earth is like thy people Israel, whom thou, O God, wentest to redeem for a people to thyself, and to make thyself a name, and to do for them [see note of Hallet above] great and terrible things, to drive out [see note of Hallet] before thy people, whom thou redeemedst to thyself from Egypt, the nations and their gods? 24 For thou hast confirmed to thyself thy people Israel to be thy people for ever; and thou Jehovah art become their God.

Houb.—23 Nam quæ una gens in terrâ, ut populus tuus Israel, unquam fuit, quam Deus per viam deduxerit, ut sibi populum vindicaret, ut ei nomen faceret, ut patraret res mirabiles ac stupendas; ut cum tu coram populo tuo, quem Ægypto redemerat, expulisti gentes et ipsarum Deos? 24 Et cum populum tuum Israel tu tibi proprium in perpetuum fecisti, ut tu, Domine, esses eorum Deus?

23 יהוה אלהים, Duxit eum Deus; melius יהוה אלהי, in voce Hiphil, quam exhibent Græci Intt. hoc modo: ὠδῆγησεν αὐτὸν, duxit eum. Illi qui habent יהוה אלהי, ut verbum plurale iverunt, quique inde colligunt nomen יהוה אלהים, cum Deum verum notat, non respuere numerum pluralem, pugnant cum affixo יי singulari, quod mox sequitur, et præterea sententiæ rectum tramitem deserunt, quæ vult duxit eum (ut redimeret), non autem ivit, quod ivit non bene consociatur cum eodem ut redimeret... וְלַעֲשׂוֹת לָכֵן, et ut faceret vobis, lege וְלָהֶם, illis, tertia in persona, quam sequuntur Vulgatus et Syrus. Davidis sermo est ad Deum, non ad populum; itaque non dixerit לָכֵן, vobis... לְאִשְׁרָאֵל: hæc duo verba dissociabilia sunt. Nam לְפָנַי, a facie (populi tui) causam aliquam indicat, quam notare non potest nomen substantivum terræ tuæ. Est, opinor, antiqua scriptio, וְלִי יֵצֵא, ut expelleres, nisi וְלִי יֵצֵא, ut currere faceres, vel ut verteres in fugam a facie (populi tui gentes.) Legitur loco parallelo וְלִי יֵצֵא, ad expellendum, quod ejusdem sententiæ est, non tamen huc inferendum, quia non satis simile mendo וְלִי יֵצֵא.

Propter eum. Pro לָכֵן legendum puto

Expellendo. Pro עָלָה in loco parallelo 1 Chron. xvii. 21 legitur עָלָה. Sic quoque oi δ: τοῦ ἐκβαλεῖν σε.

Maurer.—23 עָלָה] est dativus commodi s. pleonasticus quem dicunt (ut prius עָלָה vs. 24), ad עָלָה referendus, et hanc ipsam ob causam in plurali positus (ut præcedens עָלָה), nisi fortasse legendum est עָלָה. Transitus a persona tertia ad secundam, quæ etiam in seqq. servatur, nihil miri habet. Plerique pronomen ad populum referentes legi volunt עָלָה. עָלָה וְעָלָה Hæc cum antec. ita junge: quem tibi redemisti ex Ægypto (ejus), gentibus ejusque diis.

Ver. 28.

וְעַתָּה וּמִלְנֵי יְהוָה אֱתָדַחֵנִי
הַמֶּלֶךְ יְהוָה:

καὶ νῦν κύριέ μου κύριε, σὺ εἶ θεός, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—28 And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou hast promised this goodness unto thy servant.

Commentaries and Essays.—And now, O Lord God, thou art that God. This version by no means expresses the true meaning and force of the original; which is אַתָּה הוּא אֱלֹהִים, Thou art He, the God, the God by way of eminence, the true and only God. It might therefore be better expressed perhaps in our idiom, and thou, O Lord God, art the only God, or God alone, לֹד is often understood, when not written, especially, when there is an emphasis in the expression, as here, אַתָּה לֹד. So Ruth i. 17 מוֹת, death alone. The phrase here therefore answers in its true meaning to the parallel one, Is. xxxvii. 16, where לֹד is expressed, אַתָּה מוֹת לֹד.

CHAP. VIII. 1.

וַיְהִי אַחֲרֵיכֵן בָּרַךְ דָּוִד אֶת-פִּלְשְׁתִּים וַיִּכְנֶעֱם וַיִּקַּח דָּוִד אֶת-מֶתֶג אֲמָח

καὶ ἐγένετο μετὰ ταῦτα, καὶ ἐπάταξε Δαυὶδ τοὺς ἀλλοφύλους, καὶ ἐτροπώσατο αὐτούς. καὶ ἔλαβε Δαυὶδ τὴν ἀφωρισμένην ἐκ χειρὸς τῶν ἀλλοφύλων.

Au. Ver.—1 And after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took Methegammah [or, the bridle of Ammah] out of the hand of the Philistines.

Houb., Dathe, Hallet, Booth.—Gath and her towns [pp. 1 Chron. xviii. 1].

Ged.—1 After this, David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: for out of the hands of the Philistines he took Gath, their metropolis.

Pool.—Metheg-ammah, i. e., Gath and her towns, as it is expressed in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xviii. 1, which are called Metheg-ammah, or the bridle of Ammah, because Gath was situate in the mountain of Ammah; and because this being the chief city of the Philistines, and having a king, which none of the rest had, was the bridle which had hitherto kept the Israelites in subjection, but now was taken out of their mouths.

Bp. Patrick.—Metheg-ammah.] That is, the famous city of Gath, and the territories thereof (as it is expounded, 1 Chron. xviii. 1), which is called Metheg-ammah, because it stood upon mount Ammah; and was as a bridle to the whole country, whereby it was kept in obedience. So our translators understand the word Metheg in the margin of our Bibles. But R. Solomon takes it for a goad, or a staff; this city domineering over the Philistines. For we read of no king in any of their other cities; either in Gaza, or Ashdod, or Ekron, or Askelon; but only in this: where Achish formerly reigned, but, it is likely, was dead. There are several other interpretations in Bochart's Hierozoicon, lib. ii., cap. 18, par. i.

Hallet.—Whoever will take the pains to compare this chapter with 1 Chron. xviii., which relates the very same history, and, for the greatest part, in the very same words, will not be able, I should think, to avoid being convinced, that the Jews have been guilty of many errors in transcribing this chapter. In ver. 1 it is said, "David took Metheg-ammah." The critics have not been able to determine what this Metheg-ammah is. Bishop Patrick says, "It is expounded to be Gath, and its territories, 1 Chron. xviii. 1." He should have said, that Metheg-ammah is one of the errata of the scribes, and that they should have written in Sam. as it is in Chron. Gath, and her towns. אַתָּה וְעָלָה is oddly turned into אַתָּה מֶתֶג.

Bp. Horsley.—Metheg-ammah, frenum tributi, Vulg.; the bridle of bondage, Queen Elizabeth's Bible. Whatever may be the meaning of the name, Gath is the place meant. See 1 Chron. xviii. 1.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—David took Metheg ammah.] This is variously translated. The Vulgate has, Tulit David frænum tributi, David removed the bondage of the tribute, which the Israelites paid to the Philistines. Some think it means a fortress, city, or strong town; but no such place as Metheg-ammah is known. Probably the Vulgate is nearest the truth. The versions are all different.

Gesen.—מֶתֶג 3. i. q. מֶתֶג No. 7, metropolis. 2 Sam. viii. 1, and David took the bridle (bit) of the metropolis out of the hand of the Philistines, i. e., he subdued the metropolis of the Philistines. Au. Ver.—2 And he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. And so the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

Pool.—With a line, i. e., as with line, the particle as being oft understood, as Psal. xi. 1; xxii. 6; xlv. 1. The sense is, having conquered the land, he made an estimate of it, and, as it follows, distributed the towns and people into three parts.

Dr. A. Clarke.—And measured them with a line—even with two lines.] It has been generally conjectured that David, after he had conquered Moab, consigned two-thirds of the inhabitants to the sword; but I think the text will bear a meaning much more reputable to that king. The first clause of the verse seems to determine the sense; he measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground—to put to death, and with one line to keep alive. Death seems here to be referred to the cities by way of metaphor; and from this view of the subject we may conclude that two-thirds of the cities, that is, the strong places of Moab, were erased; and not having strong places to trust to, the text adds, So the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts, i. e., were obliged to pay tribute. The word line may mean the same here as our rod, i. e., the instrument by which land is measured. There are various opinions on this verse, with which I shall not trouble the reader. Much may be seen in Calmet and Dodd.

Bp. Horsley.—Casting them down to the ground; rather, laying them along upon the ground.

Ged.—2 He also smote the Moabites: whom, being laid on the ground, he measured with a line. Two line-lengths of them he measured out to be put to death, and one line-length to be kept alive. Thus the Moabites became David's subjects, and brought him presents.

Booth.—2 And he smote the Moabites; whom, being laid on the ground, he measured with a line. He measured two line-lengths; a line-length to put to death, and one full line-length to keep alive. Thus the Moabites became David's servants, and brought gifts.

Au. Ver.—3 David smote also Hadad-ezer [or, Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 3], the son of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.

Ged.—Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 3.

Pool.—Hadad-ezer, called Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 3, the Hebrew letters daleth and resch being alike, and so oft interchanged [so Bochart, Patrick]. As he went. Quest. Who? Annw. Either, first, Hadarezer [so Clarke, Ged., Booth., Dathe, Maurer]; who, being already very potent, and going to enlarge his dominion further, David thought fit to oppose him. Or, secondly, David [so Patrick], who remembering the grant which God had made to his people of all the land as far as Euphrates, and having subdued his neighbouring enemies, went to recover his rights, and establish his dominion as far as Euphrates.

Bp. Patrick.—As he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. That is, as David went to extend the limits of his kingdom (according to the ancient prophecy, Gen. xv. 18) towards the river Euphrates, he smote this king, who came out, perhaps, to oppose him. See 1 Chron. xviii. 3, where it is said, "he went to establish his dominions by the river Euphrates:" which seems to relate to David, not to Hadad-ezer.

Hallet.—3 It is said, he (meaning Hadad-ezer) went to recover his border at the river Euphrates. 1 Chron. xviii. 3, it is, he (meaning David) went to stablish his dominion by the river Euphrates. The difference between the Hebrew in these places, is but in one letter. In Samuel the word is וַיִּשָּׁב, to recover, in Chronicles it is וַיִּסְבֵּב, to stablish. The old versions of Samuel shew that they read to stablish. Only the Targum agrees with the present corruption of the Hebrew. The next word ו, should, in both places, have been rendered border, or in both dominion. The transcriber of the Book of Samuel carelessly omitted the word, Euphrates, at the end of the verse; and the superstitious Jews continue to omit the word, only leaving a space for it, and writing, under the line, the points that belong to the word. The word is well retained in Chronicles, and from thence well supplied in this place by our translators; as it is retained in all the ancient versions, even in the Chaldee itself.

Boothroyd's Heb. Bible.—3 Hallet proposes to read here as in 1 Chron. xviii. 3; but on examining the narrative, I conceive that each account is correct; and that the text in Chronicles is synonymous with this; that בִּלְתָּו there does not refer to David, but to Hadarezer—צִיבָה. This is supposed to be Nesibis. Saul had probably wrested from him, or his predecessor, a part of his territory (see 1 Sam. xiv. 47), which he now attempted to recover. By the re-conquest of his territory, and the subjection of the Syrians of Damascus, the Israelites were now, and not until now, in the possession of the promised land in its full extent. Comp. Gen. xv. 18, Deut. i. 7, Josh. i. 4.

Bp. Horsley.—To recover; rather, to establish. 1 Chron. xviii. 3, LXX, and Vulgate.

Ged.—3 David also smote Hadar-ezer, king of Zoba; who came to re-establish his power by the river Euphrates.

Gesen.—Hiph. וַיִּשָּׁב. 7. Seq. אֵל, אֶל, to turn to, towards, upon any one, e. g. a) אֶל יָדוֹ וַיִּשָּׁב, to turn one's hand upon or against any one, Is. i. 25; Am. i. 8; Ps. lxxxi. 15; seq. 2 id. 2 Sam. viii. 3.

Dathe—3 Porro profigavit Hadadeserum, Rechobi filium, regem Nesibrensem, qui ultra Euphratem imperii sui limites propagare tentavit.

Au. Ver.—4 And David took from him [or, of his] a thousand chariots [as 1 Chron. xviii. 4], and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: and David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots.

Seven hundred horsemen.

Lud. Capellus, Grotius, Houb., Hallet, Ged., Booth.—Seven thousand [LXX, Josephus, and p. 1 Chron. xviii. 4] horsemen.

Pool.—Chariots; which word is fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xviii. 4, such substantives being oft understood in the Hebrew language, as Gen. xxvi. 30; 2 Sam. xxi. 16. Seven hundred horsemen, or seven hundred companies of horsemen, i. e., in all seven thousand; as it is 1 Chron. xviii. 4; there being ten in each company, and each ten having a ruler or captain, Exod. xviii. 21; Deut. i. 15. Or these seven hundred were the chief and the rulers of the rest, and the remaining six thousand three hundred were the common horsemen, subject to their commanders. Houghed all the chariot horses, except the following reserve.

VOL. II.

Chariots are here put for chariot horses, as they are 1 Sam. xiii. 5; 2 Sam. x. 18; Psal. lxxvi. 6.

Bp. Patrick.—A thousand chariots.] The word chariots is not in the Hebrew: but it is well supplied by our translators, out of 1 Chron. xvi. 4, in which book many things are explained which are briefly related here.

Seven hundred horsemen.] Here again is an ellipsis, as in the foregoing words: for in 1 Chron. xviii. 4, it is said seven thousand. But as after a thousand something is to be understood, viz. chariots: so after seven hundred something is to be understood, viz., captains (as Abarbinel explains it), under whom a great many others served, so that commanders and soldiers made in all, seven thousand. Such an ellipsis is observed in this very book, v. 8, "Whosoever smites the Jebusites, and the blind, and the lame," &c. It is not said what shall be their reward; which is plainly mentioned 1 Chron. xi. 6, where it is said, he shall be chief (see l'Empereur on Bava-kama, cap. 7, sect. 7).

David houghed all the chariot horses.] Here again is the same ellipsis, for there is no word in the Hebrew for horses. Yet the meaning can be nothing else, but that he cut the hamstrings of the horses that drew their chariots, and made them unserviceable hereafter (see Josh. xi. 9). Thus, in x. 18, David is said to have slain seven hundred chariots; that is, the horses of so many chariots: and in Psalm lxviii. 18, by "the chariots of the Lord," some understood horsemen: and lxxvi. 6, "the chariot and horse," &c.; that is, as well the horses that drew the chariot, as they that rode in it (see Bochartus, in his Hieroz., par. i., lib. ii., cap. 6).

Hallet.—4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen. Our translators have well noted, that there is no word for chariots in this place, in the Hebrew, by causing it to be printed in a different letter. It is well supplied out of 1 Chron. xviii. 4. The Greek and Syriac versions of Samuel retain the word, and there can be no doubt, but it originally belonged to the text of Samuel: since no figure of speech will bear out a writer in saying a thousand were taken, when he does not let his readers know whether they were chariots, asses, mules, &c., or 1,700 horsemen. This shows how merry Bishop Patrick's note is on this omission. It is supplied, says he, out of Chron., "in which book many things are explained, which are briefly related here." His next is equally surprising, viz.:

"And seven hundred horsemen.] Here again is an ellipsis, as in the foregoing words. For in 1 Chron. xviii. 4, it is said, seven thousand." This figure ellipsis will, it seems, do wonders. It will excuse a writer when he omits the most essential words of a sentence. I do not see then, why the same excuse should not be made for a transcriber, when he omits a whole sentence, and the omission be called by the soft name of an ellipsis, when it is really a blunder. Supposing the transcribers had been guilty of the same ellipsis or omission in Chronicles as they have in Samuel, it would not have been possible (if the old versions had been laid aside), to have known what those thousand things were which David took. We might as well have supposed they were horses as chariots, especially since he next mentions the horsemen. The other instances there produced by the Bishop are of the same kind, except that about David's houghing the chariots, in this same verse. As to which he says, "The meaning can be nothing else, but that he cut the hamstrings of the horses that drew their chariots." I see no necessity to suppose that horses are here intended. Both Samuel and Chronicles exactly agree in reading יַעַץ מֵאֵל לִי הָרַבָּה which ought to be rendered, he destroyed all the chariots, or made them useless. To show the justness of this rendering, it must be observed, that the word יַעַץ is used seven times in the Old Testament. In two places it signifies, to hough horses, or to cut their hamstrings, Josh. xi. 6, 9. In both which places the word horses is expressly mentioned. In two other places it is rendered, to pluck up, or root up; Eccles. iii. 2, a time to pluck up that which is planted; Zeph. ii. 4, Ekrone shall be rooted up. In the fifth place it is translated, to dig down, Gen. xlix. 6, they digged down a wall: which the Bishop inclines to think is the true rendering of that place, and not the marginal. The other two places where this word is used are those now under consideration. It appears from this view of the use of the word יַעַץ, that when horses are not mentioned with it, there is no occasion for us to think of them. The general meaning of the word appears to be spoiling, hurting, destroying, or to that purpose. For houghing, plucking up, rooting up, and digging down, are various methods of spoiling or hurting things. The word may as well be applied to a chariot, as it confessedly is to a plant, a town, or a wall. It will signify that the chariots were spoiled, or rendered useless; and we may allow that the manner of spoiling them was like that of spoiling the horses, viz., cutting the cords or leathers that fastened one part of the chariot to another.

The very great utility of comparing parallel places may be further ascertained, by a comparison of some parts of the chapters above specified.

Without remarking all the differences in these passages, it may be observed in general—that I by no means suppose every variation here to be a corruption, and yet that I cannot suppose these passages uncorrupted. Are we to believe, that the same man is properly called Hadadezer and Hadarezer—or Ahimelech and Abimelech, &c. Are we to say, with Bishop Patrick, that Methegammah in Samuel, is expounded to be Gath and its territories in Chronicles—or, that 700 in Samuel and 7,000 in Chronicles agree in sense, only the number in Samuel is expressed by an ellipsis? Other interrogatories might be put, and the impossibility of supposing the text entire in these passages might be largely insisted on. But as judicious remarks have been made on some of these mistakes by Mr. Hallet, I shall only mention one. The text in Chronicles tells us that “David took 1,000 chariots, and 7,000 horsemen, and 20,000 footmen.” But in Samuel that “David took 1,000 (what?) and 700 horsemen, and 20,000 footmen.” The omission of the word רב, chariots, seems indubitable: LXX, χίλια ἄρματα. But, how are we to account for the surprising variation in the numbers; since שבע מאות, 700, and שבע אלפים, 7,000, differ widely in letters and signification? We have here then another confirmation of what was supposed, page 96, &c., that the Jews formerly expressed the Bible numbers by single letters; and then the mistake is easy—י being 7,000, and י 700. The same mistake occurs in 2 Sam. x. 18, 700 י, which in 1 Chron. xix. 18, is 7,000 י. Will any other hypothesis so naturally solve this repeated difficulty?

Bp. Horsley.—A thousand chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and &c. The word chariots is very properly inserted, upon the authority of the parallel place in Chronicles, and the version of the LXX here. In the parallel place in the book of Chronicles, and in the version of the LXX, the number of horsemen is 7,000, instead of 700, as we read here in the Hebrew text. I am much inclined to think that the true reading in both places is thus, “seven hundred chariots and a thousand horsemen.” If these horsemen were, as I vehemently suspect, men riding astride on the horses that drew the cars, if each car was drawn by a pair of horses, the number of horsemen, if all were taken, should be double the number of the cars. See 1 Sam. xiii. 5. But of 1,400 such horsemen it may easily be imagined 400 were killed.

Houghed all the chariot-horses; rather, “crippled all the chariots, except that he reserved of them,” &c. “Crippled,” namely by breaking the wheels, or the axles. See LXX, Queen Elizabeth’s Bible, and Parkhurst, פָּרַר.

Dr. A. Clarke.—A thousand chariots.] It is strange that there were a thousand chariots, and only seven hundred horsemen taken, and twenty thousand foot. But as the discomfiture appears complete, we may suppose that the chariots, being less manageable, might be more easily taken, while the horsemen might, in general, make their escape. The infantry also seem to have been surrounded, when twenty thousand of them were taken prisoners.

David houghed all the chariot horses.] If he did so, it was both unreasonable and inhuman; for, as he had so complete a victory, there was no danger of these horses falling into the enemy’s hands; and if he did not choose to keep them, which indeed the law would not permit, he should have killed them outright; and then the poor innocent creatures would have been put out of pain. But does the text speak of houghing horses at all? It does not. Let us hear: וַיִּפֹּץ דָּוִד אֶת כָּל הָרֶכֶת וְאֶת הָאֶרֶץ, And David disjointed all the chariots, except a hundred chariots which he reserved for himself. Now, this destruction of the chariots was a matter of sound policy, and strict piety. God had censured those who trusted in chariots; piety therefore forbade David the use of them: and lest they should fall into the enemy’s hands, and be again used against him, policy induced him to destroy them. The Septuagint render the words nearly as I have done, καὶ παρέλυσεν Δαυὶδ πάντα τὰ ἄρματα.

He kept however one hundred; probably as a sort of baggage or forage wagons.

Gesen.—פָּרַר Piel, to hamstring, to hough, e. g., a horse, i. e., to cut the sinews of the hind feet, by which the animal is rendered wholly useless and unable to stand, Josh. xi. 6, 9; 2 Sam. viii. 4; 1 Chron. xviii. 4; of a bullock, Gen. xlix. 6. Sept., νευροκοπεῖν. This was often and is still done in war by the victors, when unable to carry off with them the horses captured.—Arab. عَقَر id.

Au. Ver.—7 And David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadad-ezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew particle el, which we translate on, may better be translated with; that is, in the custody of Hadad-ezer's servants, who were officers in his treasury: for it is not likely they brought them into the field of battle. So Pool.

Hallet.—7 The shields of gold that were on the servants. This is the sense of the place. But it is not easy to suppose this to be the true rendering of the preposition אֶל, as Bishop Patrick could not but observe. It should be עִם, as it is in 1 Chron. xviii. 7.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The shields of gold.] We know not what these were. Some translate arms, others quivers, others bracelets, others collars, and others shields. They were probably costly ornaments by which the Syrian soldiers were decked and distinguished. And those who are called servants here, were probably the choice troops or body-guard of Hadadezer, as the argyraspides were of Alexander the Great. See Quintus Curtius.

Gesen.—שָׁלֹם m. (r. שָׁלַם) only plur. שָׁלֹמִים, shields, apparently so called from being hard or perhaps tough; see the signification of the Arabic root under שָׁלַם, and comp. the noun שָׁלַם. 2 Sam. viii. 7, וַיְהִי שָׁלֹם, shields of gold. 2 Kings xi. 10; 2 Chron. xxiii. 9; Cant. iv. 4; Ez. xxvii. 11, in which passages shields are spoken of as suspended for ornament upon the walls. Jer. li. 11, sharpen the arrows, מִלֵּשָׁם הַשָּׁלֹם, fill out the shields, i. e., put them on, see in p. 428; or also darts. Comp. سَلَط, arrow.

The signification here given has been adopted by most commentators from Kimchi onwards, and is supported by probable etymology, by the context of all the passages, and by the authority of the ancient versions. Thus the Targums and Syriac version often retain the same word, as being common in Aramæan; but the Chaldee translator of the Chronicles gives it in two places by shields, 1 Chron. xviii. 7, 2 Chron. xxiii. 9; and the translator of Jeremiah, cap. xiii. 23, uses the words מִתְּחִלָּה שָׁלֹם to denote the spots of the leopard, as resembling the figure of a shield. Among the later Syrians this word appears to have become obsolete; for Bar Bahlûl, in Lex. Oxon. Ms. under מִלֵּשָׁם, himself fluctuates between the various opinions of Syrian interpreters, the most of whom however understand by it quivers.

Prof. Lee.—שָׁלֹם. A word variously translated and of doubtful import. Arab.

سَلَط, durus; سَلِيط, acutus. Arms of some kind, but whether offensive or defensive, appears uncertain, usually shields, 2 Samuel viii. 7; 2 Kings xi. 10; Ezekiel xxvii. 11, &c. LXX. ὅπλα, pharétras, βολίδες, χλιδῶνας, κλουούς, ἐρισσοῦς. Sym. πανοπλία. Vulg. arma, armatura, peltas, pharetras.

And from Betah.

Boothroyd.—And from Tibbath.] In the parallel place these names are Tibbath and Chun. I have adopted the first as most probably the true reading here, as it is in the versions mentioned; and I consider that Berothai ought to be restored there for the same reason. 1 Chron. xviii. 8.

Took exceeding much brass.

Ged.—Brought a very great quantity of brass, of which Solomon, afterward, made the brazen sea, the columns, the lavers, and all the other utensils of the temple [LXX and Jos.].

Hallet.—8 And from Beta, and from Berothai, cities of Hadarezer. In Chron. it is, likewise from Tibhath, and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer. Here is a difference between all these three proper names. Hadarezer in Chron. is always called Hadadazer in Samuel: an easy mistake, ו written for ר. The names of his two cities are written very differently: though we may see somewhat of the occasion of the difference. In Samuel the words are וסנחא וסנחא. In Chronicles the words are וסנחא וסנחא. The first name is plainly the same, only the two first letters are dislocated. In Sam. it is spelt וסנחא, in Chron. it is וסנחא. The other name כן is turned into כנ. The change of כ into כ is not difficult; and the ו is taken from the end of the first name in Chron. וסנחא. To confirm the reader in the reasonableness of the alteration I here propose in Sam., it must be observed that here in Sam. the first name is spelt Tebah, in the LXX, Syr., and Arab. But perhaps the other name is spelt right in Sam. and wrong in Chronicles. For in Chron. the Syr. calls this city, Berothai, as in Sam. and the LXX in both places render the name of it, τῶν ἐκλεκτῶν, the chosen; which shows that they read, Berothai, in both places, which they derived from כנ, he chose. At the end of this verse the LXX add what we read in the end of the parallel verse in Chron., Brass, wherewith Solomon made the brazen sea, and the pillars, and the lavers, and all the vessels. This I suppose, was omitted by the Bishop's figure ellipsis.

Au. Ver.—13 And David gat him a name when he returned from smiting [Heb., his smiting, or, slaying] of the Syrians in the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men.

14 And he put garrisons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he garrisons, and all they of Edom became David's servants. And the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went.

Pool.—13 Gat him a name, i. e., much increased his reputation. The Syrians, or Edomites, as they are said to be, 1 Chron. xviii. 12. It is likely these two people were confederates, and that divers of the Syrians whom David had defeated in Syria fled to Edom, and there joined with them against their common enemy, and made up together a very great army (as the number of the men slain in it sheweth), consisting of the veteran soldiers of both countries; although the slaughter here following may seem not to have been of the Syrians, as the words at first reading seem to intimate, but of the Edomites; (it not being probable that the Syrians would come so far from their own country, as to the valley of salt, to fight;) and this verse may be read thus, and that very agreeably to the Hebrew: And David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians, in smiting (which is easily repeated out of the last clause, according to the common usage of Scripture) in the valley of salt eighteen thousand men, who were Edomites, as is sufficiently implied here in the next verse, and expressed 1 Chron. xviii. 12. The valley of salt; a place in Edom so called, either from its neighbourhood to the Salt Sea, or for some other cause now unknown. Being eighteen thousand men; as it is also 1 Chron. xviii. 12, where also they are said to be smitten by Abishai, because he was then a chief commander of the army under David, and, it may be, began the fight; as, for the like reason they are said to be smitten by Joab, Psal. lx., title, where also there are only 12,000 mentioned; which place, if it speak of this battle, the state of it was this: Abishai begins the combat, and kills 6,000; after him comes in Joab, and kills 12,000 more, which makes up this 18,000. But why may not that be another history and battle? So the Edomites and Syrians together did first fight with Abishai, and lost 18,000 men, and afterwards recruited their forces and fought with Joab, and lost other 12,000 men. Nor is it strange if two battles were fought in one place; of which there are divers instances in historians.

Bp. Patrick.—13 David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians.] His victory over that people (mentioned ver. 5), when they came to succour Hadad-ezer, gained him a great reputation, as a potent prince, and a mighty warrior.

In the valley of salt, being eighteen thousand men.] There is nothing in the Hebrew answering to the word being: which therefore should be translated, "in the valley of salt eighteen thousand men." That is, he slew of the Edomites so many, besides the two and twenty thousand of the Syrians. So we read expressly 1 Chron. xviii. 12, and in the title of the sixtieth Psalm it is said, they were Edomites, not Syrians, who were slain in this valley. Only in that place of the Psalms, there is mention of no more than twelve thousand slain: which makes some think it speaks of a distinct battle from this. But Abishai, who began the fight, perhaps, slew six thousand, and then Joab, coming in with his reserve, slew twelve thousand more; which, in all, make eighteen thousand. By the valley of salt, Epiphanius understands the Dead Sea, which was formerly a famous valley, or rather it was a valley near that sea. But neither of these opinions has any good foundation, as Salmasius shows: who takes this valley of salt to have been in the country of Edom, where this battle was fought; and to be called by this name, either from the salt springs which were therein, or from the salt that was digged up there (see his Exercit. Plinianæ, cap. 35, pages 613, 614).

Bishop Horsley.—13 Syrians. From the parallel place in Chronicles, namely, 1 Chron. xviii. 12, it is evident that this slaughter in the valley of salt was a slaughter of Edomites. And instead of אֲדָמִים, the LXX in this place read אֲרָמִים. But the passage seems to require further correction. I would read thus, יָצָא דָּוִד שָׁם בְּשָׁנֵי מַלְחָתוֹ אֶת אֲרָם בְּיַד מַאֲדָּם בְּנֵי מִלְּחָה "And David acquired fame upon his return from his defeat of the Syrians. For he smote of Edom, in the valley of salt, eighteen thousand." The similitude of the words אֲרָם and מַאֲדָּם was the occasion that some early transcriber overlooked the two words אֲדָמִים אֲרָם, and thus the word

Ged.—13 "And David, on his return from smiting the Syrians, erected a monument. Meanwhile Abishai Ben-Zeruia having slain of the Edomites, in the vale of Melah, eighteen thousand men, he put garrisons throughout all Edom."

A whole line has been dropped out of the original of this verse; which I have supplied from Chronicles. While David was in person carrying on the war against the Syrians, &c. Abishai, one of his generals, subdued the Edomites.

Booth.—13 And David, on his return from smiting the Syrians, erected a monument. Meanwhile Abishai, the son of Zeruiah, slew of the Edomites, in the valley of salt, eighteen thousand men. 14 And he put garrisons in Edom.

Pool.—Recorder ; either, first, The writer of chronicles. But it is not likely he would have been put among the great officers of state and church. Or, secondly, The treasurer, who examined all the accounts, and kept records of them. Or, thirdly, The king's counsellor, as Ahithophel is called, 2 Sam. xv. 12; 1 Chron. xxvii. 33, who was to bring things of moment to the king's mind and remembrance, and to admonish him from time to time of things fit to be done. See 1 Kings iv. 3; 2 Kings xviii. 18.

Bp. Patrick.—Recorder.] The Hebrew word mazkir, importing something of keeping in memory, or bringing to remembrance, moved our translators to render it recorder or remembrancer, as if he wrote the acts of every day, which afterward were digested into annals. But this, sure, was not so considerable an employment as to make him that had it the prime civil officer in the kingdom, as Joab was the military. Therefore Victorinus Strigelius takes him to have been the chancellor of the kingdom: which is more likely than their opinion, who take him for the master of requests, who presented petitions, and put the king in mind of them.

Pool.—The son of Ahitub; not of that Ahitub, 1 Sam. xxii.; for that was of Ithamar's race, but this of Eleazar. Ahimelech the son of Abiathar; so Abiathar called his son by the name of his father, 1 Sam. xxii. 20. The priests, i. e., the chief priest next under Abiathar, who fled to David,

1 Sam. xxii. 20, and now was high priest, as may be gathered from 2 Sam. xv. 35; 1 Kings ii. 27, 35: under him these two were the next chief priests, or the second priests, each one being chief of the house of his father, Zadok of Eleazar, and Ahimelech of Ithamar. See Numb. iii. 32; 1 Chron. xxiv. 3, 4. Or these two are here mentioned, because they constantly attended upon the king, that he might consult with them in the matters of the Lord, as need required.

Bp. Patrick.—Zadok—and Ahimelech—were the priests.] These two were the chief of the family of priests; next to the high-priest, which was Abiathar: called second priests in 2 Kings xv. 18. The former was of the family of Eleazar (1 Chron. vi. 5), the other of Ithamar.

Dathe, Ged., Booth.—17 “And Zadock, the son of Ahitub, and Abiathar, the son of Ahimelech [Syr., Arab.; so Gesen.], were the priests; and Seraiah was the scribe.”

The text remains a proof either of the negligence or ignorance of the Jewish critics. It is certain from 1 Sam. xxi. 1, and xxii. 9, that Ahimelech was the father, not son, of Abiathar; yet this error has been suffered to remain in the text both here and in 1 Chron. xviii. The Syr. only reads right.

Dathe.—Cum ex 1 Sam. xxi. 1 et xxii. 9 constat, Ebjatharum filium Achimelechi fuisse, et sic quoque 1 Chron. xviii. 16 legatur, vix dubitari potest, nomina hæc h. l. esse transposita, errore tamen peranti-quo in codd. Nam unus Syrus illam lectionem exhibet, ol 6, Vulg., Chaldaeus receptam.

Sed constat ex 1 Sam. xxii. 9, 11, 12, 20, Achimelechum filium Achitubi fuisse, Abjatarum vero Achimelechi. Igitur vix dubitari potest, legendum esse: [חֲדָק בֶּן־אֶחֱיָמֶלֶךְ וְאַבְיָתָר בֶּן־אֶחֱמֵלֶךְ]. Falsa lectio haud dubie hac ratione orta est. Nimirum sciolus quidam quum vidisset, Abjatarum et patrem et avum, Zadoki vero ne patrem quidem commemorari, vitium subesse suspicans, avum, quem non opus fuerat commemorare, Zadoki patrem fecit, Achimelechum vero, ne hic patre careret, in filium Abjatarum vertit.

Bp. Patrick.—Seraiah was the scribe.] Secretary of state, as we now speak; or, as others imagine, clerk of the council, who set down all acts and decrees; others, the keeper of the public accounts. But the Hebrew word sopher (which we translate scribe) importing something of learning (as the word scribe in the New Testament doth), I take him to have been his prime counsellor in the law, who always attended him. Constantine L'Empereur thinks there were two sorts of scribes, an ecclesiastical and a civil; and here understands the latter; and would have him signify no more than the muster-master of the army (see his Annot. on Bertram De Repub. Jud., p. 383, &c.).

Pool.—Was over: these words are supplied out of the parallel place, 1 Chron. xviii. 17, and out of 2 Sam. xx. 23, where they are expressed.

The Cherethites and Pelethites were undoubtedly soldiers, and such as were eminent for their valour and fidelity to the king, as is evident from 2 Sam. xv. 18; xx. 7; 1 Kings i. 38, 44; and most probably they were the king's guards, which consisted of these two bands, who might be distinguished either by their several weapons, or by the differing time or manner of their service. They are supposed to be thus called, either first, from their office, which was, upon the king's command, to cut off or punish offenders, and to preserve the king's person, as their names in the Hebrew tongue may seem to imply; or, secondly, from some country or place to which they had relation. As for the Cherethites, it is certain that they were either a branch of the Philistines, or a people neighbouring to them and confederate with them, as is manifest from 1 Samuel xxx. 14; Ezek. xxv. 16; Zeph. ii. 4, 5. And so might the Pelethites be too, though that be not related in Scripture. And these Israelites and soldiers of David might be so called, either because they went and lived with David when he dwelt in those parts; or from some notable exploit against or victory over these people; as among the Romans the names of Asiaticus, Africanus, &c., were given for the same reason. One of their exploits against the Cherethites is in part related 1 Samuel xxx. 14. And it is likely they did many other against them, and against other people, amongst which the Pelethites might be one. Were chief rulers; had the places of greatest authority and dignity conferred on them.

Bp. Patrick.—18 Benaiah—was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; Or, the Crethites and the Plethites, as some pronounce these words. What they were is variously conjectured. The most idle conceit is that of some of the Jewish doctors who take them for the members of the great Sanhedrin, nay, for urim and thummim (see Selden, lib. ii. De Synedr. cap. 15, p. 601, and cap. 16, p. 668). Certain it is that they were soldiers, as appears from xv. 18, xx. 7, 1 Kings i. 34, where they are mentioned as present at the proclaiming king Solomon against Adonijah; which could not have been done safely without some armed force; and if they were not the persons, there were none. Yet they were not common soldiers, but the constant guards of David's person: like the prætorian bands among the Romans. So Josephus calls them σωματοφύλακες, "keepers of the body," who never departed from the place where the king was: as we may be satisfied by this, that they had a peculiar commander and were not under Joab, the captain of the host; but are distinguished from his soldiers, xx. 6, 7. Some make them men of a gigantic stature, but I know no ground for that; though, no doubt, they were proper men, as we speak, robust and of tried fidelity; who, in the rebellion against David, did not desert David, but stuck close to him (xv. 18). It is further probable, that they were selected out of a certain nation or family. For the Cherethites inhabited part of Palestine, and were indeed the same with the Philistines, as I observed upon 1 Sam. xxx. 14, and see Zeph. ii. 5. The Pelethites, it is likely, were a family in Israel: for we find two of the name of Peleth mentioned in Scripture: one of the tribe of Reuben, Numb. xvi. 1, another of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 33. Their arms were bows and arrows, and slings, if we may believe the Chaldee interpreter, who calls them archers and slingers: as Procopius Gazæus calls them jaculatores et sagittarios. Which may be confirmed by this conjecture, that the Philistines having sorely galled the Israelites, in the fatal battle with Saul, by their archers, David took care not only to have his people instructed in the use of the bow, but also procured some archers from the Cherethites, who were a part of the Philistines, to be his guard: as some princes now get the Switzers (see my notes upon 1 Sam. xxxi. 3, and upon the first chapter of this book, ver. 18). The number of them may be probably gathered from the targets and shields of gold that Solomon made, which were five hundred (1 Kings x. 16, 17), and were for the use of his guard (2 Chron. xii. 9—11), and kept in the guard chamber.

They that would see more of them, may look into a little treatise of Opitius, which is wholly upon this subject: and Fortunatus Scacchus treats largely of them in his Myrothecium, iii., cap. 16—18, where he hath this singular opinion, p. 181, that the Cherethites were inferior to the Pelethites: but, I think, with reason concludes, that they were the king's domestics and lay in his palace, or about it, in the night: which he gathers from 1 Kings i. 33, where David bids Nathan, and Zadok, and Benaiah, take with them the servants of their lord, and make Solomon king; and accordingly they took the Cherethites and the Pelethites with them (ver. 38); and from the story of that brave man Uriah, who would not go to his own house to his wife, when Joab and the host lay in the field; but went and slept at the door of the king's house "with the servants of his lord;" that is, with these Cherethites and Pelethites (ch. xi. of this book, ver. 9).

David's sons were chief rulers.] So the Hebrew word cohen often signifies, not only a priest, but a prince; as many learned men have observed; particularly Hackspan, in his Miscellanea, lib. i., cap. 5, sect. 15, but especially Selden, lib. ii. de Synedr., cap. 16, p. 671, &c., where he shows, that the Hebrew word signifies any minister, either of God or of man: as in the twentieth chapter of this book (ver. 26), Ira, the Jairite, is said to be a cohen, which we translate chief ruler about David: and so the Chaldee, and the Spanish Jews, a principal officer. But by the law, neither he nor David's sons could be priests. There can be therefore, no doubt of this, that they were the principal officers in the court of David, the prime ministers of his house-hold: such as, among us, are the lord high-chamberlain, steward, treasurer, &c., as appears from 1 Chron. xviii. 17, where this matter is thus explained, "they were at the hand of the king;" waiting on him, as chief officers in his court, or, as Cornelius Bertram explains it, publicos et primarios ministros, "the public and principal ministers of state" (see Bochartus, lib. ii. Canaan, cap. 17). And this was the reason, they say, of Absalom's discontent, that he was not one of these Ἀυλάρχαι; or, had not a place according to his mind.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The Cherethites and the Pelethites.] The former supposed to be those who accompanied David when he fled from Saul; the latter, those who came to him at Ziklag. But the Targum translates these two names thus, the archers and the slingers; and this is by far the most likely. It is not at all probable that David was without a company both of archers and slingers. The bow is celebrated in the funeral lamentation over Saul and Jonathan; and the sling was renowned as the weapon of the Israelites, and how expert David was in the use of it we learn from the death of Goliath. I take for granted that the Chaldee paraphrast is correct. No weapons then known were equally powerful with these; the spears, swords, and javelins, of other nations were as stubble before them. The bow was the grand weapon of our English ancestors; and even after the invention of fire-arms, they were with difficulty persuaded to prefer them and leave their archery.

Hallet.—I might note more errors in this chapter, but I shall only add, Who can help thinking that in the list of names in the two last verses of these parallel chapters, there is an error one where or other?

2 Sam. viii. 17, 18.

Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests: and Seraiah was the scribe. And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites: and David's sons were chief rulers, כהנים.

1 Chron. xviii. 16, 17.

Zadok the son of Ahitub, and Abimelech the son of Abiathar, were the priests: and Shavsha was the scribe. And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites: and David's sons were chief about the king, דודאנים.

Certainly the same man was not called Ahimelech and Abimelech. The same man was not called Seraiah, and Shavsha, and Sheva, chap. xx. 25. Here must be mistakes in spelling. Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites, as it is well expressed in Chron. and 2 Sam. xx. 23. But it is false to say, as the Hebrew scribes have written the passage in 2 Sam. viii. 18, that the Cherethites and Pelethites, together with David's sons too, were chief rulers, as Le Clerc also has observed. And perhaps the transcribers of Sam. have been guilty of another error in calling David's sons כהנים, which word usually signifies priests, as it is rendered just before, ver. 17, where Ahi-melech and Abiathar are called, כהנים, priests. I very much question whether the word cohen ever signifies any other than a priest. Bishop Patrick on this verse, after Grotius and Selden, asserts that cohen signifies a prince, as well as a priest. Le Clerc says the same. But their authorities weigh nothing with me against a plain fact. These great men quote but two places, all to show that cohen signifies a prince. One is this under consideration; where it appears from the parallel chapter in the Chronicles, that כהנים is written by mistake instead of דוכנים, which mistake is as easy as many others in the same chapter. The other place cited on this occasion is 2 Sam. xx. 26, "And Ira also the Jairite was a chief ruler (Heb., cohen) about David." It must be owned that this was the reading of this place before the time of the making the oldest versions in the Polyglot. For the word is rendered priest by the Vulg., LXX, Syr., and Arab. Yet still I cannot help suspecting that this is an error of old transcribers. Others as old as this I have before noted. I cannot find any parallel account to this in Chron., and so cannot correct this error by the help of such a parallel account. But it is very easy to see that there may be an error in writing this word, as well as there certainly is in writing the man's title, Jairite, which is spelt Ithrite, in this very same book, chap. xxiii. 38. It seems strange that the word cohen, which in above six hundred places signifies a priest, should in two places be used to signify a prince. Buxtorf, indeed, in his Lexicon, refers to several other places wherein he thinks cohen signifies a prince, as Gen. xli. 45; xlvii. 22, where Potiphre is called, "the priest of On;" Exod. ii. 16; iii. 1, where Jethro is called "priest of Midian;" and Job xii. 19, where our translators, "he leadeth princes away spoiled:" but it may as well be thought Job there speaks of priests, as in the context he does of councillors, judges, kings, the mighty, the trusty, the aged, and princes: among which several sorts of men it was very proper to mention priests.

There is another place not referred to by them, in which the word cohen is thought to signify a prince, and is accordingly rendered in our Bible, principal officer, 1 Kings iv. 5. But I see no necessity for this. For Zabud and his father Nathan might be priests, though not high priests: and the king might think fit to take a good priest for his friend. 1 Chron. xxvii. 5, Benaiah the son of Jehoiada is called, in our translation, a chief priest, and in the margin a principal officer. It is likely enough that Jehoiada was a priest. It is certain there was a priest of this name in David's days, the leader, or head of the family of Aaron, 1 Chron. xii. 27. Benaiah might be his son. His being of Kabzeel, 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, which is not mentioned among the cities given to the Levites, is no argument that he was not a priest. For Nob is not mentioned among those cities, Josh. xxi., nor 1 Chron. vi., and yet it is certain many priests lived there, 1 Sam. xxi. 1; xxii. 11, 19. If Benaiah was a priest, we can have no reason to take the word cohen in this place in any other sense. He is not here called, the chief priest. The chief priest was usually called הכהן הגדול, but this man is called הכהן הראש. It must be owned that the high priest, who is called as usual הכהן הגדול, 2 Kings xii. 11, is in the parallel place, where the very same thing is spoken of, called הראש, 2 Chron. xxiv. 11. But it is evident Jehoiada the father of Benaiah was not high priest. I should think, therefore, that the words 1 Chron. xxvii. 5 should be rendered, Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the priest, the chief, i.e., the chief of the captains. See ver. 3. I conclude then, there is no evidence to prove that cohen ever signifies a prince, or any other than a priest. The only proof that is urged to show that the word cohen in the above-mentioned places signifies a prince, and not a priest, is because it is so used in 2 Sam. viii. 18 and xx. 26. But after what has been said on them, perhaps there will not seem to be sufficient reason to be of that opinion.

Gesen.—גִּזְרֵי m. 1. an executioner, see r.

צָרִי No. 1, in 1 Sam. v. 4; xvii. 51; only in the formula הַצָּרִי הַיְּהוּדִי 2 Sam. viii. 18; xv. 18; xx. 7, 23; 1 Kings i. 38, 44; 1 Chron. xviii. 6; collect. pp. executioners and runners or couriers, names applied to David's bodyguard (σωματοφύλακες, Jos. Ant. vii. 5, 4), whose duty it was both to execute punishment and to convey the king's commands as speedily as possible to his officers, comp. צָרִי, טָרַח, אָנַח. See 1 Kings ii. 25, 34, 36, coll. Dan. ii. 14.—Some understand here Cherethites, i.e., Philistines; but it can hardly be supposed that David would choose his own lifeguard from a people at all times so hostile and odious to the Hebrews.

2. Cherethite, a Gentile name, i. q., Philistine, 1 Sam. xxx. 14; plur. צָרִיִּים, Cherethites, Philistines, Ez. xxv. 16; Zeph. ii. 5. Sept. and Syr. render it Cretans, from which and the passages, Amos ix. 7; Jer. xlvii. 4; Deut. ii. 33, the conjecture would be strong that the Philistines sprang from Crete, were it certain that צָרִי, Caphtor, signifies the island Crete; see צָרִי.

The etymology is doubtful; Arab. كَهَنَ and كَهَنَ to presage, to divine; كَاهِنَ a diviner, soothsayer, often among the pagan Arabs; then, an internuncio, envoy; Ethiop. ከህዝ, to be a priest, to minister; Syr.

ܥܒܝܐ, to be ministered, consecrated; in Bar Ali, to be rich, opulent, to enjoy the comforts of life; حَسْبَدٌ, richness, riches, prosperity, happiness. But all these appear to be secondary meanings, derived from the station and power of the priesthood, i.e., from צָרִי, priest, which is found in the Heb., Chald., Syr., and Eth. languages.—The native power of this word, therefore, is still to be sought by conjecture.

Hitzig supposes (ad Is. lxi. 10) that צָרִי is i. q. צָרִי, to stand, whence צָרִי, pp. one who stands by, an assistant. Maurer regards צָרִי as i. q. צָרִי, צָרִי, to incline, to bend, i. e., to bow down, as is done in worship, whence צָרִי pp. one bowing down, making prostrations. Both of these conjectures are worth attention; in favour of the last, we might perhaps also appeal to the Syro-Arabic gloss ٱلْحَاضِرُ تَسْبُحُ, i.e., to bow down oneself sc. in worship. Other conjectures see in Thesaur., p. 661, 662. Hence id. For the etymology see in r. כְּהֵן. Very freq. in Ex., Lev., Deut. of the priests of Jehovah, as Ex. ii. 16. Among the Hebrews the high-priest, ὁ ἀρχιερεύς, was called הַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל, Lev. xxi. 10, &c., also הַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל, 2 Kings xxv. 18, &c., הַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל, Ezra vii. 5; הַכֹּהֵן הַגָּדוֹל, the anointed priest, Lev. iv. 3, 5, 16. The next in dignity was called הַכֹּהֵן הַשֵּׁנִי, the second priest, Jer. lii. 24; but this phrase in the plur. הַכֹּהֵן הַשֵּׁנִי, 2 Kings xxiii. 4, seems to imply all the priests in opposition to the high priest.—Melchizedek, the earliest king of Jerusalem, is also called a priest of Jehovah, Gen. xiv. 18; Ps. cx. 4; and several of the earliest Hebrew kings were in fact also priests, as Solomon, 1 Kings viii.; comp. Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. So Virg. Æn. iii. 80, "Rex Anius, rex idem hominum Phœbique sacerdos."

Note. It is an ancient opinion of the Hebrew intpp. that צָרִי signifies also prince. Not only have the Chaldee translators rendered it in several places by רִצָּא, prince, as Gen. xli. 45; Ex. i. c.; Psalm cx. 4; but the author of Chronicles also seems to have followed this view, since he renders the words 2 Sam. viii. 18, וַיִּבְרָךְ יְהוָה צָרִי דָוִד, giving in his manner a gloss, 1 Chron. xviii. 17, וַיִּבְרָךְ יְהוָה וַיִּבְרָךְ צָרִי דָוִד, and the sons of David, the chiefs, were at the side of the king, i.e., were the chief ministers of the kingdom. The chief passages are 2 Sam. viii. 16; xviii. 20, 23—26; 1 Kings iv. 2—6; from all which it appears that there were priests connected with the court, partly exercising their proper functions, and partly as friends and counsellors of the sovereign; as was also often the case with prophets and priests in later times. The author of Chronicles seems to have chosen his interpretation from the more ancient context, because priests of any other than the Levitical family were unknown to him. Of less weight is the authority of Onkelos. Hence in all the passages referred to, the signif. priest is the only true one. Comp. the case of Solomon above. See more in Thesaur., p. 663.

In his verbis Comm. 4 iterum comparent וְזָדוֹק וְאֶבְיָתָר פָּרָשִׁים, quibus Comm. 5 additur: וְזָדוֹק וְאֶבְיָתָר, et Sabud, filius Nathani, erat sacerdos isque amicus regis (non: Sabud sacerdos erat amicus regius, in quam sententiam scribendum fuisset וְזָדוֹק וְאֶבְיָתָר). Itaque efficitur ex duobus his locis, in aula Davidis et Salomonis complures fuisse sacerdotes, qui partim sacris administrandis præessent (Zadocus et Ebjathar), partim interioris admissionis apud regem essent, quorumque utpote virorum piorum et sapientium consilio et auctoritate reges uti solebant (cf. inter se illud lud. xvii. 10 de Micha sacerdote Danitarum: וְהָיָה לִי לֵאמֹר אֲלֵיךָ, et Gen. xlv. 8 de Josepho: וְהָיָה לִי לֵאמֹר אֲלֵיךָ, quemadmodum iidem ceteroquin prophetas, ex c. Davides Nathanum, in amicorum numero habebant et imperatores regesque Christiani inde a Constantio Chloro et Constantino Magno episcopos in aulicorum amicorumque regionum corona habebant, quod quidem reputare, non omnem rem in scurrile vertere debebat Moversius l. c. qui de loco 2 Sam. viii. disputans p. 303 ita scribit: "Andere machen — wirklich auf possierliche Weise — die Söhne Davids zwar nicht zu Priestern ex professo, sondern nur zu seinen geistlichen Rätthen, oder 'Hofcaplänen,' wobei sie nur vergessen, dass das Alterthum keine Consistorialräthe und Hofcaplänen, sondern nur Opferpriester gehabt habe," quæ non scripsisset vir doctus, nisi ipse eius, quæ sacerdotum in aula Persarum et Ægyptiorum erat, conditionis immemor fuisset. His autem præmissis lucebit etiam illorum locorum primus 2 Sam. viii. 16—18, plurimis ille quidem recentiorum disputationibus vexatus (vide de Wette Beyträge i., p. 81; nostr. Hist. Ling. Hebr., p. 41; Wineri Lex. h. v. Gramberg über die Chronik, p. 143 sqq.; Religionsideen d. A. T. i., p. 252; Maurer ad h. l. et contra Keilium, Moversium ll. cc.), reliquisque sane difficilior. Priorem is continet indicem principum Davidis, in quo postquam Comm. 17 dictum est: et Zadoc filius Ahitub et Ahimelech filius Ebjathar erant sacerdotes, additur: וְבִנְיָמִן בְּרִיָּה וְהַפְּתִי וְהַפְּתִי וְהַפְּתִי וְהַפְּתִי פָּרָשִׁים. Quod si sanum esset, explicandum foret: et Benajas filius Jojada et Crethi Plethique et filii Davidis erant sacerdotes. Sed dudum viderunt critici (Clericus, Hubigantius, nuper Maurerus), ex locis parallelis 2 Sam. xx. 23; 1 Par. xviii. 17 cum Chald., Vulg., Syr. pro וְהַפְּתִי reponendum esse וְהַפְּתִי, ut sententia sit: et Benajas...præfectus erat satellitibus regis, et filii Davidis erant sacerdotes. (Huius indicis scripturam etiam alio in loco laborare, et pro Ahimelech filius Ebjathar legendum esse Ebjathar filius Ahimelech, ostendit Korbis in Wineri Theol., Journal iv., p. 295). Eodem igitur loco comparent filii Davidis, quo in duobus locis præcedentibus Ira, sacerdos Davidis et Sabud, sacerdos amicus regius, unde non possumus non colligere, et ipsos vere sacerdotes fuisse, fortasse sacra privata administrantes (v. Iudd. l. c.), eosque tamen patris comites in aula degentes, ut sacerdotum inagorumque filii apud Ægyptios et Persas. Quod quidem posterius eorum munus priore omisso expressit auctor Paralipomenôn, cui sacerdotes, qui Levitæ non essent, pro sui temporis rationibus non poterant non officiculo esse, pro $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$ ponens: $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$, et filii Davidis proximi erant a latere regis. Similem interpretationem etiam dederunt LXX, καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ Δαβὶδ αὐλάρχαι ἦσαν, quamquam hæc fortasse ex Paralipomenis fluxit, Targ. $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$; ex Rabbinis Kimchius, in recentioribus Clericus al. quibus sacerdotum mentio huic loco inepta videtur. Sed etiam h. l. proprium sacerdotis significatum retinendum esse, ex duobus locis parallelis evidens est; filiosque regis vere sacerdotes fuisse, nemini mirum videbitur, qui intimam inter munus regium et sacerdotale apud veteres Hebræos necessitudinem perpenderit (cf. Josephus de vita sua, § 1: ὡς περ παρ' ἐκάστοις ἀλλή τις ἐστὶν εὐγενείας ὑπόθεσις, οὕτως παρ' ἡμῖν ἡ τῆς ἱερωσύνης μετουσία τεκμηρίον ἐστὶ γένους λαμπρότητος). — Reliqui loci, in quibus unus vel alter veterum interpretum, sed sine necessitate et contra linguæ usum, כֹּהֵן , principis vel ministri significatu accepit, sunt: 2 Reg. x. 11: $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$ (de Ahabi sacerdotibus idolatricis). Professor Lee.— $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$, masc. plur. $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$. I. Name of a portion of the Philistines, residing on the south-west shore of Judea, derived from the island of Crete, as some think; but without any good foundation, 1 Sam. xxx. 14; Ezek. xxv. 16; Zeph. ii. 5. Comp. with Amos ix. 7; Jer. xlvii. 4; Deut. ii. 23: out of all which we only learn that certain Philistines came from $\text{כַּרְתִּי$; but not a word to identify Caphtor with Crete. If, moreover, this people was so called, after the name of their country, they would here have been termed, $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$, not $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$. No reliance can, therefore, be placed on this reasoning. See, also, Gen. x. 13, 14. LXX, χελεθί, κρήτας, κρητῶν, in these places respectively, and vr. 6, in the last, has κρήτη, for Heb. $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$, which clearly evinces the ignorance of the translator.

II. The style and title of certain brave soldiers in David's army, 2 Sam. viii. 18; xv. 18; xx. 7, 23, occurring with $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$, according to Gesenius, executioners ("carnifices") and couriers. Of the first of these interpretations, however, no adequate authority can be adduced, and the second offers no very strong probability. So called, most likely, after the tribes of the Philistines, out of which they may have been hired as mercenary soldiers: a thing always common in the East. See also under $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$.

Gesenius compares the Arab. فَلَتٌ celer equus; فَلْدَانٌ , audax, robustus, celer. See $\text{וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם}$.

viro deferens in necessitate. Castell. The primary notion seems to have consisted in doing the business of, or acting as a mediator for, another: whence derived it is impossible now to say. Thence, secondarily, acting as a priest: thirdly, after idolatry had been introduced, as a diviner; Arab., Ariolus, i. e., heathen priests: and, fourthly, from their wealth and influence, Syr. ܐܪܝܘܠܐ , beatus fuit; magnarum divitiarum (opum) possessor. A priest, or secondary mediator between God and man, both under the patriarchal and Jewish dispensations, Gen. xiv. 18; xli. 45, 50; xlv. 2; Exod. ii. 16; iii. 1; xix. 6; Josh. vi. 4; 1 Sam. xxii. 17; Ps. cx. 4. In 2 Sam. viii. 18. Comp. 1 Chron. xviii. 17; some have supposed the word to signify minister, in a political sense; which would be to take the usage here as grounded on the primary notion noticed above: which to me is more probable than the opinion of Gesenius, who holds that priests in the true sense of that term are meant: because in that case, priests, not of the tribe of Levi, would be acknowledged.

CHAP. IX. 2.

וְהַכֹּהֲנִים הַלֵּוִיִּם —

— καὶ εἶπεν, Ἐγὼ δοῦλος σός.

Au. Ver.—2 And there was of the house of Saul a servant whose name was Ziba.

And when they had called him unto David, the king said unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he said, Thy servant is he.

Thy servant is he.

Houb.—עבד: Melius, אני עבד, ego servus tuus, ut Græci Intt., ἐγὼ δοῦλος σός: Sic Syrus, אֲנִי, ego...vel, ut versu 6 עבד, he, ecce servus tuus.

Ver. 3.

καὶ εἶπεν ὁ βασιλεὺς, Εἰ ὑπολείπεται ἐκ τοῦ οἴκου Σαούλ ἔτι ἀνὴρ, καὶ ποιήσω μετ' αὐτοῦ ἔλεος Θεοῦ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—3 And the king said, Is there not yet any of the house of Saul, that I may shew the kindness of God unto him, &c.

The kindness of God.

Pool.—The kindness of God; either, first, That kindness which I owe him for God's sake, and by virtue of my oath given to him about it, 1 Sam. xx. 14, 15. But that oath seems only to oblige him to Jonathan's posterity, and not to any other of Saul's house. Or, secondly, Great and eminent kindness.

Booth.—Peculiar kindness.

Houb.—Ego enim ei cum Deo benigne faciam.

אֲנִי, Et faciam cum eo misericordiam Dei. Non aliam sententiam hæc habere possent, quam, faciam misericordiam excellentem, aut mirificam, tanquam אֲנִי notaret superlativum gradum. Sed אֲנִי, ubi indicat rei magnitudinem et excellentiam, conjunctum esse solet cum admiratione; neque convenit ut David suam ipse beneficentiam admiretur. Propter hanc causam legimus אֲנִי, cum Deo, sive Deo adjuvante. Ita legere videtur Syrus, qui, אֲנִי אֲנִי, propter Deum, quod etiam significat אֲנִי.

Ver. 6.

וַיֹּאמֶר — וַיֹּאמֶר הַמֶּלֶךְ הַחֹסֶם עוֹד אִישׁ לְבֵית שָׁאוּל וְאֶעֱשֶׂה עִמּוֹ חֶסֶד אֱלֹהִים

— καὶ εἶπεν αὐτῷ Δαυὶδ, Μεμφιβοσθῆ; καὶ εἶπεν, Ἴδου ὁ δοῦλός σου.

Au. Ver.—6 Now when Mephiboseth [called Merib-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 34], the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephiboseth. And he answered, Behold thy servant!

And David said, Mephiboseth.

Houb.—מִפְּבוֹסֶת: Legendum, מִפְּבוֹסֶת, num tu Miphiboseth, ut antea legitur מִפְּבוֹסֶת, num tu Siba? Id declarat responsum Miphibosethi, הִנֵּה עַבְדְּךָ, ecce servus tuus. Neque enim vocat hic David Miphibosethum, ut Deus Samuelem puerum vocabat dicens, Samuel. Aderat enim Miphiboseth, audire paratus, quid sibi a Davide diceretur. Convenit, num tu Miphiboseth, quia eum David nondum viderat.

Ver. 8.

Au. Ver.—8 And he bowed himself, &c.

Ged., Booth.—And Mephiboseth [LXX] bowed himself, &c.

Ver. 10.

וְעַבְדְּךָ לֹן אֶת־הָאֲדָמָה אֲחֵרָה וּבְנֵיךָ וְעַבְדֶּיךָ וְהַנְּחָמָה וְהָיָה לְדָרְאֲלֶיךָ לֶחֶם וְאֶכְלוּ וּמִסִּיבֹשֶׁת בְּדָרְאֲלֶיךָ יֵאָכֵל תַּפְּסִיד לֶחֶם עַל־שְׁלַחְנִי וְגו'

καὶ ἐργᾷ αὐτῷ τὴν γῆν σου, καὶ οἱ υἱοὶ σου, καὶ οἱ δοῦλοί σου, καὶ εἰσίοισεις τῷ υἱῷ τοῦ κυρίου σου ἄρτους, καὶ ἔδεται ἄρτους· καὶ Μεμφιβοσθῆ υἱὸς τοῦ κυρίου σου φάγεται διαπαντός ἄρτον ἐπὶ τῆς τραπέζης μου, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat: but Mephiboseth thy master's son shall eat bread alway at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

Houb.—10 Tu cum tuis filiis ac servis colito agros. Afferes annonam filio Domini tui, quâ illi vescentur; Miphiboseth autem, filius Domini tui, habebit in mensa mea perpetuum cibum; erant autem Sibæ filii quindecim et servi viginti.

10 דַּבָּרָא: Series est talis, et adduces, ut sit filio Domini tui panis, quem edant, i. e., ut habeat filius Domini tui, unde suppetit illis cibum. Filii et servi Sibæ alebantur fructibus agrorum quos Siba excolebat, Miphiboseth annonam eis dividente, cum interea ipse Miphiboseth annonâ regiâ utebatur, regis mensæ accumbens. Græci Intt., Syrus, et Vulgatus, omittunt דַּבָּרָא, quod post דַּבָּרָא, legitur; non quod non id legerent, sed quia non convertunt verbum de verbo.

Ver. 11.

וַיֹּאמֶר צִיבָא אֶל־הַמֶּלֶךְ כָּל־יְמֵי

Au. Ver.—11 Then said Ziba unto the king, According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat, &c.

Houb., Horsley, Dathe, Ged.—"So Mephibosheth ate at the king's table," &c. So Syr., Arab., and equivalently LXX, which has David's. The rest, my, except one Heb. MS., which has his, i. e., David's. —Ged.

Commentaries and Essays, Booth.—So Mephibosheth ate at his table, as one of the king's sons. [1 MS., and equivalently LXX.]

Dathe.—Minus apta est h. l. lectio vulgaris ἐπὶ τῇ τράπεζᾳ in mensa mea. Nam non rex loquitur, sed scriptor pergit in historia. Οἱ ὁ habent: ad mensam Davidis; Syrus: in mensa regis. Tantum Chaldaeus et Vulgatus lectionem receptam exhibent, pro qua Kennicotti codex 182. שֹׁלְחֵי habet.

Au. Ver.—6 And when the children of Ammon saw that they stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king Maacah a thousand men, and of Ish-tob twelve thousand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate : and the Syrians of Zoba, and of Rehob, and of Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

Bp. Patrick.—6 Of Ish-tob.] Or, of the men of Tob : a country unto which Jephthah fled from his unkind brethren (see Judg. xi. 3).

Bishop Horsley.—6 Upon comparing the parallel places in this chapter and in the nineteenth chapter of the first book of Chronicles, there is much reason to suspect that the numbers are corrupt in both. In this passage, the whole number of the hired troops appears to have been 33,000; in 1 Chron. xix. 7, the chariots alone are 32,000, a number altogether incredible. In the 18th verse of this chapter, David kills only 700 men fighting in the chariots, and 40,000 horsemen. If in these armies there were no horsemen but such as rode (position-like) upon the horses which drew the cars, 40,000 of such horsemen is out of all proportion to 700 fighting in the chariots, or even to 7,000, which is the number in 1 Chron. xix. 18. The true numbers were probably these,

Infantry hired of the Syrians.....	32,000
Chariots of Maacah, with their proper appointment of fighters and riders	1,000
Infantry slain by David of the whole army under Shobach, which, with the additions of Syrians from Mesopotamia, was more numerous than the hired army of the Ammonites	40,000
Belonging to the chariots	700

7 And when David heard of it, &c.

Booth.—And they went and encamped before Medeba. [1 Chron. xix. 7.] And 1 Chron. 2. The horsemen may be here called footmen, in opposition to those that fought in chariots; because they sometimes fought on horseback, and sometimes came down from their horses, and fought on foot, when the place of the battle was more commodious for footmen than for horsemen; which it is not improbable was their case here; for David being a soldier of great prudence and experience, and understanding the great numbers of the Syrian horsemen, whereas the Israelites had but very few, Deut. xvii. 16, would doubtless endeavour to choose a place as inconvenient for their horsemen as he could. 3. Peradventure the Syrians designed to bring the war into David's country, and therefore hastened their march, and for that end put their footmen on horseback (as hath been frequently done in like cases), who, when they came to the place of battle, came down from their horses, and fought on foot. So there is no need of acknowledging an error of the scribe in the sacred text; which yet if it were granted in such historical passages of no moment to the doctrine of faith and good life, it would not shake the foundation of our faith in matters of great importance, which it might reasonably be presumed the providence of God would more watchfully preserve from all depravation or corruption.

Dr. A. Clarke.—SEVEN HUNDRED chariots —and forty thousand horsemen.] In the parallel place, 1 Chron. xix. 18, it is said, David slew of the Syrians seven thousand men, which fought in chariots. It is difficult to ascertain the right number in this and similar places. It is very probable that, in former times, the Jews expressed, as they often do now, their numbers, not by words at full length, but by numeral letters; and, as many of the letters bear a great similarity to each other, mistakes might easily creep in when the numeral letters came to be expressed by words at full length. This alone will account for the many mistakes which we find in the numbers of these books, and renders a mistake here very probable. The letter י, with a dot above, stands for seven thousand, י for seven hundred: the great similarity of these letters might easily cause the one to be mistaken for the other, and so produce an error in this place.

Ged., Booth.—But the Syrians fled before Israel; and David destroyed seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and seven thousand horse, and forty thousand foot. He smote also, Shobach, the captain of their host, who died there.

Seven thousand horse. This reading is formed partly from Josephus, and partly from p. p. 1 Chron. xix. 18.—Ged.

Houb.—18 Sed Syri ante Israel terga verterunt, deleuitque David septem millia equitum, septingentos currus et quadraginta millia peditum; simul Sobach exercitus ducem percussit, qui et ibi mortuus est.

שבע אלפים, Septingentos currus. Legitur, 1 Paral. xix. 18 שבע אלפים, septem millia (curruum). Alterutrum in mendo positum. Nos numerum eum, qui minor est, antefereamus. Nam septem mille currus nimis multi sunt pro exercitu Syrorum, qui numerum non excedebat triginta trium millium, ut liquet ex versu 6 ...ששים, (quadraginta millia) equitum. Locus parallelus, quadraginta millia, ארבע אלפים, peditum, vera scriptura: nam equitum, falsa. Numerus enim quadraginta millium equitum nimis multus est pro utroque exercitu Syrorum et Ammonitarum, non item numerus quadraginta millia peditum. Nam Syri erant triginta tria millia; Ammonitæ eundem numerum militum habere poterant; ut non sit incredibile apud utrosque cecidisse pedites quadraginta millia. Perturbationem magnam huc fuisse invectam probat, tum id quod supra diximus, tum vero etiam quod hic omittitur, quot pedites in pugna ceciderint, quamquam quot equites, non omittitur. Sed equites Syros memorat locus parallelus, numero septem millium, quem nos numerum amplectimur. Ut videat lector, ad quas nugas recurrant, qui negant fuisse hic quidquam a librariis peccatum, iuvat nos memorare hæc, quæ adversus Lud. Cappellum respondebat Junior Buxtorfius in Anticritica sua. Lud. Cappellus hæc observarat: "David dicitur percussisse ex Syris quadraginta millia pedites. At 2 Sam. x. 18 pro peditibus dicuntur equites: alterutrum videtur mendosum." Cui Buxtorfius sic respondet: "At ipsi soli sic videtur: aut dicat, cui præterea? Codices consentiunt: Interpretes hactenus in utraque lectione acquieverunt. Respondent nonnulli, Davidem percussisse quadraginta millia pedites et totidem equites; in uno loco commemorari hos, in altero illos. Alii putant fuisse quidem pedites, qui percussi fuerunt, sed ob fortitudinem appellari equites, sicut hodie quivis strenuus et fortis appellatur cavalier. Alii existimant hos quadraginta millia fuisse equites; sed cum currus prostrarentur et periclitarentur, illos ab equis descendisse, et pedes pugnas. Hinc vocari pedites. Sanctius ad locum Samuelis: dicendum est... neque in Libro Regum, neque in Libro Paralipomenon omnia fuisse numerata. Addidit Liber Paralipomenon, peditum quadraginta millia, quod omiserat in Libris Regum Historiæ Sacra, neque equitum meminit, quia de illorum numero in Libris Regum disertis verbis actum videbat." Buxtorfio imprimis hæc placebat Sanctii cavillatio potius, quam interpretatio. Nam cui lectori probaretur Gallicæ historiæ scriptor, qui narraret in pugna quadam quadraginta millia equitum fuisse a Gallis interfecta, neque adderet totidem pedites fuisse a Gallis deletos, quia de peditibus alter scriptor narrasset? Non nesciebat Sanctius multa renarrare Paralipomenon Libros, quæ nunc habemus in Libris Regum. Sed piget nos hæc referre. Nos, septem millia equitum, ut locus parallelus: qui numerus quadrat in septingentos currus, et in quadraginta millia pedites. Nam equitum numerus solet esse minor, quam peditum; major, quam currum.

Dathe.—18 In quo Israëlitis terga dederunt. Destruxit David septingentos currus, equitum septem millia occidit, peditum vero quadraginta millia, a) Sobachum quoque, ducem exercitus, ibidem interfecit.

Ver. 19.

Au. Ver.—19 And when all the kings that were servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them. So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Made peace with Israel.] Some copies of the Vulgate add here after the word Israel, Expaverunt et fugerunt quinquaginta et octo millia coram Israel; "and they were panic-struck, and fled fifty-eight thousand of them before Israel."

the year was expired [Heb., at the return of the year, 1 Kings xx. 22, 26; 2 Chron. xxxvi. 10], at the time when kings go forth to battle, that David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged Rabbah. But David tarried still at Jerusalem.

At the time when kings go forth to battle. So Houb., Pool, Patrick, Horsley, Schulz, Dathe, Ged., Booth.

Bp. Patrick.—At the time when kings go forth to battle.] These words to battle, are added for explication's sake: but they are not in the Hebrew; in which language to go forth signifies to go forth to war (see Gen. x. 11; Isa. xliii. 13; Zech. xiv. 3, and other places, mentioned by Bochart, Hieroz., par. ii., lib. iv., cap. 2).

Bishop Horsley.—For הַשָּׁנָה, read, with LXX, Vulgate, the parallel place in Chronicles, and many of the best MSS., הַיָּמִים.

Houb.—1 לְשָׁנָה דְּמִלְחָמָה, Quo tempore legati proficiscuntur. Bona hæc sententia; itaque etiam scriptura הַיָּמִים, non aspernanda. Sed quia loco parallelo 1 Paral. xx. 1 legitur מַלְכֵי, reges, et quia ita hic legunt veteres, scriptura est potior הַיָּמִים. Imo addendum הַיָּמִים, ad bellum, post הַיָּמִים; ita hoc loco Syrus. Arabs, tempore quo יסבּוּהוּ מִלְחָמָה, potest fieri bellum. Legere videtur הַיָּמִים, exitur ad bellum; vide dicta ad locum parallelum.

Au. Ver.—11 And Uriah said unto David, The ark, and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields: shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

Commentaries and Essays.—As thou livest, and as thy soul liveth. So Hebrew. This seems mere tautology. The LXX have not this unnecessary repetition; their version is [see above], where it appears, that for חֲנִי, they read חֲנִי, quomodo? which I have no doubt is right. The version then will be, "How, as thy soul liveth, can I do this thing?" In Gen. xxxix. 9, we have the like expression, "How (חֲנִי) can I do this great wickedness?"

Houb.—... חֲנִי חֲנִי, Vivis tu et vivit anima tua. Sic converti solet, quamvis חֲנִי sit potius vita tua, quam vivis tu. Insueta Hebræis sacrisque codicibus jurandi hæc formula; nam apud eos tu idem est ac anima tua. Mendum antiquum חֲנִי, quomodo, habuere Græci Intt. Non dubium quin pro חֲנִי scribendum sit חֲנִי חֲנִי, vivit Dominus (et vivit anima tua) jurandi formula consueta.

Au. Ver.—21 Who smote Abimelech the son of Jerubbesheth [Judg. vi. 32, Jerub-baal]? did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why went ye nigh the wall? then say thou, Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

22 So the messenger went, and came and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

Pool.—Jerubbesheth, called also Jerubbaal, Judg. ix. 1. See the notes on 2 Sam. ii. 8.

Ged., Booth.—Jerubbaal [LXX].

Commentaries and Essays.—This passage leads me to observe a circumstance, which has not been, I think, sufficiently accounted for,—that in the names of persons, of which Baal makes a part, Bosheth is sometimes used instead of it. Thus Jerubbaal, as he is called in Judges and 1 Sam. xii. 11, is called here Jerubbesheth. Eshbaal and Meribaal in 1 Chron. viii. 33, 34 are in 2 Samuel, Ishbosheth and Mephibosheth. Patrick on 2 Sam. ii. 8 observes, that “Bosheth signifies shame and confusion, and Baal being an infamous idol, the Holy Scripture makes these names end promiscuously in Baal, or Bosheth.” But I am inclined to think, that the persons in question had not originally two names; that Saul and Jonathan would neither of them call their children by a name of infamy, i.e., Bosheth; that they were called but by one name in the original Scripture, i.e., Baal; and that the alteration from Baal to Bosheth has been caused by the superstition of the Jews, who substituted the word Bosheth for Baal, when that name became an object of abhorrence among them after the captivity, when they were perfectly cured of idolatry. Perhaps they might be led to this practice by a too literal interpretation of Hosea ii. 17, and from chap. ix. 10. However, let me observe, that in the Greek version of this verse we have Jerubbaal, Ιεροβααλ, not Jerubbesheth, as in the present Hebrew, which proves that it was not altered in this place in their copies. We have reason to suspect from many instances, besides this, that the Jews were not over-scrupulous about altering their Scriptures on one account or another.

Houb.—ירבשה, Jerobessith. Nos, cum Vulgato, Jerobaal, nihil tamen mutantes. Nam propriis in nominibus ירבשה et באל interdum commutantur, ut alibi, Miphiboseth et Miphibaal, Isboseth et Isbaal.

Hallet.—22, 23, So the messenger went, and came, and showed David all that Joab had sent him for. And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, &c. There appears to me to be a gap between these two sentences. The LXX reads the text more entire thus:—“So the messenger of Joab went unto the king at Jerusalem, and came and showed David all things which Joab had told him, even all the affairs of the war. And David was angry with Joab, and said to the messenger: Why did ye go so near to the city to fight? Did ye not know that ye should be smitten from the wall? Who smote Abimelech the son of Jerubbaal? Did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone from the wall upon him, and he died in Thamas? [called, Thebez, Judg. ix. 50 in the LXX as well as in Heb.] Why did ye go so near to the wall? In the Heb. it is said, “The messenger showed David all that Joab had sent him for,” ואמר לו כל אשר שלח אליו. The expression is very abrupt. It might rather be supposed, that for ואמר we should read וסיים in Piel, and should render it as the LXX do, “all things which Joab had told him.” The long passage that follows in the LXX seems plainly to have been originally part of the text. The instructions which Joab gave his messenger, ver. 19, 20, 21 imply this. Joab instructed his messenger first to relate all matters of the war, or to give, I suppose, an orderly and particular account of all transactions; and when he should have finished the account, without yet mentioning Uriah's death, and thereupon the king should grow angry because Joab exposed himself and the army to so much danger by going too near the wall: then the messenger was to pacify the king by adding, that Uriah was dead too. Upon hearing the relation of the loss of his men, Joab thought the king would be angry, and imagined he would upbraid his leading his army too near to the enemy's wall, with the story of Abimelech, who came too near the wall of Thebez, and was killed by a piece of a millstone cast down from the wall upon him. This was one instance of Joab's sagacity, of which the king spake upon another occasion, chap. xiv. 19. After the mentioning of Joab's conjecture what the king would say, it is natural to think the historian would tell us, that the king did say it. The discourse of the messenger, ver. 23, seems plainly to be an excuse which he makes for Joab, when the king grew angry. Now he tells of Uriah's death, of which, according to Joab's instructions, he was to speak after the king's anger, but not before. The account then of the king's upbraidings should have been inserted before ver. 23, as it is in the LXX. The Hebrew transcribers have here omitted a long sentence, which was originally in their copies, as it was in those from which the Greek translation was made. The occasion of their omitting it at first was, I suppose, that they thought they had written it already, when they looked back on their transcript, and saw the same words there. They did not mind that the words were to be written twice. Or else they passed on, thinking they had written them twice, when really they had written them but once. All that transcribe know how apt men are to be guilty of such errors.

Au. Ver.—5 And David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing shall surely die [or, is worthy to die].

Shall surely die. So most commentators.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Literally, he is a son of death, a very bad man, and one who deserves to die. But the law did not sentence a sheep-stealer to death; let us hear it: If a man steal an ox or a sheep, he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep, Exod. xxii. 1; and hence David immediately says, He shall restore the lamb fourfold.

וְעַל אֲשֶׁר לֹא חָמַל. Hæc verba fere omnes sic convertunt, et eo quod non pepercerit. Tamen, si eo quod diceretur, legeretur עָבַד אֲשֶׁר, et pro eo, quod, quoniam antecessit עָבַד אֲשֶׁר, quod adverbium vult, aut iterari, aut esse ἀπὸ κοινοῦ. Alterum vitium est, non addi casum verbo pepercerit; quem casum nemo non sentit hic desiderari; cum præsertim verbum Hebraicum חָמַל, nusquam legatur neutra in voce usurpatum, nisi est alteri verbo succenturiatum, vel antecedenti, vel consequenti. Eum igitur casum nos reperimus in vocabulo אֲשֶׁר depravato, quod erat olim scriptum אֲשֶׁר, pauperi, ut supra versibus 1 et 4. Digito monstrabat eum casum præpositio עַל, quæ comitari solet verbum חָמַל, quæque male hic adjungitur ad אֲשֶׁר, postquam אֲשֶׁר mox habuit adjunctum עָבַד, non autem עַל.

Ver. 8.

Au. Ver.—8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy master's wives into thy bosom, and gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

Thy master's house.

Au. Ver.—13 And David said unto Nathan, I have sinned against the Lord. And Nathan said unto David, The Lord also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—The Lord—hath put away thy sin.] Many have supposed that David's sin was now actually pardoned, but this is perfectly erroneous; David, as an adulterer, was condemned to death by the law of God; and he had according to that law passed sentence of death upon himself. God alone, whose law that was, could revoke that sentence, or dispense with its execution; therefore Nathan, who had charged the guilt home upon his conscience, is authorized to give him the assurance that he should not die a temporal death for it: The Lord hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die. This is all that is contained in the assurance given by Nathan: Thou shalt not die that temporal death; thou shalt be preserved alive, that thou mayest have time to repent, turn to God, and find mercy. If the fifty-first Psalm, as is generally supposed, was written on this occasion, then it is evident (as the psalm must have been written after this interview) that David had not received pardon for his sin from God at the time he composed it; for in it he confesses the crime in order to find mercy.

There is something very remarkable in the words of Nathan: The Lord also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die; כִּי מוֹת לֹא תָמוּת, Also Jehovah hath caused thy sin to pass over, or transferred thy sin; thou shalt not die. God has transferred the legal punishment of this sin to the child; he shall die, thou shalt not die; and this is the very point on which the prophet gives him the most direct information: The child that is born unto thee shall surely die; מוֹת יָמוּת, dying he shall die— he shall be in a dying state seven days, and then he shall die. So God immediately struck the child, and it was very sick.

And have taken the city of waters. So Ged., Booth.

Pool.—The same royal city so called, because it either stood beside the river, or was encompassed with water, both for defence and delight. Although the words are by some learned men rendered thus, I have taken, or intercepted, or cut off water from the city; which well agrees, both with the words, eth being here put for meeth, which is frequent; as Gen. iv. 1; xlv. 4; Exod. ix. 29, &c.; and with the relation of Josephus the Jew, who saith, The conduits of water were cut off, and so the city was taken; and with a relation of Polybius concerning the same city, which was taken afterwards by Antiochus in the same manner, by cutting off water from the city.

Bp. Patrick.—That part of this city which lay upon the water; the other part, which was the heart of the city, being yet untaken. But it being supplied with water from this part, of which Joab had got possession, it could not hold out long, but would be forced to surrender, because Joab cut off their water from them. So Josephus understood it, τῶν ὑδάτων αὐτοὺς ἀποτεμνόμενος, lib. vii., cap. 7. And thus some learned men translate the last words of this verse, by adding the particle mem before eth, "He took from the city the waters."

Dr. Adam Clarke.—And have taken the city of waters.] The city where the tank or reservoir was that supplied the city and suburbs with water. Some think that the original should be translated, I have intercepted, or cut off, the waters of the city: and Houbigant translates the place, et aquas ab urbe jam derivavi; "And I have already drawn off the waters from the city." This perfectly agrees with the account in Josephus, who says, τῶν τε ὑδάτων αὐτοὺς ἀποτεμνόμενος, having cut off their waters, Antiq., lib. vii., cap. 7. This was the reason why David should come speedily, as the citadel, deprived of water, could not long hold out.

Gesen.—Spec. דָּר is also put.

(a) For a part of a larger city, espec. as fortified by a separate wall; like Gr. πόλις, see Passow, Engl. Old city, New city. So דָּר דָּוִד, city of David, i. e., the citadel on Zion, a part of Jerusalem, ἡ ἄνω πόλις, 2 Sam. v. 7, 9; vi. 10, 12. [Later the name city of David seems to have sometimes included the whole of Jerusalem; see Biblioth. Sac. i., p. 97, sq.] דָּר הַמִּיָּתֶנֶת, the middle city, the middle part of Jerusalem, 2 Kings xx. 4, Cheth. where Keri has דָּר הַיָּמִינִית, the water-city, part of the city Rabbah, 2 Sam. xii. 27.

Ver. 30.

καὶ ἔλαβε τὸν στέφανον Μολχὸν τοῦ βασιλέως αὐτῶν ἀπὸ τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτοῦ, καὶ ὁ σταθμὸς αὐτοῦ τάλαντον χρυσοῦ, καὶ λίθον τιμίον, καὶ ἦν ἐπὶ τῆς κεφαλῆς Δαυὶδ, καὶ σκύλα τῆς πόλεως ἐξήνεγκε πολλὰ σφόδρα.

Au. Ver.—30 And he took their king's crown from off his head, the weight whereof was a talent of gold with the precious stones: and it was set on David's head. And he brought forth the spoil of the city in great [Heb., very great] abundance.

The weight whereof was a talent of gold. So Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth.

Pool.—The weight whereof was a talent of gold, or rather, the price whereof [so Patrick, Clarke], &c. For as the Hebrew shekel signifies both a weight, and a piece of money of a certain price; so also may mishkal, as proceeding from the same root. And, in general, the same words both in Hebrew, Greek, and Latin are promiscuously used, to signify either weight or price, as is well known to the learned. And the addition of precious stones, which are never valued by the weight of gold, makes this signification here most proper and probable. Moreover, the weight might seem too great, either for the king of Ammon or for David, to wear it upon his head. Although, if this were meant of the weight, it might be said that this was not a crown to be worn ordinarily, but merely to be put upon the king's head at his coronation, or upon solemn occasions, as here where this was done, in token of the translation of this kingdom to David; and, it may be, it was held up or supported by two officers of state, that it might not be too burdensome to him, and after a little while taken off.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The weight whereof was a talent of gold.] If this talent was only seven pounds, as Whiston says, David might have carried it on his head with little difficulty; but this weight, according to common computation, would amount to more than one hundred pounds!

If, however, מסכה be taken for the value, not the weight, then all is plain, as the worth of the crown will be about £5,075 15s. 7d. Now this seems to be the true sense, because of the added words with the precious stones, i. e., the gold of the crown, and the jewels with which it was adorned, were equal in value to a talent of gold.

Bishop Horsley.—“A talent of gold.” In value 785*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.* according to the weight of the Mosaic talent, but not more than 471*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.* if the royal standard was now in use, which was probably the case.

Au. Ver.—31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brickkiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jerusalem.

Pool.—The people that were therein: the words are indefinite, and therefore not necessarily to be understood of all the people; for it had been barbarous to use women and children thus; but of the men of war, and especially of those who had been the chief actors or abettors of that villanous action against David's ambassadors, (which was contrary to the law of nature, and of nations, and of all humanity,) and of the dreadful war ensuing upon it; for which they might seem to deserve the severest punishments. Although indeed there seems to have been too much rigour used; especially, because these dreadful deaths were inflicted not only upon those great counsellors, who were the only authors of that vile usage of the ambassadors; but upon a great number of the people, who were innocent from that crime. And therefore it is probably conceived that David exercised this cruelty whilst his heart was hardened and impenitent, and when he was bereaved of that free and good Spirit of God which would have taught him more mercy and moderation. Put them under saws: he sawed them to death; of which punishment we have examples, both in Scripture, Heb. xi. 37, and in other authors. Under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron; he caused them to be laid down upon the ground, and torn by sharp iron harrows drawn over them, and hewed in pieces by keen axes. Made them pass through the brick-kiln, i. e., to be burnt in brick-kilns. Or, made them to pass through the furnace of Malchan, i. e., of Moloch, called also Milchoni, and here Malchen; punishing them with their own sin, and with the same kind of punishment which they inflicted upon their own children: see 2 Kings xvi. 3; xxiii. 10; Lev. xviii. 21; xx. 2; Deut. xviii. 10.

Bp. Patrick.—31 Put them under saws, &c.] Some of the inhabitants he caused to be sawn in sunder; over others horses drew harrows with great iron teeth; others were drawn over sharp sickles, or sharp stones, which perhaps he means by brick-kilns: for so some interpreters understand it, that he dragged them through the place where bricks were made; and there grated their flesh upon the ragged pieces of broken bricks. Though some will have this word malcken to signify the place where the Ammonites offered their sacrifices to their god Moloch, or Malcom (as he is often called), and made the people there to pass through the fire. So the Vulgar translates it for-nacem Moloch, "the furnace of Moloch." This dreadful punishment was to terrify other countries from violating the right of nations, by abusing public ambassadors. Though many have thought it too severe, and looked upon it as an argument, that David did this in the state of his impenitence: when the mild and gentle Spirit of God was departed from him, and he was become cruel and furious, as well as lustful.

Thus did he unto all the cities.] This will not let us think that he punished so cruelly only those who advised the using of his ambassadors shamefully, or applauded it (as many it is likely did, that lived in Rabbah), for he treated all the cities in the country in the same rigorous manner.

Ken.—And put them under saws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them pass through the brick-kiln. If it is a duty of humanity to vindicate every man's character, when charged wrongfully; this is the more necessary, in proportion as the character is more exalted. David was a prince truly eminent and illustrious. And though it is certain that he was guilty of some great crimes, yet it is as certain that he ought not to be charged with crimes or cruelties of which he was really innocent. One heavy charge has been urged against him from this part of the sacred history; as if it represented him sawing, and harrowing, and chopping, and burning all the Ammonites: a savage representation which has raised much clamour among the enemies of revelation. But a charge so severe as this, and so very unlikely to be true, should be examined into with great care: and if the original records are consulted accurately, they will, I humbly apprehend, set the matter in a different light. Here in Samuel, the two first words signify et posuit in serra, as in the interlinear Latin version: which words are a true key to the following, and fairly show that David put them to the saw, and sentenced them to the other hard works of slavery. The whole mistake seems to have arisen from an error in the Hebrew text of the parallel place in Chronicles, by the omission of one small part of one letter: for the word instead of וַיִּסַּר, et posuit, is now וַיִּסַּר, et serravit, in 1 Chron. xx. 3. This corruption was probably very ancient, because expressed in the Greek version. But still there can be little doubt that the two words were at first the same: and if so, the context requires the word in Samuel, especially as that reading is confirmed by five Heb. MSS. in Chronicles.

Dr. A. Clarke.—He brought forth the people.] And put them under saws. From this representation a great cry has been raised against "David's unparalleled, if not diabolic, cruelty." I believe this interpretation was chiefly taken from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 3, where it is said, he cut them with saws, and with axes, &c. Instead of וַיִּסַּר, he sawed, we have here (in Samuel) וַיִּסַּר, he put them; and these two words differ from each other only in a part of a single letter, ר for ס. And it is worthy of remark, that, instead of וַיִּסַּר, he sawed, in 1 Chron. xx. 3, six or seven MSS. collated by Dr. Kennicott have וַיִּסַּר, he put them; nor is there found any various reading in all the MSS. yet collated for the text in this chapter, that favours the common reading in Chronicles. The meaning therefore is, He made the people slaves, and employed them in sawing, making iron harrows, or mining (for the word means both), and in hewing of wood, and making of brick. Sawing asunder, hacking, chopping, and hewing human beings, have no place in this text, no more than they had in David's conduct towards the Ammonites.

It is surprising, and a thing to be deplored, that in this and similar cases our translators had not been more careful to sift the sense of the original words, by which they would have avoided a profusion of exceptionable meanings with which they have clothed many passages of the sacred writings. Though I believe our translation to be by far the best in any language, ancient or modern, yet I am satisfied it stands much in need of revision. Most of the advantages which our unbelievers have appeared to have over certain passages of Scripture, have arisen from an inaccurate or false translation of the terms in the original; and an appeal to this has generally silenced the gainsayers. But in the time in which our translation was made, Biblical criticism was in its infancy, if indeed it did exist; and we may rather wonder that we find things so well, than be surprised that they are no better.

Brick-kiln.

Prof. Lee.—כִּלְנֵי, masc.—pl. non occ., ר. לֵנִי. Lit. brick-place; and may signify either a brick-yard or brick-kiln [so Gesen.].

The former seems most likely, 2 Sam. xii. 31; Jer. xliii. 9; Nah. iii. 14. LXX, διὰ τοῦ πλινθίου.

Houb.—במלך: Masora, במלך, per laterariam. Huic sententiæ obstat pronomen אמ, eos, quod de iisdem effertur, quos David subiecit serris ac tribulis ferreis; neque enim eosdem David tribulis ac serris humi prostratos laniaverit, et in laterariam coniecerit; ut necesse sit in verbis אמ, דעביר במלך, narrari, quomodo eorumdem hominum, quos David sub serris ac tribulis prosterni jusserat, supplicium absolveretur, significari- que verbo במלך, vel aculeos, vel dentes, per quos illi homines humi strati laniarentur. Nos conjecturæ indulgemus, ne sententia pereat; et credimus olim scriptum fuisse במלך, non מלך. Nam מלך, quod de stimulo bovis usurpatur, possit etiam notare aculeos tribulorum, vel dentes serrarum.

Gesenius.—מִשְׁחָה, a frying-pan, 2 Sam. xiii. 9. Chald. מִשְׁחָה, מִשְׁחָה, id. The etymology is uncertain, and it is even doubtful whether מ is radical or servile. But probably it is servile, and then the root may be שָׁח (שָׁחַ) i. q. שָׁרַ, to shine, to glitter; whence then שָׁחַ, and מִשְׁחָה a metal pan, so called from being kept bright.

Professor Lee.—מִשְׁחָה, m. once, 2 Sam. xiii. 9. Probably, a frying-pan. LXX, τὸ τήγανον. But Vulg., quod coxerat, &c. Syr.

Au. Ver.—18 And she had a garment of apparelled. Then his servant brought her

Ged., Booth.—18 Now Tamar had on her the king's virgin daughters anciently wore.

Then, &c.

Anciently. So Josephus, from a reading much more probable than that of the present text: which has been variously corrected and amended, to make it speak something like sense. The best of these seems to be that of Michaëlis, viz., from the age of puberty.

Houb.—18 *Illa autem tunica polymita insignificat non fuisse antea memoratum pallium. Itaque male occultabat mendum

Clericus interpretans, ad stolas superiores

Dathe.—18 (*Induta autem erat tunica quid pallia hoc loco sibi volunt, cum de tunica sermo sit? Pro illis igitur סָבִילִים scri-timentum genus iterum nominari debebat.

Atque in sequenti versu narratur quoque, Tamar tunicam, non pallium, scidisse, quæ vestes fuerunt apud Hebræos perquam

diversæ. Suboluit jam Hubigantius vitium, quod emendavit מַעֲלָה, a teneris s. a prima juventute. Michaëlis propius ad verum videtur accessisse, dum legi vult מַעֲלָה, a pubertate ab גַּלְמ, coëundi cupidus fuit.

Gesen., Thes.—מַעֲלָה m. vestimenti genus (a tegendo, v. rad. No. 1), tunica longior et amplior, qualem gestabant puellæ (ac regis quidem filiæ præter consuetudinem manicatam: sic enim explicanda sunt verba 2 Sam. xiii. 18: gestabat ea מַעֲלָה, tunicam manicatam: מַעֲלָה גְּבוּלָהּ הָיְתָה, sic enim sc. manicatas filiæ regis, dum virginis erant, solebant gestare tunicas), reges et principes 1 Sam. xviii. 4; xxiv. 5, 12; 1 Par. xv. 27; Ez. xxvi. 16, alique viri nobiliores, Iob. i. 20; ii. 12, sacerdotes, velut Samuel, 1 Samuel xv. 27; xxviii. 14; Esras, Esr. ix. 3, 5, &c.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—To this verse the Septuagint add the following words: Καὶ οὐκ ἐλυπησε τὸ πνεῦμα Ἀμνὼν τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, οὐ γὰρ ἀγαπᾷ αὐτὸν, ὅτι πρωτοτοκος αὐτοῦ ἦν. "But he would not grieve the soul of Amnon his son, for he loved him, because he was his first-born." [So Houb., Ged., Booth.] The same addition is found in the Vulgate and in Josephus, and it is possible that this once made a part of the Hebrew text.

Houb.—21 וַיִּדָּן ה' כֹּחַ, et graviter doluit. Post hæc verba hæc addimus, quæ non Hæc autem omissa fuerunt a Scribis Codicum Hodiernorum, ex occasione verborum sequentium וַיִּדָּן, quia similiter incipiebant per וַיִּדָּן, quæ omissa sunt. Nempe et noluit, est Hebraicè וַיִּדָּן, quomodo infra, ver. 25. Nimium jejune diceretur, Davidem de stupro filiæ suæ oblato graviter doluisse, nisi adderetur, vel Amnon, stupri autorem, non impune tulisse, vel si scelus impune fuit, cur David meritas a filio suo pœnas non reposeret. Aiunt quidam, id, quod habent Græci et Vulgatus, fuisse olim in margine scriptum, deinde ex margine in Contextum allatum. Sed causam probabilem non afferunt, cur ad marginem scripta ea fuerint, quæ ad contextum intelligendum necessaria non essent, nec vero ex ullo alio scripturæ loco desumpta; nos vero causam maxime probabilem damus eam, quam mox diximus, cur hæc omissa fuerint. Nam simili ex causa permulta omittuntur, codicibus describendis.

Ver. 22.

וְלֹא־דָבָר אֶבְשָׁלוֹם עִם־אֲמֹנֹן לְמַעַן וְעַד־מָוֶת קִישָׁרָא אֶבְשָׁלוֹם אֶת־אֲמֹנֹן עַל־דִּבְכֵּי אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה אֵת תָּמָר חֹתָנֹהּ :

καὶ οὐκ ἐλάλησεν Ἀβεσσαλώμ μετὰ Ἀμνὼν ἀπὸ πονηροῦ ἕως ἀγαθοῦ, ὅτι ἐμίσηε Ἀβεσσαλώμ τὸν Ἀμνὼν ἐπὶ λόγου, οὗ ἐταπεινώσε Θεμάρ τὴν ἀδελφὴν αὐτοῦ.

Au. Ver.—22 And Absalom spake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad: for Absalom hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

Pool.—For Absalom hated Amnon; or rather, but [so Dathe], or though [so Patrick, Ged., Booth.] Absalom, as the Hebrew particle chi commonly signifies; for the following clause is not added as a reason of the former, but by way of exception or opposition. Though he outwardly expressed no dislike of the fact, yet he inwardly hated him.

Bp. Patrick.—Though he hated him in his heart, yet he never expressed the least resentment. So the particle ki should be translated, not for, but though. By this means Amnon was lulled asleep into a belief that Absalom would not trouble him for what he had done, because he did not threaten, nor so much as expostulate with him, nor take any notice of what had passed.

Houb.—Quippe illi infensus erat.

Ver. 26.

וַיֹּאמֶר אֲבִישָׁלוֹם לְדָוִד יְלֹדֶיךָ אֶתְּנָה אֲתָנָה אֲמִנֵּן אֲחִי וְנִי

καὶ εἶπεν Ἀβессαλώμ πρὸς αὐτόν, καὶ εἰ μὴ, πορευθήτω δὴ μεθ' ἡμῶν Ἀμνὼν ὁ ἀδελφός μου, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

If not, I pray thee, &c.

Booth.—26 Then said Absalom, If thou wilt not go [Syr.], I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us.

Houb.—26 Tum Absalom regi; quando quidem ait, rex non venturus est, veniat, quæso, Amnon frater meus, &c.

Ver. 28.

Au. Ver.—28 Now Absalom had commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's heart is merry with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, fear not: have not I commanded you [or, will you not, since I have commanded you, Josh. i. 9]? be courageous, and be valiant [Heb., sons of valour].

Ged., Booth.—28 Absalom made a feast like the feast of a king [LXX, Vulg.]; And Absalom commanded his servants, saying, &c.

Ver. 33, 34.

וַיֹּאמֶר אֲבִישָׁלוֹם לְדָוִד יְלֹדֶיךָ אֶתְּנָה אֲתָנָה — 33

וַיִּבְרַח אֲבִישָׁלוֹם וַיֵּלֶךְ חֲמֵשׁ יָמִים

v. 33. וְנִי אֲחִי וְנִי

33 — οτι ἀλλ' ἢ Ἀμνὼν μονώτατος ἀπέθανε. 34 καὶ ἀπέδρα Ἀβессαλώμ. καὶ ἤρε τὸ παι δάριον, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—33 Now therefore let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But Absalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way.

For Amnon only is dead. 34 But Absalom fled. So Houb.

Ged., Booth.—34 For Amnon only is dead; and Absalom will have fled.

Dathe.—Amnon tantum mortuus est, 34 et Absalomus fuga evasit, &c.

Ver. 37.

וַיִּתְּנָה אֲבִישָׁלוֹם עַל-יָדֵיכֶם פְּלִיִּתִימִים :

— καὶ ἐπένθησεν ὁ βασιλεὺς Δαυὶδ ἐπὶ τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας.

Au. Ver.—And David mourned for his son every day.

Ged., Booth.—And David [versions, so Dathe] mourned for his son many days. [So Syr., Arab., and four MSS., with several copies of Vulg. The rest "every day." Ged.]

Houb.—... וְנִי אֲחִי וְנִי, et plorabat. Omnes, præter Chaldæum, supplent David; Græci autem, rex David, ex scriptura דָּוִד, quæ eadem recurrit versu inferiori, quæque est hoc versu non minus necessaria: nam דָּוִד, nimis longo intervallo est, quam ut id sacra pagina omiserit, præsertim cum verba ea, quæ antecedunt, non ad David, sed ad Absalom pertineant.

Ver. 39.

וַיִּתְּנָה אֲבִישָׁלוֹם עַל-יָדֵיכֶם פְּלִיִּתִימִים : וַיִּבְרַח אֲבִישָׁלוֹם וַיֵּלֶךְ חֲמֵשׁ יָמִים καὶ ἐκόπασεν ὁ βασιλεὺς Δαυὶδ τοῦ ἐξελθεῖν πρὸς Ἀβессαλώμ, οτι παρεκλήθη ἐπὶ Ἀμνὼν, οτι ἀπέθανε.

Au. Ver.—38 So Absalom fled, and went to Geshur, and was there three years.

39 And the soul of king David longed [or, was consumed] to go forth unto Absalom: for he was comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

Pool.—To go forth unto Absalom, to wit, to visit him, or to send for him. And thus this word the soul is here understood, partly from the Hebrew verb, which being of the feminine gender, agrees not with David, but with David's soul; and partly by comparing this with other places, where the same verb is used, and the soul expressed, as Psalm lxxxiv. 2; cxix. 81. But as this supplement may seem too bold, so this version seems not so well to agree with that phrase of going out to Absalom; for David neither desired nor intended to go out to Absalom, but that Absalom should come home to him. And these words may be and are otherwise rendered, by the most ancient and remarkable interpreters, to this purpose; And king David made an end of going out (to wit, in an hostile manner, as that verb is often used. Gen. xiv. 18; 2 Sam. xi. 1) against (for so the Hebrew particle el is often used, as Jer. xxxiv. 7; Ezek. xiii. 9, 20; Amos vii. 15) Absalom; i. e. having used some, though it is probable but cold and remiss, endeavours to pursue after Absalom, and to fetch him from his grandfather's to receive condign punishment, he now gave over thoughts of it. Thus the same verb, and that in the same conjugation, is used in the same manner, 1 Kings iii. 1, he made an end of building. It is to be objected, That the Hebrew verb is of the feminine gender, and therefore doth not agree with king David, which is masculine. It may be answered, that enallage of genders is a most frequent figure; and as the masculine gender is sometimes applied to women when they do some manly and gallant action, Exod. i. 21, so the feminine gender is sometimes used of men when they show an effeminate tenderness in their disposition; which is the case here, as some learned Hebricians have noted.

Bp. Patrick.—The soul of king David longed to go forth unto Absalom.] He had a vehement desire to see him. Though some, even of the ancients, translate the words, "he ceased to pursue after Absalom:" as if he had at first endeavoured to seize him, either in his flight to Geshur, or afterward, when at any time he went abroad. But ours appears to be a true translation, from the beginning of the next chapter; where David's heart is said to be towards Absalom.

Bp. Horsley.—Perhaps, for וַיֵּחַל, the true reading may have been וַיִּחַל. "And David the king restrained himself from pursuing Absalom." To this effect the Vulgate.

Ged., Booth.—38 But when Absalom, who had fled and gone to Geshur, had been there three years, (39) king David longed for Absalom; for he was comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

Houb.—39 וַיֵּחַל דָּוִד: Nos, interea cessavit David, quia cum Vulgato, legimus וַיִּחַל, ne sit solecismus. Sed dubitamus, an sit legendum cum Chaldaeo דָּוִד נִסָּח, et desiderabat anima David (exire ad Absalom) vel וַיֵּחַל, genere fem. Hæc sententia melius quadrat in id, quod sequitur. Et recte additur נִסָּח, quo verbum נִסָּח semper nititur, ubi habet significatum desiderandi.

Maurer.—וַיֵּחַל דָּוִד וְנִסָּח Hunc locum Hitzigius Begriff, p. 139, negans, lectionem receptam tolerabilem sensum præbere, ita restituendum putat: וַיֵּחַל דָּוִד, et constituit Davides rex (propr. es wurde [von] dem K. David beschlossen, cf. 1 Sam. xx. 7, 9, 33, et quoad formam Ex. xxxix. 32) egredi, i. e., sanguinis vindices emittere adversus Absalomum, mærebat enim Amnonis mortem. Illud quidem verissimum est, verba recepta significare non posse: desiit Davides rex egredi contra Absalomum (sensu supra notato), erat enim de morte Amnonis consolatus. Ita enim leges grammaticæ pro וַיֵּחַל poscerent וַיִּחַל. Præterea nusquam legitur, Davidem sanguinis vindices adversus Absalomum emisisse. Denique tantum abest, ut Davides de morte Amnonis fuerit consolatus, ut vs. 37 contrarium dicatur. Sed vide, an non vulgaris lectio alium eumque satis commodum sensum fundat. Scilicet inter omnes constat, verbum נִסָּח notionem suam interdum mutuari a נִסָּח. Hoc autem inter alia significat continuit, cohibuit. Quo significato si sumas nostrum וַיֵּחַל, facillimus hic sensus prodibit: neque a se impetrare potuit Davides rex, ut exiret ad Absalomum sc. ejus videndi causa (propr. und es hielt ihn zu rück, h. e., dolor, quo mors filii Davidem affecerat [cf. seqq.] eum cohibuit cet.); dolebat enim mortem Amnonis.

Au. Ver.—9 And the woman of Tekoah said unto the king, My lord, O king, the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house: and the king and his throne be guiltless.

Pool.—The sense is, either, first, If I do not inform thee aright, and thou thereby be drawn to give an unrighteous sentence on my behalf, I am willing to bear the whole blame of it before God and men; I acknowledge thou art wholly innocent in the case. Compare Gen. xxvii. 13. Or, secondly, this, If through thy forgetfulness or neglect of this my just cause, my adversaries prevail and destroy my son, my desire is, that God would not lay it to the king's charge, but rather to me and mine, so the king may be exempted thereby. Whereby she both insinuates her great esteem of and affection for the king, thereby winning upon him to compass her design; and withal implies that such an omission of the king's will bring guilt upon him; and yet most prudently and decently orders her phrase so as not to seem to blame or threaten the king. Comp. Exod. v. 16; 2 Sam. xx. 16. This sense seems best to agree with David's answer, which shows that she desired some further assurance of the king's care and justice in her concern.

Au. Ver.—11 Then said she, I pray thee, let the king remember the Lord thy God, that thou wouldest not suffer the revengers of blood to destroy any more [Heb., that the revenger of blood do not multiply to destroy], lest they destroy my son. And he said, As the Lord liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman said, Let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word unto my lord the king. And he said, Say on.

13 And the woman said, Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing against the people of God? for the king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king doth not fetch home again his banished.

14 For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: neither doth God respect any person: yet doth he devise means [or, because God hath not taken away his life, he hath also devised means, &c.], that his banished be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to speak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thine handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be comfortable [Heb., for rest]: for as an angel of God, so is my lord the king to discern [Heb., to hear] good and bad: therefore the Lord thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

Pool.—11 Let the king remember the Lord thy God: the sense is, either, first, Make mention (as this Hebrew verb is oft rendered) of the name of the Lord thy God, to wit, in an oath, i. e. swear to me by God [so Patrick, Horsley], that thou wilt protect me and my son against the revenger of blood; for so David did in compliance with this desire of hers. Only she was forced to express her mind in more general and ambiguous terms, because it had been presumption and rudeness for her in plain terms to desire the king's oath, as if she durst not trust his word; yet withal she insinuates her meaning so plainly that the king understood it; and yet so handsomely and elegantly, that the king was much pleased with her wisdom, and thereby inclined to grant her request. Or, secondly, this, Remember the gracious nature of thy God, who is not too severe and rigorous to mark at all that is amiss, nor doth cut off every man-slayer, as appears from Numb. xxxv., and from the example of Cain, and from thyself, O king; though this she expresseth not, but only useth such words which she knew would give so wise and good a king occasion to reflect upon himself, and upon the goodness of God in sparing him, though a wilful murderer, that thereby he might be obliged to imitate God, in sparing the person whom she designed. Or, thirdly, this, Remember the Lord, in whose presence thou hast made me this promise, and who will be a witness against thee, if thou breakest it. That thou wouldest not suffer the revengers of blood to destroy any more, Heb. lest the avenger of blood multiply to destroy, i. e. lest they cause one destruction to another, and add my surviving son to him who is slain already. Or, lest thou dost multiply avengers of blood to destroy, i. e. lest by thy connivance at their cruel and malicious proceedings against my son, thou dost encourage avengers of blood to the like furious practices, and thereby increase the number of that sort of men, and upon that pretence occasion multitudes of murders. Lest they destroy my son ; or and let them not destroy my son ; the future tense being put for the imperative mood, as is frequent.

12 Having obliged the king by his oath in her supposed case, she now throws off the veil, and begins to apply this parable to the king's and kingdom's present case [so Patrick].

13 If thou wouldst not permit the avengers of blood to molest me, or to destroy my son, who are but two persons ; how unreasonable is it that thou shouldst proceed in thy endeavours to avenge Amnon's blood upon Absalom, whose death would be highly injurious and grievous to the whole commonwealth of Israel, all whose eyes are upon him as the heir of the crown, and a wise, and valiant, and amiable person, unhappy only in this one act of killing Amnon, which was done upon a high and heinous provocation, and whereof thou thyself didst give the occasion, by permitting Amnon to go unpunished ! The king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty ; by thy word, and promise, and oath given to me for thy son, thou condemnest thyself for not allowing the same equity towards thy own son. His banished, to wit, Absalom, from that heathenish country, where he is in evident danger of being infected with their idolatry and other vices ; which is likely to be a great and public mischief to all thy people, if he come to reign in thy stead, which he is very likely to do.

14 We must needs die, Heb., in dying we shall die, i. e., we shall certainly and suddenly die all of us ; both thou, O king, who therefore art obliged to take due care of thy successor, who is Absalom ; and Absalom, who, if he do not die by the hand of justice, must shortly die by the necessity of nature ; and Amnon too must have died in the common way of all flesh, if Absalom had not cut him off. Therefore, O king, be not implacable towards Absalom for nipping a flower a little before its time of fading, and restore him to us all before he die in a strange land. Neither doth God respect any person, to wit, so far as to exempt him from this common law of dying. But this version seems not to agree with the Scripture phrase ; for the accepting of a person is never to my knowledge expressed in Hebrew by nasa nephesh, which is the phrase here, but by nasa panim, everywhere. The words therefore may be rendered either thus, yet God will not take away, or doth not use to take away (the future tense oft noting a continued act, as Hebricians observe), the soul, or souls, or lives of men, to wit, by violence. God doth not severely and instantly cut off offenders, but suffers them to live till they die by the course of nature ; and therefore so shouldst thou do too. Or rather thus, yet God hath not taken away his soul or life ; the pronoun his being understood here as it is in many other places, and as being easily supplied out of the context. So the sense is, God hath hitherto spared him, and did not suffer his brethren to kill him, as in reason might have been expected ; nor hath God himself yet cut him off for his murder, as he oft doth with persons who are out of the magistrate's reach ; but hath hitherto preserved him even in a heathenish land ; all which are intimations that God would have him spared. Yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him ; or, but hath devised means, &c., i. e., hath given laws to this purpose, that the man-slayer who is banished should not always continue in banishment, but upon the high priest's death return to his own city ; whereby he hath showed his pleasure that the avenger of blood should not implacably persist in seeking revenge, and that the man-slayer should be spared. Or rather thus, but thinketh thoughts, or, but hath designed, or, therefore he intendeth that he who is banished (to wit, Absalom) be not (always) expelled or banished from him, i. e., from God and from his people, and from the place of his worship, but that he should return home to him. So the sense is, that God, by sparing Absalom's life in the midst of dangers, did sufficiently intimate that he would in due time bring him back to his land and people.

15 It is because the people have made me afraid ; the truth is, I was even forced to this bold address to thee by the disposition and condition of thy people, who are discontented at Absalom's perpetual banishment, and full of fears ; either lest, upon thy death, which none knoweth how soon it may happen, they should be involved in a civil war about thy successor ; or lest, in the mean time, if Absalom by his father-in-law's assistance invade the land, and endeavour by force to regain and secure his right to the succession, the people, who have a great opinion of him, and kindness for him, and think he is very hardly used, should take up arms for him; or lest he who is thy heir and successor should, by continual and familiar conversation with heathens, be insnared in their errors, or alienated from the true religion, and from God's worship, from which he is now utterly excluded. And thy handmaid said, or, therefore thy handmaid said; either within myself, i. e., I intended; or to the people, to quiet them.

16 For I know the king is so wise and just, that I assure myself of audience and acceptance.

Out of the inheritance of God, i. e. out of that inheritance which God hath given to me and mine; or out of that land which God gave to his people to be their inheritance and possession, and in which alone God hath settled the place of his presence and worship; whereby she intimates the danger of Absalom's living in a state of separation from God and his house, and amongst idolaters.

17 The word of my lord the king shall now be comfortable; I doubt not the king will give a gracious and satisfactory answer to my petition. As an angel of God, to wit, in wisdom, and justice, and goodness. To discern good and bad; to hear and judge of causes and requests, whether they be just, and good, and fit to be granted, as mine is; or unrighteous, and unreasonable, and fit to be rejected. Therefore; because thou art so wise, and just, and pitiful, and gracious to those who in strict justice deserve punishment. The Lord thy God will be with thee; God will own and stand by thee in this thy act of grace; or, God will prosper thee in thy enterprises; or, at least, not be offended with thee.

Bp. Patrick.—11 Let the king remember the Lord thy God.] She seems to desire him to confirm what he had said by an oath. For men swore by remembering (or making mention of) the name of the Lord. Others think she only prays him to remember how merciful and gracious God is, and had been to himself, even in pardoning the murder of Uriah.

The revengers of blood to destroy.] In the Hebrew, to multiply to destroy: that is, after she had lost one son, to take away the life of the other, as the next words explain it.

Lest they destroy my son.] Or, "let them not destroy my son," which remains.

13 Against the people of God.] Who were in danger to lose Absalom, the heir of the crown; which was far worse than the private loss of her son.

For the king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty.] In the sentence he had pronounced for her, he had condemned himself, because he had not called Absalom from his exile. This looks like too bold a speech: but the sense is no more than this; Do not judge otherwise in thy own case, than thou hast done in mine.

14 For we must needs die, and are as water spilt on the ground.] She pleads for further pity towards him, from the consideration of our common mortality; and represents that death comes on apace, and we need not hasten it: and when we are dead, we can no more be recovered, than water when it is spilt on the ground, which is presently sucked up and seen no more. Some apply this to his mourning for Amnon; as if she had said, Dost thou still weep for thy other son? he must have died; and now he is gone, thy tears cannot call him to life again. But this is not probable, because it is said in the conclusion of the foregoing chapter, "He was comforted concerning Ammon, seeing he was dead."

Neither doth God respect any person.] If this be a right translation, the meaning is, that David himself was mortal, though a great king. But I think the Hebrew words, issa nephesh, never signify respect to persons; but the word panim is used in that sense, not nephesh, which signifies the soul, as the other doth the face or countenance. Therefore these words should be translated, "God doth not take away the soul, or life." She argues from the sparing mercy of God, who doth not presently inflict the punishment of death when men have deserved it. And perhaps she had in this a particular respect to Absalom, whom God had not cut off; but let him live; and therefore she desires David to imitate God.

Yet doth he devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him.] Or, according to the foregoing words, "But he doth devise means," &c. God provided many cities of refuge, she means, to which he that slew another unawares might flee: where, though he was banished from his habitation for a time, he was not quite expelled, but might return again after the death of the high priest. From whence she argues, that kings being the images of God, nothing could more become them than clemency and mercy; in mitigating the punishment of offenders, though there was just cause of anger against them. Which still was short of the present case; for God was not so merciful as to provide for the safety of a wilful murderer. But such specious arguments are good enough, when men are willing to be persuaded: and nothing more moving than the example of God, who doth not delight in the death of a sinner.

15 It is because the people have made me afraid.] This sounds as if the people talked so discontentedly about Absalom's banishment, that it was another motive to her to make this address to the king. But it doth not seem to me to be likely that the people were dissatisfied, because he was not recalled: but rather David was afraid the people would be dissatisfied if he did recall him. I said indeed before (ver. 13), that David imagined by her speech that they were desirous of his return from banishment; but he did not think so before: and whatsoever their desires might be, they did not express any discontent because he was not; for then there would not have been any need of this woman to bring that about which he desired more than they. Therefore I think the last words should be translated, not because, but "though the people made me afraid." That is, those she advised withal told her it was too bold an attempt: but this did not discourage her; because she presumed the king would be so good as to give her a favourable audience, and not be angry with her, since what she said was well intended. So the next word is to be translated but, not and.

I will now speak unto the king.] This is, notwithstanding the fears which some put into her, she resolved to make this petition; and she gives her reason for it in the next verse.

16 Clemency and kindness are the properties of good kings; and such she saith she knew the king to be, who would take pity upon her and her son, in whose preservation her life was bound up. And when she calls the land of Israel the inheritance of God, who dwelt among them there, she secretly puts the king in mind how dangerous it was to let Absalom (unto whom she had adventured to apply her case) to continue in an idolatrous country; where God was not worshipped, as he was in the land of Israel.

To discern good and bad.] To discern between just and unreasonable petitions, as well as patiently to hear both those things which are grateful, and those which are less acceptable. And therefore she doubted not of such a kind answer as the angels bring, who are messengers of Divine mercy.

The Lord thy God will be with thee.] To direct him to judge aright and to show mercy.

Dr. A. Clarke.—12 The argument contained in this 14th verse is very elegant, and powerfully persuasive; but one clause of it has been variously understood, Neither doth God respect any person; the Hebrew is, וְלֹא יִשָּׁא אֱלֹהִים נָפֶשׁ, "And God doth not take away the soul." The Sept. [Alex.] has it, Καὶ ληψεται ὁ Θεὸς τὴν ψυχὴν, And God will receive the soul. This intimates that, after human life is ended, the soul has a state of separate existence with God. This was certainly the opinion of these translators, and was the opinion of the ancient Jews, at least three hundred years before the incarnation; about which time this translation was made. The Vulgate has, Nec vult Deus perire animam, "Nor does God will the destruction of the soul." God is not the author of death; neither hath he pleasure in the destruction of the living; imitate him; pardon and recall thy son.

God.—11 "I pray thee, then," said she, "let the king remember, for the Lord thy God's sake; not to suffer those numerous blood-avengers to destroy my son." "As the Lord liveth," said the king [Arab., and one MS.], "not one hair of thy son's head [Chald., Syr., Arab., and one MS.] shall fall to the ground." (12) The woman then said: "Let thine handmaid speak a word more to my lord-king." "Speak!" said he. (13) The woman said: "On what ground hast thou thus decided, with respect to God's people? From this decision, the king himself is not guiltless; in as far as he bringeth not home his own exiled son. (14) Since die we must, and are as water spilled upon the earth, which cannot be gathered up again (for God excepteth no person); let the king devise such measures, as that his exiled son be not longer an exile. (15) If I have now come to speak in this manner to the king, it is because people so advised me; and thine handmaid said: 'I will speak to the king: perhaps the king will grant the request of his handmaid.' (16) For thine handmaid thought, if the king will but listen to my first request, to preserve his handmaid out of the hands of the man, who would exterminate me and my son together, from God's inheritance; (17) that then the king's determination, with regard to his own son, would also be favourable. For like an angel of God is my lord-king, in discerning good and bad; and the Lord, thy God, is with thee."

Bp. Horsley.—11 "Let the king remember the Lord thy God, that thou would not suffer the revengers," &c. —"let the king swear by Jehovah thy God, not to give authority to the revengers."

"Not to give authority." מִדְּבָרָהּ, "not to make them great."

15—17 These three verses seem to be misplaced. They should intervene between the 7th and the 8th verses; for they are evidently part of the woman's speech about her own pretended affair; and the 18th verse should follow the 14th immediately.

Booth.—11 Then said she, I pray thee, let the king remember, for the sake of Jehovah, not to suffer the multitude of blood-avengers to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. 15 Now therefore I am come to speak of this thing to my lord the king, because the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid said, I will now speak to the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid. 16 For the king may so hear as to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of every one, who would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God. 17 Thy handmaid also said, The word of my lord the king may now be comfortable: for as an angel of God is my lord the king, to discern good and bad: and may Jehovah thy God be with thee. And he said, As Jehovah liveth, there shall not one hair of thy son fall to the earth. 12 Then the woman said, Let thy handmaid, I pray thee, speak one word to my lord the king. 13 And he said, Say on. And the woman said, On what ground then hast thou thus decided concerning one of the people of God? From the word the king speaketh, he is guilty, in as far as the king bringeth not home his banished son. 14 For we must needs die, and become as water spilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; (for God excepteth no person;) let the king devise means, so that his banished son may no longer be banished from him. 18 Then the king answered and said to the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I am about to ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

Au. Ver.—26 And when he polled his head (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it:) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels after the king's weight.

Pool.—Whereas ordinarily the hair of a man's head which grows in a year's space comes not to half so much. But some men's hair grows much faster, and is much heavier than others. But others understand this not of the weight, but of the price of his hair, which was sold by him that polled it at that rate.

Bp. Patrick.—26 For it was at every year's end that he polled it.] It is not certain that he cut his hair once a year, for the words in the Hebrew are, "from the end of days to days," without any particular designation of the time. And therefore the Targum translates it, at stated times; that is, when it grew too heavy, which might be once in two years, more or less, as Bochartus observes.

He weighed the hair of his head at two hundred shekels.] In those days hair was accounted a great ornament, and the longer it was the more it was esteemed. And therefore no wonder Absalom nourished his with much care, and let it grow to a great length, which made him look more like a goodly person. Inasmuch that, in after ages, they were wont to use art (as perhaps they did now) to make the hair grow, and grow thick and strong (as the same Bochartus hath shown), and they anointed their hair also with fragrant oils, of myrrh, cinnamon, and such like; and after that powdered it with the dust of gold: all which made it very ponderous. So that Absalom's hair weighed, when it was cut off, two hundred shekels: which he demonstrates was no more than three pounds and two ounces of our weight. This is not at all incredible, considering that he let it grow as long as he was able to bear the weight of it; which was increased, it is likely, by such additions as I have mentioned: for a king's son would not want any thing that had add to his splendour. Josephus also informs us, that such ostentation was in use among the Jews in those days; for, speaking of the noble guard which attended king Solomon, with long hair flowing about their shoulders, he saith that they scattered in their hair every day ψ ηγματα τοῦ χρυσίου, "little particles of gold," which made their hair shine and sparkle by the reflection of the sun's rays upon the gold. As for their interpretation, who think that Absalom's hair did not weigh thus much, but was sold for two hundred shekels, Bochartus shows how absurd it is to imagine a king's son would sell his hair, or that any one would buy it, especially at that rate, there being no perukes worn in those days. And besides, the text confutes it, "he weighed the hair of his head," &c., whereas, if it had been sold, the buyer would have weighed the money, not Absalom; as Abraham did when he bought the field of Ephron (Gen. xxiii. 16), and Jeremiah when he bought the field in Anathoth, xxxiii. 9 (see his epistle to Michael Faulkellius, at the end of the third edition of his Geographia Sacra).

Bishop Horsley.—At every year's end; rather, at stated times.

Two hundred shekels after the king's weight, equal to 12 oz. 80 grs. Troy.

Dr. A. Clarke.—"And at every year's end, he (Absalom) polled his head; and he weighed the hair at two hundred shekels."

The very learned Bochart has written a dissertation on this subject (vide Bocharti Opera, vol. iii., coll. 883, edit. Lugd. 1692), in a letter to his friend M. Faulkell. I shall give the substance in what follows.

There is nothing more likely than that corruptions in the Scripture numerals have taken place. Budæus de Asse (lib. ii., p. 49 and 51, also lib. iii., p. 67, &c.) complains loudly of this.

This might easily have happened, as in former times the numbers in the sacred writings appear to have been expressed by single letters. The letter γ stands for two hundred, and might in this place be easily mistaken for τ , which signifies four; but this may be thought to be too little, as it would not amount to more than a quarter of a pound; yet if the two hundred shekels be taken in, the amount will be utterly incredible; for Josephus says (Antiq., lib. vii., cap. 8), Σικλους διακοσious, οἱτοι δε εἰσι πεντε μναι, i. e., "Two hundred shekels make five minæ:" and in lib. xiv., cap. 12, he says, Ἡ δε μνα παρ' ἡμιν ισχει λιτρας β' και ἡμισυ; "And a mina with us (i. e., the Jews) weighs two pounds and a half." This calculation makes Absalom's hair weigh twelve pounds and a half! Credat Judæus Apella!

Indeed, the same person tells us that the hair of Absalom was so thick, &c., ὥς μολις αὐτην ἡμεῖς αποκερειν οκτω, "that eight days were scarcely sufficient to cut it off in!" This is rabbinism, with a witness.

Epiphanius, in his treatise De Ponderibus et Mensuris, casts much more light on this place, where he says, Σικλος ὁ λεγεται και κοδραντης τεταρτον μεν εστι της ουγκιας, ἡμισυ δε του στατηρος, δυο δραχμας εχων. "A shekel (i. e., a common or king's shekel, equal to half a shekel of the sanctuary), which is called also a quarter, is the fourth part of an ounce, or half a stater; which is about two drachms." This computation seems very just, as the half-shekel (i. e., of the sanctuary), Exod. xxx. 13, which the Lord commanded the children of Israel to give as an offering for their souls, is expressly called in Matt. xvii. 24, τα διδραχμα, "two drachms;" and our Lord wrought a miracle to pay this, which the Romans then exacted by way of tribute: and Peter took out of the fish's mouth a stater, which contained exactly four drachms or one shekel (of the sanctuary), the tribute money for our Lord and himself.

The king's shekel was about the fourth part of an ounce, according to what Epiphanius says above; and Hesychius says the same, Δυναται δε ο σικλος δυο δραχμας Αττικας. "A shekel is equal to, or worth, two Attic drachms." The whole amount, therefore, of the two hundred shekels is about fifty ounces, which make four pounds, two ounces, Troy weight, or three pounds two ounces, Avoirdupois. This need not, says my learned author, be accounted incredible, especially as abundance of oil and ointments were used by the ancients in dressing their heads; as is evident, not only from many places in the Greek and Roman writers, but also from several places in the sacred writings. See Ps. xxiii. 5; Eccles. ix. 8; Matt. vi. 17.

Josephus also informs us that the Jews not only used ointments, but that they put gold dust in their hair, that it might flame in the sun; and this they might do in considerable quantities, as gold was so plentiful among them. I must own I have known an instance that makes much for Bochart's argument: an officer, who had upwards of two pounds of powder and ointments put on his head daily, whose hair did not weigh a fourth part of that weight. And Absalom, being exceedingly vain, might be supposed to make a very extensive use of these things. There are some, however, who endeavour to solve the difficulty by understanding שָׁל to mean rather the value than the weight.

Bochart concludes this elaborate dissertation, in which he appears to have ransacked all the Hebrew, Greek, and Roman authors for proofs of his opinion, by exhorting his friend in these words of Horace :

—Si quid novisti rectius istis, Candidus imperti; si non, his utere mecum.

To me the above is quite unsatisfactory; and, with due deference to so great a character, I think I have found out something better.

I believe the text is not here in its original form; and that a mistake has crept into the numeral letters. I imagine that ל, thirty, was first written; which, in process of time, became changed for ר, two hundred, which might easily have happened from the similarity of the letters. But if this be supposed to be too little (which I think it is not), being only seven ounces and a half in the course of a year; let it be observed that the sacred text does not limit it to that quantity of time, for שָׁל ימים לִימים signifies literally, "From the end of days to days;" which Jonathan properly renders, כִּמְעַן יָמִין, "at proper or convenient times," viz., when it grew too long or weighty, which it might be several times in the year. Beside, this was not all his hair; for his head was not shaved, but polled, i. e., the redundancy cut off.

But how was it probable that these two numerals should be interchanged? Thus; if the upper stroke of the ל were but a little impaired, as it frequently is both in MSS. and printed books, it might be very easily taken for ר, and the remains of the upper part of the lamed might be mistaken for the stroke over the ר, which makes it the character of two hundred.

But how could שָׁל, two hundred, in the text, be put in the place of שְׁלֹשִׁים, thirty? Very easily, when the numbers became expressed by words at length instead of numeral letters.

The common reading of the text appears to me irreconcilable with truth; and I humbly hope that what I have offered above solves every difficulty, and fully accounts for all that the sacred historian speaks of this vain-comely lad.

Ged.—When he polled the hair of his head, which he did from time to time, because it burthened him, the weight of the hair of his head was two hundred shekels, according to the royal standard.

Booth.—26 And when he polled his head, which he did from time to time, because it burthened him; and when he polled it the hair of his head weighed two hundred shekels, according to the king's standard.

Bp. Patrick.—How the LXX, in the Vatican edition came to add here, that Tamar was afterward the wife of Rehoboam, and bare him Abijah, I cannot tell, but I suppose it was from some Jewish tradition.

Au. Ver.—30 Therefore he said unto his servants, See, Joab's field is near mine [Heb., near my place], and he hath barley there; go and set it on fire. And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

He said.

Geddes, Booth.—Absalom [LXX, Syr., Arab.] said.

See, Joab's field is near mine, and he hath barley there.

Ged.—Lo! nigh to my monument there is a field of Joab which hath barley.

And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

Houb., Ged., Booth.—And Absalom's servants set the field on fire. And the servants of Joab came to him, with their garments rent, and said, The servants of Absalom have set fire to thy field. [LXX].

Houb.—Addimus hoc versu, quæ legebant Græci et Vulgatus, tum ex eorum autoritate, tum quia causa maxime probabilis apparet, cur hæc omitterentur. Nempe quæ omissa sunt hod. in Codicibus, initium habebant in verbo וַיָּבֵא, et venerunt, ut versus sequens in וַיָּבֵא, et venit; finem vero, in vocabulo וַיָּבֵא, igne; quomodo etiam versus subsequens, ut facile scribæ ex similibus verbis ad similia saltum facerent.

CHAP. XV. 1.

Houb.—וַיָּבֵא, pro וַיָּבֵא, equi, non ferendum esset, ne in codice quidem punctato, quanquam codices omnes sic haberent. Sed melioris notæ codices litteram י, quæ radicis est, non omittunt.

Ver. 2.

Au. Ver.—2 And Absalom rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate: and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy came [Heb., to come] to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel.

Pool.—Beside the way of the gate; either, first, Of the king's palace. Or rather, secondly, Of the city; for that was the place of judicature or judgment, for which these men came.

Bp. Patrick.—Stood beside the way of the gate.] Not of the king's palace, some think, but of the city, where was the seat of judgment. But since he speaks of coming to the king for judgment, it is likely he sat in his own palace at the gate of which Absalom was wont to stand.

Dathe, Ged., Booth.—Palace-gate.

Of one of the tribes of Israel.

Ged., Booth.—Of such, or such a tribe of Israel.

Ver. 7.

וַיָּחִי מֶלֶךְ אֲרָבָעִים שָׁנָה וַיָּמָת וַיָּחִי אֲבִשָׁלוֹם אֶל־הַפֶּלֶא אֲלֶכָה נָא וַיִּשְׁלָם אֶת־יָדָיו אֲשֶׁר־בָּרַחְתִּי לַיהוָה בְּחֶבְרוֹן :

καὶ ἐγένετο ἀπὸ τέλους τεσσαράκοντα ἐτῶν, καὶ εἶπεν Ἀβессαλὼμ πρὸς τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, Πορεύσομαι δὴ, καὶ ἀποτίσω τὰς ἐσχάς μου, ἃς ἠύξάμην τῷ Κυρίῳ ἐν Χεβρών.

Au. Ver.—7 And it came to pass after forty years, that Absalom said unto the king, I pray thee, let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the Lord, in Hebron.

Forty years.

Cap., Grot., Houb., Mich., Schulz, Ken., Horsley, Clarke, Ged., Booth.—After four years [Syr., Arab., four Greek, and four Latin MSS.].

Pool.—After forty years. Quest. Whence are these to be computed? Ans. Not from Absalom's birth; for he was born in Hebron some considerable time after David had begun his reign, 2 Sam. iii. 3, much less from the time of his vow made, or of his return from banishment; but either, first, From the time of David's election or designation to the kingdom, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Or, secondly, from the beginning of Saul's reign; which being a solemn time, and observable for the change of the government in Israel, might very fitly be made an epocha, from which the computation or account of times begin; as the Greeks and Roman's began their accounts in the same manner, and upon the same ground. Or rather, thirdly, From the beginning of David's reign, who reigned forty years; and so the words may be rendered, about or towards the end of forty years, i. e., in the beginning of the fortieth year. And so this very phrase is used Deut. xv. 1, At the end of every seven years, i. e. in the seventh year, even from the beginning of it, as is manifested and confessed. So in a like expression, After three days will I rise again, Mark viii. 31, i. e. on the beginning of the third day, when Christ did rise; the number of three days being then completed when the third day is begun. And the forty years are here expressed as one motive or inducement to Absalom to rebel, because now his father's end grew near; and one of the Hebrew doctors affirms, that there was a tradition, or rumour, or prediction, that David should reign but forty years. And Absalom might easily understand that David intended to decline him, and to make Solomon his successor. Against this opinion two things are objected: first, that David was in the time of this rebellion a strong man, for he marched on foot, ver. 30, whereas in his last year he was very infirm and bedrid. Secondly, That after this rebellion was ended divers other things happened, as the three years' famine, 2 Sam. xxi. 1, and other things following in the history. But it may be answered to the first, that David might in the beginning of his last year have so much strength and vigour left as to march on foot, especially when he did so humble and afflict himself, as it is apparent he did, ver. 30; and yet through his tedious marches, and the tormenting cares, fears, and griefs of his soul for Absalom, might be so strangely and suddenly impaired, as in the end of the same year to be very feeble and bedrid, it being a very common accident, especially in old men, and upon extraordinary occasions, to languish and decline exceedingly, and to fall from some competent degree of health and vigour, to be very infirm and bedrid, and that in the space of a few months. And to the second objection, That those histories related ch. xxi., &c., though they be placed after this rebellion, yet indeed were done before it; the proof of which see on chap. xxi. 1. For it is so confessed and evident, that things are not always placed in the same order in which they were done, that it is a rule of the Hebrews, and approved by other learned men, Non datur prius et posterius in sacris literis; that is, There is no first and last in the order of Scripture relations. And here is a plain reason for this transplacing of this history, which is allowed in other like cases, that when once the history of Tamar's rape had been mentioned, it was very fit to subjoin the relation of all the mischiefs which followed upon that occasion. If any infidel will yet cavil with this text and number of years, let him know, that instead of forty, the Syriac, and Arabic, and Josephus the Jew read four years; and that it is much more rational to acknowledge an error of the scribe, who copied out the sacred text, than upon so frivolous a ground to question the Divine authority of the Holy Scriptures.

Bp. Patrick.—7 After forty years.] One would think, that in the copy which Josephus used, it was written arba, four, not arbaim, forty years: for his words are, μετὰ δὲ τὴν τοῦ πατρὸς καταλλαγὴν τεττάρων ἐτῶν ᾗδῃ παρεληλυθότων, "four years after his father was reconciled to him." But there are no warrants now for this reading: but the forty years here mentioned are not to be understood, as if this happened after David had reigned forty years, that is, in the last year of his reign: for he was now very vigorous, which he was not a little before he died; but, as our great Primate of Ireland in his Annals understands it, forty years after David was anointed by Samuel. That is, when he was threescore years old, ten years before he died. Then his son conspired against him between the feast of the Passover and Pentecost; as some gather from Barzillai's presenting him with parched corn and new fruits, when he fled from Absalom (xvii. 28). And so Strigelius. But the Talmudists in Seder Olam, and other books, will have these forty years to commence from the time that the Israelites asked a king to reign over them. And after all, Abarbanel is of opinion, that the plainest sense is after forty years of David's reign; so that it was about the latter end of his life, when this great calamity befell him, though not in the very last year of it. For it is not said "in the fortieth year," but "about the end of forty years" (see Buxtorf. Anticritica, p. 1,004).

Ken.—After forty years. There being no æra, from which these forty years are to be computed; it can scarce be doubted, but the true number here is four: for when Absalom fled to Geshur, he was there three years (xiii. 38), and this event was soon after his return. In my Second Dissertation on the Hebrew Text, p. 357, I observed, that this number four is confirmed by the Syr. version, by Josephus, Theodore, the famous Vulg. of Sixtus, with the Gothic Latin MS., and some others. To these may be now added four Latin MSS. in my own posὅτι εὐχὴν ᾗξατο ὁ δοῦλός σου ἐν τῷ οἰκεῖν με ἐν Γεδσοῦρ ἐν Συρίᾳ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—8 For thy servant vowed a vow while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, If the LORD shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then I will serve the LORD.

In Syria. So Houb., Pool, Patrick, Dathe, Ged., Booth.

Ken.—Instances have been already given, in which the similar words סַרְיָא, Syria, and אֶדוֹם (or אֶדֻם) Edom, have been exchanged by mistake: and another plain proof occurs here. For that Geshur, the country of Talmi, to whom Absalom fled, lay on the south of Canaan, and in or near Edom, is certain from Judg. i. 10; 2 Sam. xiii. 37; and 1 Sam. xxvii. 8.

Dr. A. Clarke.—While I abode at Geshur in Syria.] Geshur, the country of Talmi, was certainly not in Syria, but lay on the south of Canaan, in or near Edom, as is evident from Judg. i. 10; 1 Sam. xxvii. 8; chap. xiii. 37. Hence it is probable that סַרְיָא, Aram, Syria, is a mistake for אֶדֻם, Edom; ס and ר being easily interchangeable.
 Edom is the reading both of the Syriac and Arabic.

Au. Ver.—10 But Absalom sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying,
 As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom reigneth in Hebron.

Pool.—Absalom sent from Hebron; or, had sent [so Dathe, Ged., Booth.] from Jerusalem; that when he went to Hebron, they should go into the several tribes to sift the people, and to dispose them to Absalom's party, and acquaint them with his success.
As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet; which I shall take care to have sounded in several parts by other persons; and when that is done, you shall inform them of the reason of it. Or, as soon as you understand that the trumpet was sounded at Hebron; auguration to the kingdom, which you shall speedily know by messengers whom I shall send to you to that end.

Au. Ver.—19 Then said the king to Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

Pool.—Return to thy place: either, first, To thy native country of Gath, where thou wilt be remote from our broils. Or, secondly, To Jerusalem, where thy settled abode now is. And abide, or, or abide; for he could not both go to Gath, and tarry in Jerusalem with Absalom. Although this part of the verse lies otherwise in the Hebrew text, and may be rendered thus, Return (to wit, to Jerusalem) and abide with the king (there); for thou art a stranger and exile from thy own place; or, in respect of thy own place, or, as concerning thy place, i. e. in regard of the place of thy birth and former habitation. With the king; with Absalom, who is now made king by the choice of the people, and therefore is able to give that protection and encouragement which thou deservest; whereas I am in a manner deposed, and unable to do for thee what I desired and intended.

Au. Ver.—20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee go up and down [Heb., make thee wander in going] with us? seeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

Mercy and truth be with thee. [So Booth.]

Bp. Patrick.—In the Hebrew the words are, "with thee mercy and truth." Which some take to signify, "thou art a right honest and good man." But our translation seems better, which makes them a form of a blessing, or prayer to God, that he would requite the kindness and fidelity of Ittai, by showing mercy to him, and faithfully fulfilling his promises made to those who came to put their trust in him.

Ged.—Return thou, and take back with thee thy brethren: and may the Lord show thee true kindness, for thy true kindness to me [LXX, Vulg.].

And such he may be called, either, because he really had the gift of prophecy; or because as the name of prophets is sometimes given to those who had not prophetic gifts, but were only officers and ministers devoted to and employed in God's worship and service, as 1 Sam. x. 5, &c.; 1 Kings xviii. 4, 13; compare 1 Chron. xxv. 1—3; so it is reasonable that the name of seers be extended to the same latitude; and therefore he may properly and fitly be called a seer, as he was with and under Abiathar the chief governor of the house and worship of God; who, by his office, was to instruct and direct the people in those matters, whereby he had many opportunities both of sifting out Absalom's counsels, and of minding the people of their duty to David, as he saw opportunity: which sense suits well with David's scope and design. Or, 2. A seeing, or discerning, or observing man; for so the Hebrew verb raah is oft used. Au. Ver.—31 And one told David, saying, Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, O LORD, I pray thee, turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.

And one told David. So Ged., Booth., Maurer.

Pool.—One told David, or, David told, i. e., David being hereof informed, acquaints his friends and followers with it, to stir them up to join with him in the following prayer against him, Turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness; either infatuate him, that he may give foolish counsel; or let his counsel be rejected as foolish, or spoiled by the foolish execution of it.

Bp. Horsley.—And one told David. For דוד, read ידוד; And it was told unto David.

Houb.—דוד הנד, duplici mendo, pro ידוד, דוד Davidi autem nuntiatum est. Sic Syrus, דוד ידוד, et nuntiatum fuit Davidi.

a) Lectio textus recepta est ידוד הנד, et David declaravit, etc. Sed omnes interpretes antiqui passive vertunt: Davidi indicatum est. Præterea duo Kennicotti codd. 155 et 246 habent ידוד הנד, quæ est illa ipsa antiquarum verss. lectio, et alius sub num. 254 habet דוד הנד passive: David certior factus est. Qui testium consensus ex regulis criticis, quas in aliis locis viri docti sequendas præcipiunt, in h. l. non contemnendus videtur. Igitur non possum assentiri Ill. Michaëli, qui lectionem vulgarem defendit ex ratione, quæ nulli interpretum, quod ipse ait, neque antiquorum neque recentiorum in mentem venit, quam vero ipse pro ἀγχινοία sua indagavit. Nempe Davidem jam antea novisse, Ahithophelem conjurationis esse participem, sed noluisse id declarare, ne omnium animos terrore impleret, quoniam ab hujus viri calliditate sibi quisque timuisset. Jam vero, cum alea jacta esset, Davidem, quid factum esset, declarare. —

Quoniam iudicium de eo, quod probabile sit, quod minus, varium esse solet, fateor, nec mihi valde probabile videri, Davidem prius certiore factum esse de Ahithophelis perfidia, quam alios; neque eum tam parum virtuti et constantiæ suorum fidere potuisse, ut sibi verendum fuisset, ne se desererent, aut animos prorsus desponderent, si audirent, Ahithophelem participem esse conjurationis.

Maurer.—31 תָּחִי הַיָּד לְאַסָּלוֹן Hæc Michael., Schulz., Gesenius alique explicant: et Davides indicavit, Achithophelem esse inter eos, qui cum Absalom conjurassent. Nempe Davidem jam antea novisse, Achithophelem conjurationis esse participem, sed noluisse id declarare, ne omnium animos terrore impleret, quoniam ab hujus viri caliditate sibi quisque timuisset. Jam vero, cum alea jacta esset, Davidem, quid factum esset, declarare. At enim vero ex verbis ego morabor in planitie solitudinis יָד בְּיָד vs. 28 clarissime patet, non a Davide aliis, sed ab aliis Davidi hic aliquid indicari. Itaque plerique interpretes, in his nuper Fäsius, pro הַיָּד לְאַסָּלוֹן legendum existimarunt תָּחִי הַיָּד לְאַסָּלוֹן: et Davidi indicavit sc. הַיָּד, i. e., indicarunt, indicatum est. Quid vero, si lectio recepta eundem hunc sensum fundit? Meminerint lectores, הַיָּד non solum cum dativo, verum etiam cum accusativo pers. (certiorem facere aliquem) construi, ut Ezech. xliii. 10: הַיָּד לְאַסָּלוֹן cf. ib. xl. 4: הַיָּד לְבֵית יִשְׂרָאֵל; Job xxvii. 4: הַיָּד לְבֵית יִשְׂרָאֵל. Igitur etiam veteres interpretes, quorum alii habent: et Davidi nunciarunt, alii: et Davidi nunciatum est, nullam aliam quam receptam scripturam legisse, et codicum varias lectiones: קָדָד K. 155, 246, R. 679, תָּחִי Tharg. cod. Au. Ver.—1 And when David was a little past the top of the hill, behold, Ziba, the servant of Mephibosheth met him, with a couple of asses saddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raisins, and an hundred of summer fruits, and a bottle of wine.

Au. Ver.—4 Then said the king to Ziba, Behold thine are all that pertained to Mephibosheth. And Ziba said, I humbly beseech thee [Heb., I do obeisance] that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king.

And Ziba said, I humbly beseech thee that I may find favour in thy sight, &c.

Ged., Booth.—And Ziba, making obeisance, said, May I find favour in thine eyes, my lord the king.

Making obeisance.—I have followed a reading which seems to have been that of Sept. and Chald. The present text runs thus: "Ziba said, 'I make obeisance; may I,'" &c. And so Jerom appears to have read in his copy.

Houb.—Tum Siba; ego minor sum beneficentia ista Domini mei regis.

Au. Ver.—7 And thus said Shimei when he cursed, Come out, come out, thou bloody man [Heb., man of blood], and thou man of Belial.

Come out, come out.

Ged., Booth.—Get off, get off.

Bp. Patrick.—Come out, come out.] As much as if he had said, Get thee out of the kingdom, from whence thou deservest to be expelled. So the words are in the Hebrew, "Go out, go out."

שָׁלוֹם:

2 καὶ ἐπελεύσομαι ἐπ' αὐτὸν καὶ αὐτὸς κοπιῶν καὶ ἐκκλησούμενος χειρὶ, καὶ ἐκστήσω αὐτὸν, καὶ φεύξεται πᾶς ὁ λαὸς ὁ μετ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ πατάξω, τὸν βασιλέα μονώτατον· 3 καὶ ἐπιστρέψω πάντα τὸν λαὸν πρὸς σέ, ὃν τρόπον ἐπιστρέφει ἡ νύμφη πρὸς τὸν ἄνδρα αὐτῆς. πλὴν ψυχὴν ἀνδρὸς ἐνὸς σὺ ζητεῖς, καὶ παντὶ τῷ λαῷ ἔσται εἰρήνη.

Au. Ver.—2 And I will come upon him while he is weary, and weak-handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him shall flee; and I will smite the king only:

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee: the man whom thou seekest is as if all returned: so all the people shall be in peace.

Pool.—2 The man whom thou seekest is as if all returned, i.e. the death of that man whom thou seekest to destroy is no less considerable to thee, than if all the people that follow him should desert him and return unto thee.

Bp. Patrick.—The man, &c. By smiting David, with whom alone was his quarrel, the whole nation would come into him: there being no other, to whom they should subnit when he was dead.

Bp. Horsley.—And I will bring back, &c. This verse, as the Hebrew text now stands, is not reducible to any sense at all. Accordingly, the words of our translation, in which the Hebrew is literally rendered, have no meaning. By the version of the LXX, their copies seem to have given the passage thus:

ואשיבה כל העם אליך כשוב כלל
לאישה: איש אחד אשר אתה מבקש
נפשו: לכל העם יהיה שלום:

And I will make all the people return unto thee, as a bride returneth to her husband: He is one man whose life thou art seeking: Let the people in general have peace.

הכל לאשה might be changed into האיש, by the omission of one ל, and a transposition of the other letters. The word נפשו might easily be omitted after מבקש, and the omission of the prefix ל is not uncommon.

Ged.—3 I shall come upon him when he is weary, and weak handed, and terrify him; and while all the people who are with him flee, I will smite the king only. (4) And the whole people I will bring back to thee, as a bride is brought to her husband [LXX]; every man whom thou wishest for, the whole people of the Lord, in peace.

3 As a bride, &c. i. e. as quietly; without tumult or bloodshed.

Booth.—2 And I shall come upon him while he is weary and weak-handed, and terrify him: and, while all the people that are with him flee, I will smite the king only. 3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee, as a bride is brought to her husband [LXX]; (for only one man's life thou seekest;) and the whole people shall have peace.

Houb.—2 Ego eum assequar lassatum et sine viribus. Itaque ei terrorem injiciam et omnes qui cum eo sunt fugient; percutiamque eum unum regem, quem tu petis. 3 Faciamque ut ad te omnis populus revertatur, quomodo sponsa redit ad maritum suum; et deinde omnia erunt in populo tranquilla.

3. כשוב הכל האיש, sicut revertitur omnis ille homo (quem tu quæris). Hæc nihil dicunt, etsi in iis Clericus, sensum commodum videre sibi videbatur. Nam hæc verba, quem tu quæris, significant, quem tu ad necem persequeris. Sic Jud. iv. 22, Jahel, Baracum alloquens, de Sisara apud se dormiente, sic loquitur, veni et ostendam tibi hominem, quem tu quæris. Constat igitur hominem eum esse ipsum Davidem, quem quærebat Absalom, ut eum interficeret, atque adeo hæc verba, אשר אחד מבקש, collocanda esse proxime post hæc הכה המלך לבדו, ut series sit talis, et percutiam regem solum, quem tu quæris; ut deinde sequatur, reducamque ad te populum, sicut revertitur sponsa ad maritum suum; ita ut pro הכל האיש, legatur כלה לאיש, sponsa ad virum suum, quam scripturam Græci Interpretes exhibent in iis verbis Græcis, η νύμφη προς τον ανδρα αυτης: quæ sententia in hunc locum mirifice quadrat.

Dathe.—2 Aggrediar eum adhuc fatigatum ex itinere et imprudentem, atque terrore ei injecto fugient omnes, quos secum habet, et sic unus rex occidetur. 8 Tunc reducam ad te universum populum. Idem erit ac si omnes reverterentur, illo, quem tu quæris, interfecto. Populus autem omnis erit salvus.

Verti textum receptum eumque obscurum, ut potui. Οί δ' aliam ejus lectionem exhibent, quam profecto non ex ingenio suo dederint, sed in suo codice legerint: Καὶ ἐπιστρέψω, κ.τ.λ. Quis non videt, eos illa verba, in quibus maxime laboratur, כשוב כלל, legisse: אשר אחד איש אשר אתה מבקש נפשו. Vulgatus etiam ואת legisse videtur, quod bis repetit: quomodo unus homo reverti solet: unum enim virum tu quæris et omnis populus erit in pace. Sed

Syrus habet textum vulgarem, quem obscure sic vertit : populum universum ad te reducam, לְכָל־אִישׁ־וְאִישׁ־כְּחָפְזוֹ אֲנִי־בָאִים־אֵלֶיךָ acsi rediret quisquis, quem velles, et totus populus erit saluus. Neque tamen audeo lectionem vulgarem ex uno τῶν ὁ testimonio emendare.

Maurer.—3 אֲנִי־בָאִים־אֵלֶיךָ כְּחָפְזוֹ “quando revertentur omnes, vir, cui insidiaris, sc. occisus erit. Per aposiopesin supprimit verbum de cæde patris Absalomi, quod haud dubie gestu aliquo indicavit.” Sic post Michael. Schulzius, a quibus Dathius in eo tantum discedit, quod ἃ pro particula comparandi habet. Hic enim liberius sic vertit : “(tunc reducam ad te universum populum.) Idem erit ac si omnes reverterentur illo quem tu quæris interfecto.” Quæ interpretationes vehementer dubito an nostræ ætatis hominibus satisfacturæ sint. Mihi certe, fateor, non satisfaciunt. Multo autem minus probandæ sunt reliquorum interpretum explanationes, a verbis scriptoris nimium quantum aberrantes. Equidem duplicem loci difficilioris explicandi rationem propono lectoribus. Una hæc est : tunc reducam ad te universum populum, ac si reverterentur omnes, reverteretur (אֲנִי־בָאִים) vir ille, quem tu quæris, i. e., ac si vir ille, quem tu quæris (Davides), cum suis omnibus reverteretur. Altera in eo cernitur, ut, quum אֲנִי interdum transitive sumatur, vertas : tunc reducam ad te universum populum, ac si reduceret omnes vir ille, quem tu quæris. Prior ratio præferenda videtur ea de causa, quod minus probabile est, scriptorem verbis אֲנִי־בָאִים et אֲנִי in eodem contextu eundem significatum tribuisse. Utramcunque elegeris, sensum hunc esse statues : Davide occiso reducam ad te universum populum sine strepitu, tumultu, unde additur : populus omnis fruetur pace. Singularis et digna sane quæ hic transcribatur est Græci interpretis explicatio. Apparet, hunc interpretem inter alia pro אֲנִי־בָאִים legisse vel coniecisse אֲנִי־בָאִים. Vulg. inde a verbo אֲנִי־בָאִים habet : quomodo unus homo reverti solet; unum enim virum tu quæris cet. quæ quid sibi velint difficile dictu est. Syr. lectionem vulgarem obscurius expressit.

Au. Ver.—9 Behold, he is hid now in some pit, or in some other place: and it will come to pass, when some of them be overthrown [Heb., fallen] at the first, that whosoever heareth it will say, There is a slaughter among the people that follow Absalom.

10 And he also that is valiant, whose heart is as the heart of a lion, shall utterly melt, &c.

9 And it will come to pass, when some of them be overthrown at the first.

Bp. Horsley.—Rather, and it will come to pass, that when he first falls upon them. To this effect the LXX. I observe that for כָּכָה, three of Kennicott's Codd. have כְּכָכָה. Perhaps the true reading may be כְּכָכָה.

Houb.—כָּכָה בְּהַחֲלֵה, Cum primum ceciderit ex eis quispiam. Intelligit Chusai in בְּהַחֲלֵה, ex eis, homines eos, qui Absalom sequuntur. Nos, ex tuis, perspicuitati servientes, nisi legitur כָּכָה.

וְאִם-אֶל-עִיר יִשְׂרָאֵל יִשְׁלָח יִשְׂרָאֵל אֶל-הָעִיר חֲהִיָּה חֲבָלִים וְסָחֲבָנָה אֹתוֹ עַד-הַנָּחַל עַד אֲשֶׁר-לָא נִמְצָא שָׁם בַּסֶּדֶק:

καὶ ἐὰν εἰς τὴν πόλιν συναχθῇ, καὶ λήψεται πᾶς Ἰσραὴλ πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ἐκείνην σχοινία, καὶ συροῦμεν αὐτὴν ἕως εἰς τὸν χειμάρρουν, ὅπως μὴ καταλειφθῇ ἐκεῖ μηδὲ λίθος.

Au. Ver.—13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one small stone found there.

Pool.—Then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city; not that they should do so, or that it was the custom to do so; but it is an hyperbolical and thrasonical expression. We will draw it into the river, adjoining to the city; it being usual to build cities near some river, both for defence, and for other accommodations.

Bp. Patrick.—13 He represents a further advantage of such a multitude; that if David quitted the field, and got into the strongest of their cities, encompassed with high walls, and a deep ditch, they were enough to begirt it round, and, by ropes put about the walls, draw them down and all the houses of the city, into the ditch that run about it. There was no such thing, that we read of, practised in war; therefore some by chabalim (which we translate ropes) understand troops, or bands of men, who by machines drawn with ropes could batter down walls and houses: or rather, this is a bragging hyperbolical speech, that they should be so numerous as to be able to do this, if there were no other way to reduce the city.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The original word חֲבָלִים, which signifies ropes, and from which we have our word cable, may have some peculiarity of meaning here; for it is not likely that any city could be pulled down with ropes. The Chaldee, which should be best judge in this case, translates the original word by כְּסָרִין, towers: this gives an easy sense.

Ged.—13 Or, if he get into a walled city, then shall all the men of Israel bring ropes to that city, and drag it into the next torrent; until, &c.

Houb.—13 Quod si vero in aliquam unam urbem se recipiet, omnis Israel in eam rete injiciet, nosque rete contrahemus, donec in eo ne calculus quidem relinquatur.

Dathe.—13 Quodsi in oppidum aliquod sese receperit, omnes Israëlitarum funes injicient muro istius oppidi, et trahemus eum in fossam, ita ut ne lapillus quidem supersit.

Ver. 17.

Au. Ver.—17 Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by En-rogel; for they might not be seen to come into the city: and a wench went and told them, &c.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—17 En-rogel.] The fuller's well; the place where they were accustomed to tread the clothes with their feet; hence the name עֵץ, a well, and רֹגֵל, the foot, because of the treading above-mentioned.

And a wench went and told them.] The word wench occurs nowhere else in the Holy Scriptures, and, indeed, has no business here; as the Hebrew word שִׁפְיָה should have been translated girl, maid, maid-servant. The word either comes from the Anglo-Saxon pencle, a maid, or the Belgic wunch, desire, a thing wished for; multum enim ut plurimum puellæ a juvenibus desiderantur, seu appetuntur. So Minsheu. Junius seems more willing to derive it from wince, to frisk, to be skittish, &c.; for reasons sufficiently obvious, and which he gives at length. After all, it may as likely come from the Gothic wens or weins, a word frequently used in the gospels of the Codex Argenteus for wife. Coverdale's Bible, 1535, has damsell. Becke's Bible, 1549, has wenche. The same in Cardmarden's Bible, 1566; but it is maid in Barker's Bible, 1615. Wench is more of a Scotticism than maid or damsel; and king James probably restored it, as he is said to have done lad in Gen. xxi. 12, and elsewhere. In every other place where the word occurs, our translators render it hand-maid, bond-maid, maiden, woman-servant, maid-servant, and servant. Such is the latitude with which they translate the same Hebrew term in almost innumerable instances.

VOL. II.

II. As a N. fem. plur. רִשָּׁה occ. 2 Sam. xvii. 19, which see. It is rendered in our translation ground corn, but as we do not find that it was ever usual in the East to spread corn abroad after it was ground, it should seem that spreading this over the covering of the well would rather excite, than lull, suspicion. Montanus comes nearer the truth in rendering it grana contusa, pounded corn. The Vulg. appear to have given the true explanation, though not a literal version, of the text; Et expandit velamen super os putei quasi siccans ptisanas (so Aquila and Symmachus πτισσας), And she spread a cloth covering over the mouth of the well, as if drying ptisans. Ptisana, in Greek πτισσῆν or πτισσῶν, is from the v. πτισσω to pound or husk in a mortar, and signifies corn, particularly barley, which after having been soaked in water, was dried in the sun, and then pounded in a mortar with a wooden pestle till the husks came off, and so kept for use. This method of preparing corn was well known to the ancient Greeks and Romans, and we find similar preparations among the eastern people to this day, under the names of burgle and sawik. The Heb. name רִשָּׁה seems evidently taken from the corn's yielding (its husk) to the stroke of the pestle. As a N. fem. רִשָּׁה either corn pounded as above, so Vulg. ptisanas, or in general things pounded, as Aquila and Theodotion ἐμπτισσομένων, occ. Proverbs xxvii. 22.

Gesen.—רִשָּׁה f. plur. (ר. רָחַץ, to rub) pounded corn, or grain, grits, polenta, 2 Sam. xvii. 19; Prov. xxvii. 22.

Au. Ver.—And the woman said unto them, They be gone over the brook of water. And when they had sought and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

Pool.—Over the brook of water, i. e., over Jordan.

Bp. Patrick.—The brook of water.] Which came, I suppose, from the fountain of Enrogel.

Bishop Horsley.—Rather, “the shallow water.” See Parkhurst, יל, VI.

Parkhurst.—VI. As a N. מיל, joined with הים, water, seems to denote shallow water which may be passed through, q. d., a practicable water, occ. 2 Sam. xvii. 20; where the LXX, παρήλθον μικρὸν τοῦ ὕδατος, they passed over a little water. Here μικρὸν expresses the general sense, though not the precise idea, of the Heb. מיל. From this form and application of the Hebrew root the Arabs appear to have derived their verb מיל, which is by them often applied to a channel or well having but little water; and from this use of the Arabic word Schultens in his MS. Origines Hebraicæ makes מיל a Hebrew root of the same import, and consequently the מ in מיל to be radical; but the former interpretation seems the truer.

Gesen.—מיל obs. root; Ar. مَلَّ spoken of a well, to have little water, to have muddy water; مَلَّ, مَلَّ, a well of this sort;

مَلَّ a pool with little water. Hence

I. מיל m. 2 Sam. xvii. 20, מיל הים, brook of water, rivulet.

Prof. Lee.—מיל, masc. once, 2 Sam. xvii. 20, in מיל הים. Usually, brook of water. Gesen., “parvus rivus aquæ;” from מיל, parum aquæ continuit (puteus). But, both seem incongruous; for, if מיל contains the notion of water at all, to add הים, must have been superfluous; as much so as in brook of waters with us. The Arabic term, however, seems to apply to a well only. How then it can apply to a brook, does not seem very obvious. In the Arabic we have,

وَلَّ, lassus fuit; وَكَلَّ, segnitie et tarditas equi. And, supposing a noun of place thence formed, as مَوَكَل, or مَيْكَل, from the cogn. يَكَل, we shall have our term מיל, place of inactivity or stagnation: and with הים following, stagnant place, pit, or lake, of waters. Which might have been some lake or morass in the Desert, between Jerusalem and the Jordan. Some have proposed to read מיל here, יל, i. e. stream. So Capellus. Buxtorf's answer is, “No such word is to be found: but, that מיל may be derived from יל, signifying, vehementia aquæ, for river, or the Jordan. The Jews, in the days of Jerome, certainly understood the Jordan.” See his questions on the place.

Houb.—Celeriter transierunt. עבר מיל הים, Transierunt rivum aquarum. Ita Arias, et post eum Buxtorfius, qui quidem dubitat, an sit nomen proprium. Certe nullibi מיל, vel יל, rivus. Au. Ver.—25 And Absalom made Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab : which Amasa was a man's son, whose name was Ithra an Israelite [or, Jether an Ishmaelite], that went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahash, sister to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.

Pool.—Ithra an Israelite. Object. He was an Ishmaelite, 1 Chron. ii. 17. Ans. Not Amasa; but Ithra, or Jether, Amasa's father, is there so called, because he was such, either by his birth from such parents, or by his long habitation among them, or for some other reason now unknown. Compare 2 Sam. xv. 18. And Amasa is here called an Israelite, either because he was a proselyte; or in opposition to Joab, who was of the tribe of Judah, as Amasa was of one of the ten tribes; or rather, to intimate, that although he or his parents were called Ishmaelites for some reason, yet as to their extraction they were indeed Israelites; which if Amasa had not been, it is not probable that he could have had so powerful an influence upon the tribe of Judah as he had, chap. xix. 14. The daughter of Nahash. Nahash is either another name of Jesse [so Patrick]; or rather, the name of Jesse's wife; by whom he had this Abigail, as he had Zeruiah by another wife; so they were sisters by the father, but not by the mother; and Nahash is here named to signify so much.

Bp. Patrick.—Amasa was a man's son, whose name was Ithra an Israelite. By religion, though by birth an Ishmaelite (see 1 Chron. ii. 27). Abarbinel thinks the quite contrary, that he was an Israelite by birth, but had lived long in the land of the Ishmaelites. And by "the son of a man" he understands an illustrious person.

That went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahash. That is, he married one of the daughters of Jesse, who is here called Nahash. For, as Kimchi observes, many persons had two names: and this signifies a serpent. From whence it is, that when Isaiah saith, xiv. 29, "out of the serpent's root (or the root of Nahash) shall come forth a cockatrice, or basilisk;" the Chaldee paraphrase expounds it, "out of the root of Jesse shall come forth the Messiah." Who was typified by the brazen serpent in the wilderness.

Vulgatus habet de Jesraeli, in quo tamen mirabile est, Jesrael per s scribi, cum alias semper apud eundem x habere soleat. Locus 1 Chron. ii. 17 dirimit litem, ac אִשְׁמָאֵלִיתָא legendum esse ostendit; qua lectione assumpta patet etiam ratio, cur Amasie patrem Ismaelitam fuisse adnotarit scriptor, eum enim sine hoc indice Israelitam quisque reputaturus fuisset." Sic Schulzius, recte uti ego quidem arbitror.

Au. Ver.—28 Brought beds, and basons [or, cups], and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse, 29 And honey, and butter, and sheep, and cheese of kine, for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat: for they said, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty in the wilderness.

Basons.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Basons.] כלי יצר. Probably wooden bowls, such as the Arabs still use to eat out of, and to knead their bread in.

Earthen vessels.] כלי יצר. Probably clay vessels, baked in the sun. These were perhaps used for lifting water, and boiling those articles which required to be cooked.

Gesen.—כלי יצר, A potter's vessel, earthen, Jer. xix.

Parched corn—parched pulse.

Bp. Patrick.—The word kali is twice repeated among these provisions, and is first joined with wheat, barley, and flour. And properly signifies, tostas fruges, parched corn, as we well translate it. And in the latter end of the verse, after beans and lentiles, it must signify, as Bochart observes, tostum aut frictum aliquod legumen, viz., frictum cicer, "some parched or fried sort of pulse," to wit, "fried vetches:" which grew plentifully in Judea: as it was common among both Greeks and Romans in their food, as Bochart shows, in his Hierozoicon, par. ii., lib. i., cap. 7, where he observes that it is called kali by the Arabians to this day.

Gesen.—כלי m. (r. כלי I) once כלי with מ in otio (as כלי, כלי) 1 Sam. xvii. 17, roasted or parched grain, i.e., wheat or barley roasted in the ears and then rubbed out, as is still common among the Bedawin Arabs; see Macmichael's Journey, p. 235; Robinson's Palest. ii., p. 394.—Lev. xxiii. 14; Ruth ii. 14; 1 Sam. xxv. 18; 2 Sam. xvii. 28, where כלי is twice read, once of grain and again of pulse.

29 Honey. See notes on Gen. xliii. 11, vol. i., p. 110.

Ged., Booth.—Palm-honey.

Butter. See notes on Gen. xviii. 8, vol. i., p. 19, and on Deut. xxxii. 14, p. 768.

Cheese of kine.

Bp. Patrick.—Though, as Bochart observes, these words saphoth lachar be very variously interpreted, yet the Chaldee and Syriac, as well as all the Hebrews, understand by saphoth, cheese made of cow's milk: from the Hebrew and Chaldee word saphar, which signifies to strain; cheese being made by pressing the whey out of the curds (see Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 33).

Gesen.—חֶמֶץ or חֶמֶץ, only in plur. 2 Sam. xvii. 29 חֶמֶץ חֶמֶץ, according to Targ., Syr., and the Heb. intpp. cheeses of kine, so called from filtering from the whey, dregs, etc. see r. חֶמֶץ No. 2. Abulwalid renders it by חֶמֶץ חֶמֶץ, "slices of coagulated milk."

Prof. Lee.—חֶמֶץ, pl. f. constr. once, 2 Sam. xviii. 29, חֶמֶץ חֶמֶץ. LXX. σαφάθ βοῶν, leaving the word untranslated. Theod. γαλαθηνά μοςχάρια. Vulg., pingues vitulos. Syr. ܡܫܚܐ ܡܫܚܐ, caseos bovinos. Comp.

Syr. ܡܫܚܐ, Pahl. purificavit, defæcavit.

Probably cheeses.

Dathe.—חֶמֶץ חֶמֶץ ἀπαξ λεγ. quidem, sed satis probabiliter a Bocharto (Hieroz., p. i., lib. ii., cap. 32, p. 316) per caseos bubulos explicatur a חֶמֶץ, percolare, coll. Job. x. 10. At Michaëlis longe aliter. Is putat, significari boum stimulos, Ochsenstacheln, qui dati fuissent militibus Davidis, ut eis pro armis uterentur. Provocat ad Jud. iii. 31. Sed ibi sunt חֶמֶץ חֶמֶץ, non חֶמֶץ. Deinde nominantur inter alia, quæ allata dicuntur Davidi ejusque militibus, חֶמֶץ, ad comedendam. Quis in hoc contextu de boum stimulis cogitet? Et tandem, quam parum probabile est, Davidis milites armis fuisse destitutos!

In the wilderness.

Pool.—i. e., Having been in the wilderness; which is an easy and common ellipsis. Or, because of (so the Hebrew particle beth is oft used) the wilderness, which they have passed through, in which provisions are very scarce.

Au. Ver.—3 But the people answered, Thou shalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not care for us [Heb., set their heart on us]; neither if half of us die, will they care for us: but now thou art worth ten thousand of us [Heb., as ten thousand of us]: therefore now it is better that thou succour [Heb., be to succour] us out of the city.

But now thou art worth, &c.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The particle עַתָּה, now, is doubtless a mistake for the pronoun אֲנִי, thou [so Houb., Horsley, Dathe, Maurer, &c.]; and so it appears to have been read by the Septuagint, the Vulgate, and the Chaldee, and by two of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS.

Houb.—אֲנִי כִּי עַתָּה כִּמְנֵי עֶשְׂרֵה אֲלֵפִים: Legendum, ut sit, nam tu, sicut nos, decem millia. Ita legunt Græci et Vulgatus, et apud Hexapla Symmachus. Nihil solidi affert Buxtorfius cur עַתָּה sit legendum. Nisi enim tu legitur, nulla persona in oratione relinquatur, ad quam pertineat decem millia. Et planum est, comparisonem institui inter Davidem cæterosque ejus milites, ut אֲנִי, tu, Davidem exhibeat, כִּמְנֵי, cæteros milites. Chaldæus et אֲנִי et עַתָּה exprimit; quia cum legeret עַתָּה, videbat huic vocabulo nihil subesse sententiæ, nisi etiam אֲנִי efferretur. ... לעזר: Masora לעזר, ad auxilium: adhuc melius לעזר, sine י.

Maurer.—לְעֹזֵר ut Ex. xiii. 21; Num. v. 22; Deut. xxvi. 12; 1 Sam. ii. 33. K'ri sine idonea ratione לעזר vel לעזר.

Ver. 6.

Au. Ver.—6 So the people went out into the field against Israel: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim.

Ged.—6 The battle was in the forest of Ephraim. So text, with Sept., Chald., and Vulg. But Syr. has only, The battle being joined. Arab. has: And when they came up with them, they engaged them; and, the battle raging, &c. Was this a forest on the east side of the Jordan; so called from a defeat of the Ephraimites in the days of Jephthah? Or had Abshalom retreated from Gilead and repassed the Jordan; before he risked a battle? Or, finally, is the word Ephraim an interpolation; and should we read in a forest?

Bp. Horsley.—6 In the wood of Ephraim. Some wood on the eastern side of the Jordan, which might take the name, either as the spot where Oreb and Zeeb were captured by the Ephraimites, or as near the spot where the Ephraimites were slaughtered by Jephthah.

15 וַיִּכּוּ עֲשָׂרָה נְעָרִים נִשְׂאִי קִלְיָ
וַיָּמָךְ וַיִּצֶד מִתְּמִשְׁלוֹם וַיִּמְחָדוּ:

14 καὶ εἶπεν Ἰωάβ, τοῦτο ἐγὼ ἀρξομαι, οὐχ οὕτως μὲν ἐνώπιόν σου. καὶ ἔλαβεν Ἰωάβ τρία βέλη ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐπέτηξεν αὐτὰ ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ Ἀβессαλώμ, ἔτι αὐτοῦ ζώντος ἐν τῇ καρδίᾳ τῆς θρύος. 15 καὶ ἐκύκλωσαν δέκα παιδάρια αἰρόντα τὰ σκέη Ἰωάβ, καὶ ἐπάταξαν τὸν Ἀβессαλώμ, καὶ ἐθανάτωσαν αὐτόν.

Au. Ver.—14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee [Heb., before thee]. And he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst [Heb., heart] of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compassed about and smote Absalom, and slew him.

Pool.—Through the heart of Absalom; not properly so called, for he was yet alive after these wounds, and was slain, ver. 15; but through his middle [so Patrick], as the word heart is oft used, as Psal. xlii. 2, and that too not exactly, but more largely understood, as Deut. iv. 11; Ezek. xxvii. 4; Matt. xii. 40; or through his body; which might be, and yet the wounds not mortal. While he was yet alive, or, yet he continued alive.

Ged.—14 "Not so," said Joab, "I will begin the deed before thee." So saying, he took with him three darts, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive, in the midst of the turpentine-tree: (15) and ten young men, Joab's armour-bearers, &c.

14 Not so; I will begin, &c., i. e., I will be the first to pierce him. Some would render: Not so will I delay, with thee. And Houbigant thinks the true reading is: Not so; I will stab him before thee.

Houb.—14 Tum Joab: non sic foret; et ego eum, inquit, præsente te, confodiam; deinde tria tela manu corripens, hæc in cor Absalom infixit. 15 Cum autem media in quercu adhuc viveret, decem pueri Joab, qui arma ejus ferebant, in Absalom conversi, eum percusserunt, et interemerunt.

14 אִם אֶפְשָׁר לִי אֲנִי אֶחָד, et in margine אִם אֶפְשָׁר; melius אִם אֶפְשָׁר, aut אִם אֶפְשָׁר, sulnerabo eum, non sine affixo. Plerique, incipiam, etsi non altero exemplo. Nam incipere est לח, non לח; nec vero diceret Joab, incipiam, tribus telis eum mox vulneraturus. Nam tribus ictibus ingeminandis, consilium ejus erat, non modo incipere, sed absolvere, hoc est Absalom interficere. ... וְעַד, adhuc vivebat. Hæc ad antecedita liquet pertinere non posse. Itaque ante וְעַד, interpunctio major collocanda, illa tollenda, quæ verbo וְעַד præfixa est: vide versionem.

15, 16, וַיִּמְחָדוּ: Lege וַיִּמְחָדוּ, et interfecerunt eum, ne desideretur י, nota numeri pluralis, quam Judæi puncto Kibbutz, perperam sublatam, supplere. ... שָׁבַט, tuba. Plerique codices שָׁבַט, solita scribendi forma. Pertinet littera י ad nominis ipsius formationem, ex radice שָׁב, pulcrum esse.

Dathe.—14 Non possum hic, inquit Joab, apud te morari. Prehendit tria spicula, atque ea pectori Absalomi adhuc in terebintho viventis infixit. 15 Simul aderant decem milites, Joabi armigeri, qui eum conciderunt.

Ver. 18.

לָהּ יָד מִבְּשָׁלוֹם עַד הַיּוֹם הַזֶּה:

— καὶ ἐκάλεσε τὴν στήλην, Χεῖρ Ἀβессαλώμ ἕως τῆς ἡμέρας ταύτης.

Au. Ver.—18 Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and reared up for himself a pillar, which is in the king's dale: for he said, I have no son to keep my name in remembrance: and he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day, Absalom's place.

Pool.—He said, I have no son. Object. He had three sons, chap. xiv. 27. Answ. Either they were all now dead [so Kimchi, Patrick]; or if one of them was left alive, he thought him unfit and unworthy to keep up his name and honour; or he erected this pillar before his sons were born. But the first opinion seems most probable; and it was a remarkable judgment of God, that he who struck at his father's life, should be punished with the death of all his sons.

Absalom's hand. See notes on 1 Sam. xv. 12, p. 408.

Gesen., Ged., Booth.—Absalom's monument.

Pool.—Absalom's place, Heb., Absalom's hand, i. e., his work, made though not by his hand, yet for him and his glory, and by his procurement.

Au. Ver.—20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not bear tidings [Heb., be a man of tidings] this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the king's son is dead.

Houb.—20 Dixit ei Joab: non tu hodie bonum nuntium perferes; alio die hoc tuum munus erit. Neque enim convenit te hæc hodie nuntiare, postquam filius regis mortuus est.

Au. Ver.—22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howsoever [Heb., be what may], let me, I pray thee, also run after Cush. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings ready [or, convenient]? Seeing thou hast no tidings ready. So

Au. Ver.—24 And David sat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

Ged., Booth.—24 And David was sitting between the two gates; and the watchman was walking on the wall, on the top of the gate; and he raised his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

Au. Ver.—8 Then the king arose, and sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the people came before the king: for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 And all the people were at strife throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philistines; and now he is fled out of the land for Absalom.

And all the people came before the king: for Israel, &c.

Ged.—The whole people presented themselves to the king. 9 The Israelites having fled, every man to his own home; the whole people, throughout all the tribes, reproached one another, saying: "King David [LXX] saved us from the hands of our enemies, and delivered us out of the hands of the Philistines: yet now he is a fugitive from the land, and from his kingdom [LXX], on account of Abshalom.

8 The last member of this verse belongs to the next: although it hath absurdly been separated from it.

Booth.—And all the people presented themselves to the king. 9 Now Israel had fled, every man, to his own home; and all the people, throughout all the tribes of Israel, blamed one another, saying, &c.

Houb.—Itaque venit universa multitudo in conspectum regis. 9 Postquam autem Israel is sua quisque tentoria diffugerat, omnes tribus Israel hæc inter se agitant: rex ab inimicis nostris nos liberavit; ille etiam nos vindicavit a Philistæis: mox quidem de terra fugiebat ante Absalom.

8 לפני המלך, in conspectum regis. Post hæc verba interpunctio major fuit collocanda, minor vero post אחי, in tentoria sua. Nam perspicuum est, in iis verbis, fugerat autem Israel in sua tentoria, initium esse rerum mox dicendarum.

Au. Ver.—11 And king David sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

Pool.—11 To his house; to his royal palace at Jerusalem. To the king, even to his house, i. e., even to Mahanaim, where now the king's house and family is. Thus sometimes one word is taken in divers senses in the same verse, as Matt. viii. 22. Or rather thus, About bringing the king back to his house: for, first, Those words are very fitly and easily understood here out of the foregoing member of the verse; such defects being usual in the Hebrew, which is a very concise or short language. So it is Exod. xxii. 15; Deut. i. 4, &c. Secondly, It seems most reasonable to understand the same phrase, to his house, being twice here used in the same sense in both places, to wit, of his house in Jerusalem; and this is most agreeable to rule and to Scripture usage. Thirdly, Thus the words have more emphasis than the other way; for if the speech came to the king at Mahanaim, it matters not whether it found him in his house there, or in the gate-house, or in the field. Fourthly, David had no house in Mahanaim which could properly be called his house, as he had in Jerusalem. And then the parenthesis should close before those last words, even to his house, or even to his own house, to wit, that at Jerusalem.

Bp. Patrick.—Even to his house.] These last words, “even to his house,” seem to be but a repetition of what was said before, to his house; viz., at Jerusalem: the other words being a parenthesis.

Ged.—Why will ye be the last to bring back the king to his own home; seeing that the purpose of all Israel hath already reached the king, in his present residence? 12 Ye are my brethren, mine own bone and flesh! why then will ye be the last to bring back the king?

Booth.—Seeing that the speech of all Israel hath come to the king, in his present abode? 12 Ye are my brethren, ye are my own bone and flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

Houb.—11 Hi sermones omnis Israel domum perlati ad regem fuerunt. Quare misit rex David ad Sadoc et ad Abiathar sacerdotes, qui hæc eis mandarent. 12 Hæc loquimini ad senes Juda; vos fratres mei et os meum et caro mea estis; curnam igitur postremi eritis, ut reducatis regem domum suam?

11 וְכָל־יִשְׂרָאֵל, Sermo autem omnis Israel (venit ad regem). Hæc verba collocanda sunt eo in ordine, quem sequuntur Syrus et Græci Interpretes, ut postquam Israel, superiori versu finiente, dixit; quare cunctamini ad reducendum regem, proxime hæc sequantur sermo Israel pervenit ad regem, in domum ejus. Ita ut causa appa-reat, cur deinde viros Juda sic David alloquatur; quare novissimi eritis ad reducendum regem? Non potuit enim David cum Juda sic expostulare, nisi norat cæteras tribus consilium cepisse de reducendo ad se rege; ut necesse sit a Sacro Scriptore antea fuisse narratum, hos Israel sermones, qui superiori versu memorantur, regis ad aures pervenisse.

12 וְאִי אַתֶּם, vos fratres mei estis. Hæc etiam verba alieno in ordine nunc leguntur. Nam consuetudo est, ut ejusmodi compellatio faciat initium sermoni, non autem ut sermonem jam cœptum vel abruptum, vel absolvat; ut videre licet versu subsequente. Itaque recte apud Syrum his verbis inchoatur ad populum sermo regis, etsi quædam Syrus non omittenda omisit. Hæc verba igitur, fratres mei estis, &c., in mandatis David ad sacerdotes factis primum locum tenere debent hoc modo: loquimini hæc ad senes Juda; fratres mei, os meum vos et caro mea estis; quare igitur postremi estis ad reducendum regem in domum suam, quæ quidem verba ultima, quare igitur, &c., cum his legantur Hod. in codicibus, semel legi satis est, ut hæc semel tantum exhibet Syrus. Adi ad Veteres; videbis hunc versum alio atque alio modo lectum fuisse in Hebr. ipsorum codicibus, Græcos addere quædam, quæ nunc absunt; Syrum omittere multa, partim superflua, partim etiam, ut mox diximus, non omittenda.

Obloquitur Schulzius, "si vel maxime, inquiens, meritum Joabi in hoc bello gratiam in regis animo extinxisset recordatio filii a Joabo cæsi, tamen nec prudens nec salutare fuisset, Amasam præferre fortissimo viro, Joabo, qui etiam cap. xx: 6, 7 ut summus imperator occurrit. Rectissime igitur Michaëlis consentiente Hezelio vertit: secundus a Joabo imperator esto. Cf. Num. v. 20." Sed ex nefando facinore, quod Joabus, xx. 8 sqq. admittit, clarissime patet, cum capitali in Amasam odio flagrasse, cujus causa manifeste in eo quaerenda est, quod Davides Amasæ promiserat, se velle, quamdiu vixerit, eum in locum Joabi ducem exercitus constituere. Nam quod Schulzius ad xx. 10 dicit, Joabum Amasæ forsam plurimum gratia apud multitudinem valentis honori invidiasse, cæsoque æmulo se magis gratiosum apud regem fore existimasse, id sibi commentus est vir bonus.

Au. Ver.—17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and Ziba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry boat to carry over the king's household, and to do what he thought good [Heb., the good in his eyes]. And Shimei the son of Gera fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan.

Pool.—18 A ferry boat, made by the men of Judah for the king's proper use; besides which there were doubtless many boats ready for the use of others. As he was come over Jordan, or rather, as he was passing, or about to pass, over Jordan; but this was beyond Jordan: for as he went over Jordan to the king, ver. 17, so doubtless he fell down before him at his first coming into his presence there.

Bp. Patrick.—18 A ferry boat.] Prepared, as many suppose, by the men of Judah. Josephus will have it a bridge; composed, perhaps, of many boats joined together.

Bp. Horsley.—And there went over a ferry-boat; rather, And a bridge of boats [תַּעֲבָרָה] was thrown across, to make a passage for the king's household. — and to do what he thought good. These words seem to be out of their place. I think they should be carried back to the end of verse 15.

Dr. A. Clarke.—18 There went over a ferry boat.] This is the first mention of anything of the kind. Some think a bridge or raft is what is here intended.

Ged.—17 And, &c. Also Zibah, the domestic of Saul, with his fifteen sons and his twenty servants. These last facilitated the king's passage over the Jordan, (18) and were very serviceable in bringing over the king's household, and in doing whatever else was agreeable to him, &c.

17 These last, &c. I refer this to Zibah and his servants, for reasons that appear to me just.

1b. Facilitated the king's passage, &c., lit., made the Jordan easy before the king. Josephus and some of the antient translators understood this of throwing a bridge over it. Jerom supposes that they only forded it before him; and pointed out the proper place. I have used a term applicable to both interpretations.

18 And were very serviceable in bringing, &c. I have followed the reading of Sept., which I am persuaded was that of the original Hebrew. The present text has been rendered: And a ferry boat went over to bring, &c., without any authority, I think, but merely to save the credit of a corrupted text.

Booth.—17 And these went over the Jordan, before the king: 18 And performed the service of bringing over the king's household, and in doing what he thought good. And Shimei, the son of Gera, fell down before the king, when he had come over the Jordan.

18 And performed the service.] The common version here, is unsupported either by the sense of the present text or any of the versions. The Sept. and Syr. are followed.

Au. Ver.—20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned : therefore, behold, I am come the first this day of all the house of Joseph to go down to meet my lord the king.

Pool.—Of all the house of Joseph. Object. He was a Benjamite, chap. xvi. 5. How then doth he make himself out of the house of Joseph? Ans. The house of Joseph is here put, either, 1. For the ten tribes, which are oft distinguished from Judah, and then they are called the house of Joseph, as Zech. x. 6. But this distinction was not made before the division of the people into two kingdoms; and even after that division Benjamin was constantly reckoned with Judah, and not with Joseph or Ephraim. Or, 2. For all the tribes of Israel, who are called the children of Joseph, Psal. lxxvii. 15; compare Psal. lxxx. 1; lxxx. 5; as well they might, not only because of Joseph's eminency (the most eminent persons and things being oft put for the rest of the kind), and because the rights of primogeniture were in a great part devolved upon him, 1 Chron. v. 1; but also because Joseph had been as a father to them, and had nourished them all like children, as is expressed in the Hebrew text, Gen. xlvii. 12. But in this sense this was not true, for the house of Judah came before him, ver. 15. Or rather, 3. For all the tribes except Judah, which are conveniently called the house of Joseph for the reasons now mentioned, and are fitly distinguished from Judah, because the rights of the first-born were divided between Judah and Joseph, 1 Chron. v. 2. And though Benjamin, after the division of the kingdoms, was fitly joined with Judah, because then they adhered to that tribe; yet before that time it was more conveniently joined with Joseph, because they marched under the standard of the house of Joseph, or of Ephraim, Numb. x. 22—24; whence it is that Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh are put together, Psal. lxxx. 2.

Bp. Patrick.—I am come the first this day, &c.] He was not properly of the house of Joseph, but of a tribe near of kin to it : so that at this time, it seems, they looked upon themselves as members of the same body; being descended from the same mother; and they continued so till the kingdom was rent. For Benjamin is placed between Ephraim and Manasseh (the two sons of Joseph) in Ps. lxxx. 2, and they marched under the same standard, Numb. ii. 18, 19, &c.

Ver. 22.

Au. Ver.—22 And David said, What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? shall there any man put to death this day in Israel? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel?

Au. Ver.—29 And the king said unto him, Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, Thou and Ziba divide the land.

Pool.—Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? For as Ziba was present, so doubtless he was not silent, but said and did what he could to make good his former charge; which must needs occasion many words before the king. And the king was not now at leisure for long debates, and therefore makes an end of the matter. I have said, to wit, within myself; I have considered the matter as far as now I can, and upon the whole am come to this resolution, wherein I expect that thou and he do both acquiesce. Or, I do now say; I pronounce this sentence in the cause. Thou and Ziba divide the land: the meaning is either, 1. The land shall be divided between thee and him, as it was by my first order, chap. ix. 10; he and his sons managing it, and supporting themselves out of it, as they did before, and giving the rest of the profits thereof to thee.

VOL. II.

And to this the following words may well enough be accommodated. Yea, let him take all, to wit, to his own sole use. Or, 2.

The right and profits of the land shall be equally divided between you. It seems a very rash and harsh sentence, and very unbecoming David's wisdom, and justice, and gratitude to Jonathan; and Ziba seems to have deserved death for falsely accusing his master of treason, rather than a recompense. But the whole transaction of the matter is not here set down. Possibly Ziba might bring plausible pretences to justify his accusation. So that David might really be at a loss what to determine. And Ziba had given proof of his affections to David by an act of kindness which could not be without hazard to himself, chap. xvi. 1, 2, which Mephibosheth had not done. And possibly this was only a present sentence, and David resolved to examine things more thoroughly when he had more leisure, and then to make a more full and final determination of the business; which also he might do, though it be not here recorded; for we must not think that nothing was done and said about such things but what is mentioned in Scripture. Besides, Ziba being a powerful man, and the crown not yet firmly fixed upon the king's head, David might think fit to suspend his final sentence till a more convenient season, and not now to provoke him too much by taking away all his estate from him at once, but to proceed against him by degrees. Howsoever, this is certain, we cannot pass a right judgment upon this action of David's, unless we understood all the circumstances of it, which we cannot pretend to do.

Bp. Patrick.—Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? As if he had said, Enough, enough; I desire to hear no more of the injuries done me by the house of Saul.

Thou and Ziba divide the land. Some of the Hebrew doctors understand this, as if he now parted the estate formerly given to Mephibosheth between him and Ziba; partly out of shame, lest he should appear too rash and hasty of belief in giving all to Ziba, and partly out of suspicion that the too great wealth of Mephibosheth might make him ambitious. But they acknowledge this sentence to be unjust, Ziba making no defence for himself. And some of them say, a voice from heaven was heard thereupon, saying, That God would make the like division of David's kingdom between Rehoboam and Jeroboam. But if we carefully attend to the words, they carry another sense in them; being as much as if he had said, "My first grant shall stand;" when he decreed that Mephibosheth should be lord of the land, and Ziba should manage it for him, ix. 10 (see Selden, de Successionibus, cap. 25, fol. 89, 90, where he makes out this very clearly).

Dr. Adam Clarke.—I have said, Thou and Ziba divide the land.] At first, David gave the land of Saul to Mephibosheth; and Ziba, his sons, and his servants, were to work that land; and to Mephibosheth, as the lord, he was to give the half of the produce. Ziba met David in his distress with provisions, and calumniated Mephibosheth: David, too slightly trusting to his misrepresentation, and supposing that Mephibosheth was actually such a traitor as Ziba represented him, made him on the spot a grant of his master's land. Now he finds that he has acted too rashly, and therefore confirms the former grant; i. e., that Ziba should cultivate the ground, and still continue to give to Mephibosheth, as the lord, the half of the produce. This was merely placing things in statu quo, and utterly annulling the gift that he had made to Ziba. But why did he leave this treacherous man anything? Answer 1. He was one of the domestics of Saul, and David wished to show kindness to that house. 2. He had supplied him with the necessities of life when he was in the greatest distress; and he thinks proper to continue him in his old office, by way of remuneration. But it was certainly too great a compensation for his services, however then important, when all the circumstances are considered.

Houb.—29 אִמְצִי A me decretum fuit; hoc est, stabit hæc distributio, quam antea decrevi, ut tu agros tui patris possessionis jure teneas, et ut Siba, qui eos coluit, et culturus est, habeat inde sibi et familiæ cibum. Verbum אִמְצִי allegat nos ad distributionem eam, quam vidimus, cap. 9, neque id significat, habiturum Siba dimidiam partem agrorum jure possessionis. Tale enim decretum foret non modo plenum iniquitatis, sed etiam Davidis istis verbis, noli verba hæc tua iterare, omnino contrarium. Nempe iis verbis David significat, se jam correxisse errorem suum, neque necesse esse, ut Miphiboseth innocentiam suam prolixius demonstret ac tueatur. Vide in hunc locum Thomam Stackhouse, Anglum, "The History of the Bible," l. 5, cap. 5.

Bp. Patrick.—Hath he given us any gift? We get nothing by it, but have only done our duty, and testified our great affection. Abarbinel thinks these words, given us any gift, import expiation and pardon; as in Genesis xviii. 26; Numbers vi. 26, and are as much as if they had said, Hath he granted us a pardon for what we did in the business of Absalom? Whereby they suggested, that the Israelites were the principal actors in that rebellion, and needed an act of oblivion, though they did not.

Au. Ver.—43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, We have ten parts in the king, and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye despise us [Heb., set us at light], that our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.

CHAP. XX.

1 And there happened to be there a man of Belial, whose name was Sheba, the son of Bichri, a Benjamite: and he blew a trumpet, and said, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse:
every man to his tents, O Israel.

Pool.—43 We have ten parts; they say but ten, though strictly there were eleven; either because they accounted Joseph (which comprehends both Ephraim and Manassah under
it) for one tribe, as it is sometimes reckoned; or because Simeon, whose lot lay within the tribe of Judah, were joined with them in this action. In the king, i. e., in the kingdom, and the management of the affairs of it; the word king being put for kingdom, as it is 2 Chron. xxiii. 20; Isaiah xxiii. 15; Dan. vii. 17; Hos. x. 15. Or, in the king's person, and the disposal thereof. We have also more right in David than ye; as in the general we have more right in the king and kingdom, so particularly we have more right in David, than you, because you were the first beginners and the most zealous promoters of this rebellion; and as David is nearest of kin to you, so he hath been most injured by you; howsoever, as he is king, we justly claim a greater interest in him than you, inasmuch as we are the far greatest part of his subjects. That our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king; that we being the far greater number, should not have the first and chiefest vote in this action. But the words are by some, and may well be, rendered interrogatively, And was not my word first about bringing the king back? Did not we make the first mention of it, before you could be drawn to it? For so indeed they did, ver. 11; and therefore the neglect of their advice herein might seem more inexcusable. The words of the men of Judah were fiercer; instead of mollifying them with gentle words, they answered them with greater fierceness and insolency; so that David durst not interpose himself in the matter.

Bp. Patrick.—43 The men of Israel.] These words are not as before, "all the men of Israel:" which is a sign some of them were cooled, though most of them continued violent.

We have ten parts in the king.] By the king is here meant the kingdom: ten parts of which they say were theirs (whereas there were eleven tribes besides Judah), because Simeon, being intermixed with Judah, it is likely, now came with them.

We have also more right in David than ye.] As David was a private person, Judah had more interest in him than the rest, because he was of their tribe: but as he was a king, the Israelites had more, being the far greater part of his subjects.

The words of the men of Judah were fiercer.] More vehement: or, they were too hard for them in their argument. David did

Au. Ver.—8 When they were at the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

Pool.—Amasa went before them; having gathered some forces, and given due orders for the rest to follow him, he returned to Jerusalem, and by the king's command went after those mentioned, ver. 7; and being come up to them at the place where they waited for him, he put himself into the head of Joab's men, and the Cherethites and the Pelethites, and such as he had brought along with him, and marched before them as their chief and general. Girded unto him, after the manner of travellers and soldiers. As he went forth to meet and salute Amasa, who was coming towards him to do him honour. It fell out; things having (it is likely) been so contrived by Joab, that upon the least motion of his body his sword should drop out, and he might take it up without raising Amasa's suspicion.

Bp. Patrick.—8 When they were at the great stone which is in Gibeon.] The place of rendezvous (as we now speak), appointed by Amasa for the men of Judah. Which was, as Josephus saith, a hundred furlongs from Jerusalem.

Amasa went before them.] As their commander-in-chief.

Joab's garment.] As soon as Amasa arrived at the army, Joab also came there as a volunteer, of his own accord: or rather, was there before with Abishai. Yea, Josephus takes it, as if David had spoken those words ver. 6, unto Joab, telling him it was not safe to delay, and therefore bids him take such forces as they had ready, and go with his brother Abishai. Ἰωβὸς δὲ οὐκ ἔτι μέλλειν ἔκρινεν, ἀλλὰ τὸν τε ἀδελφὸν καὶ τοὺς ἐξακοσίους παρέλαβε, &c. "He resolved not to stay to gather more forces: but with his brother, and six hundred men, and all the force they had in Jerusalem, marched out to pursue Sheba."

Upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath.] He had no armour on, but such a garment as soldiers wore, closely girt to him: and upon it a belt, in which a sword hung by his side. Yet Josephus saith he had a breast-plate, θώρακα ἐνδεδυμένος, as well as μάχαιραν περιζωσάμενος, "begirt with a sword."

As he went forth.] To meet Amasa, πολλὴν δύναμιν ἀναγόντος, "who led numerous forces" to that place, as the same author speaks.

It fell out.] He had hung it so, that it might drop out of the sheath when he pleased. And it fell out just as he went to salute and embrace Amasa: who seeing him stoop to take it up, imagined it was only to put it into the sheath again.

Bp. Horsley.—8 Amasa went before them; rather, Amasa came in sight.

And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him. וַיִּמְד וְהָיָה לְבָשִׁי, And Joab had a jacket girded over his garment. A jacket; כִּד signifies a particular military garment, for which we have no word in our language. The LXX render it by μανδύα, and μανδύα, according to the lexicographers, was a military jacket, which was intended for a coat of mail. Hence Josephus says that Joab had on a breastplate, θώρακα ἐνδεδυμένος.

And upon it a girdle, with a sword fastened to his loins in the sheath thereof. כִּסָּא, in Hebrew, is a bracelet, or circular plate of metal, which was clasped for ornament round the wrists, arms, or ankles. But, in Arabic, the noun כִּסָּא is a swathing-band, roller, girdle, or belt; and, in Syriac, the verb כִּסָּא is to gird round with such a band, belt, or girdle: and this I take to be the primary meaning of the word. Hence the noun כִּסָּא may signify a belt, and כִּסָּא על מִתְנֵי, a girdle upon the waist. The passage, therefore, may be rendered thus: and over it he was girded with a sword [חָסַדָּם עַל מִחְנִי] [hang- ing] from the girdle at his waist in its scabbard. Or, perhaps חָסַדָּם בְּיָדוֹ may render a sword for a belt, a belt-sword, as distinguished from another sort of sword which was hung from the shoulders. Both were in use among the warriors of antiquity. Ἀμφὶ δ' ἄρ' ὤμοισι βαλετο ξίφος ἀργυροῦλον.

—II. β', 45.

—φασγάνον ὅξυ ἐρύσσαμενος παραμῆρου.—
II. α', 190.

Taking the word חָסַדָּם thus, as an adjunct of the verb בָּרַח, the passage may be thus rendered: and over it he was girded with a belt-sword at his waist in its scabbard.

And as he went forth, it fell out; rather, "and it was coming out, and ready to fall." See Houbigant's note.

Dr. A. Clarke.—8 Joab's garment.] It appears that this was not a military garment; and that Joab had no arms but a short sword, which he had concealed in his girdle; and this sword, or knife, was so loose in its sheath that it could be easily drawn out. It is thought farther, that Joab, in passing to Amasa, stumbled (for so some of the versions, and able critics, understand the words it fell out), and that the sword fell down when he stumbled; that he took it up with his left hand as if he had no bad intention; and then, taking Amasa by the beard with his right hand, pretending to kiss him, he, with his sword in his left hand, ripped up his bowels. This seems to be the meaning of this very obscure verse. It is worthy of remark that in the eastern country it is the beard, not the man, which is usually kissed.

Ged.—8 When they were come to the great stone, at Gibeon, Amasa met them. Now the garment which Joab wore, was bound about with a girdle, in which a sword, in its sheath, hung by his side. But he let it fall out, as he marched along.

Booth.—8 When they were come to the great stone which is in Gibeon, Amasa came to them. Now the garment which Joab had put on, was girded about him with a girdle, in which, a sword in its sheath, hung by his loins; but as he went on he let it fall out.

Houb.—8 Illi ad lapidem magnum, qui est in Gabaon, cum venissent, Amasa ante eos ivit. Erat autem Joab militari veste indutus, super quam ensen habebat lateri accinctum, qui quidem, vagina exiens, prope erat ut decideret.

8 וְיָ: Recte Masora, וְיָ, super eum (amictum) ... וְיָ: וְיָ: וְיָ: Lege וְיָ: וְיָ: וְיָ: et ille (gladius) egrediens (vagina) cadebat. Hæc dicuntur de ense, qui laxus erat in vagina, et jam casurus, non de Joab, ut liquet. Clericus, unde egressus cecidit (gladius) "casu nempe (inquit) aut arte Joabi, qui simulavit se colligere gladium." Tamen tacetur a sacro scriptore gladium Joab cecidisse; quod si accidisset, non omisisset narrare gladium fuisse deinde humi collectum. Non cecidit gladius, sed quia vaginam dimittebat, retinebat eum Joab sinistra sua, dum dextera mentum Amasæ apprehendebat, ne quid Amasa suspicaretur. Nam credidit Amasa casu accidere, ut gladius vagina exiret, quod Joab, dedita opera moliebatur, ut gladium sinistra facilius corripere, vagina sua jam sponte egredientem.

Fifth rib. See notes on ii. 23, p. 500.

Dr. A. Clarke.—10 In the fifth rib.] I believe וְיָ:, which we render here and elsewhere the fifth rib, means any part of the abdominal region. The Septuagint translate it τὴν ψοαν, the groin; the Targum, the right side of the thigh; i.e. (the phrase of the Targumist being interpreted), verenda. That it means some part of the abdominal region, is evident from what follows, and shed out his bowels to the ground. It appears from this that, in plain English, he ripped up his belly.

Au. Ver.—14 And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Beerites: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

Pool.—He went; either, 1. Joab, who pursued Sheba through all the tribes as far as Abel. Or rather, 2. Sheba [so most commentators], who was last mentioned, who marched from tribe to tribe to stir them up to sedition; and to him the following words seem best to agree.

Bp. Horsley.—And he went; rather, had passed.

Ged.—He had, by this time, gone.

Unto Abel and to Beth-maachah.

Houb., Dathe, Patrick, Ged., Booth.—Unto Abel Beth-maachah.

Bp. Patrick.—Unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah.] Or rather unto Abel Beth-maachah: for they were one and the same place, as appears by the next verse. And so Josephus, who saith it was a strong city, well fortified, in the tribe of Naphtali, in the northern parts of Judea, upon the borders of that part of Syria where Maachah was (x. 8).

VOL. II.

Pool.—Unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, or rather, to Abel, even to Beth-maachah, i. e., unto Abel-beth-maachah, as this place is called here in the Hebrew text, ver. 15; 1 Kings xv. 20; 2 Kings xv. 29, to distinguish it from other Abels; and to signify that this was that Abel which was in the tribe of Naphtali in the northern border of Canaan, towards that part of Syria called Maachah, 2 Sam. x. 8.

Ged., Booth.—14 And Sheba went through all the tribes of Israel to Abel-beth-maachah; and all the dissatisfied assembled, and went after him.

And all the dissatisfied. I have followed the reading of Sept. making it an appellative noun. [The Sept. takes it as a proper name, the Vulg. renders virī electi.] The present text is variously rendered. By most it is taken for a proper name, the Berites.—Ged.

Boothroyd's Heb. Bible.—מִן הַבְּרִיתִים. The Syr. and Ar. read וְכָל הַבְּרִיתִים. Geddes renders appellatively, all the discontented, from the Ch. sense of הָבַר. The error וְכָל הַבְּרִיתִים, the Masorets have corrected. Why should such errors remain in the text?

Au. Ver.—15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they cast up a bank against the city, and it stood in the trench [or, it stood against the outmost wall]: and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall, to throw it down [Heb., marred to throw down].

And they cast up a bank against the city, &c.

Pool.—They cast up a bank; from whence they might either batter the wall, or shoot at those who defended it against them who should assault it. See 2 Kings xix. 32; Jer. xxxii. 24; xxxiii. 4. Otherwise, they threw down the bank of the city, which they had raised up to defend the city on the weakest side. It stood in the trench, i. e., the bank stood in or near to the trench, or wall of the city; so that the city was in great danger of being taken. Otherwise, the city stood within the trench, or wall, being defended only by a single trench, or a weak wall; the bank which was raised up there to defend it being thrown down.

Bp. Horsley.—In the trench; rather, close to the trench.

Pilkington.—The word סלח is constantly in our version rendered a bank, or a mount, as if it had no other signification. And, indeed, I am of opinion that it hath but one; but think it to be different from that in which our translators understood it; and that it means an engine of war, made use of to fling stones, or any heavy body, into, or against a besieged city. But, if this be the sense of it, it hath been mistaken by most translators. The verb it is commonly connected with is שָׁח; from whence, in the Latin versions, we have, fundere, effundere, acervare, comportare, jacere, circumjacere, extruere, congerere, mittere in circuitu aggerem; circumdare munitiones; ponere et tendere insidias; cingere et circumdare vallum; effundere virtutem; collocare exercitum. The Hebrew verb, indeed, most properly signifies to pour out; and therefore may be applied either to the pouring out of vessels, earth, or rubbish, to raise a mount; or it may surely be applied to the pouring of stones out of an engine without at all straining a metaphor. However, I shall produce the ten passages where this word is used, that the reader may pass his own judgment whether it signifies a mount or an engine.

2 Sam. xx. 15. They besieged Sheba in Abel; and they played (or poured out) an engine against the city (version, cast up a bank); and it stood in the trench, and all the people that were with Joab battered the wall to throw it down.

2 Kings xix. 32. Sennacherib shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with a shield, nor play an engine (version, cast a bank) against it.

Isaiah xxxvii. 33. A repetition of the foregoing verse.

Jer. vi. 6. Hew ye down trees, and play an engine (version, cast a mount) against Jerusalem.

Jer. xxxii. 24. Behold, the engines (version, mounts) are come into the city to take it, and the city is given into the hands of the Chaldeans.

Jer. xxxiii. 4. The houses of this city and the houses of the kings of Judah are thrown down by the engines (version, mounts), and by the sword.

Ezek. iv. 2. Lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and play an engine (version, cast a mount) against it, &c.

Ezek. xvii. 17. Neither shall Pharaoh—make for him in the war, by playing engines (version, casting up mounts), and building forts.

Ezek. xxi. 22. To lift up the voice with shouting; to appoint battering rams against the gates; to play an engine (version, cast a mount), and to build a fort.

Dan. xi. 15. The King of the North shall come, and play an engine (version, cast up a mount), and take the most fenced cities.

The antient versions of these passages may readily be compared in the Polyglott; from whence it will appear, that our translators were led to render this word a mount, or a bank, by the more general concurrence of those versions, in affixing that sense to it. But, if the reader shall think it could not properly be said, that “the mounts are come into the city;” or that “the houses are thrown down by the mounts,” and finds that such engines of war, as we have mentioned, are applicable to all the above cited passages; he may be led to consider, that the versions are but little to be depended upon; and that it is necessary to consult and compare the words of the original, and attend to the context, in order rightly to understand the language of Scripture.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The word סלח, which we render bank, means, most probably, a battering engine of some kind, or a tower overlooking the walls, on which archers and slingers could stand and annoy the inhabitants, while others of the besiegers could proceed to sap the walls. That it cannot be a bank that stood in the trench, is evident from the circumstance thus expressed.

Ged.—15 So Joab and his men went, and besieged him in Abel-beth-Maacha. They had already raised a mound, facing the outer wall of the city; and the whole people, who were with Joab, were battering the wall, to throw it down; 16 when, &c.

Booth.—15 But they came and besieged him in Abel-beth-maachah, and cast up a bank against the city, which stood opposite the outward wall; and all the people who were with Joab, battered the wall, to throw it down.

Au. Ver.—18 Then she spake, saying, They were wont to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter [or, they plainly spake in the beginning, saying, Surely they will ask of Abel, and so make an end: see Deut. xx. 11].

19 I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Israel : thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel : why wilt thou swallow up the inheritance of the Lord ?

Pool.—18 According to this translation the sense is, This city which thou art about to destroy is no mean and contemptible one, but so honourable and considerable for its wisdom, and the wise people in it, that when any differences did arise among any of the neighbours, they used proverbially to say, We will ask the opinion and advice of the men of Abel about it, and we will stand to their arbitration ; and so all parties were satisfied, and disputes ended. But there is another translation in the margin, embraced also by some others, which seems to be the best : They (i.e., the citizens of this city) plainly (or, commonly) spake (among themselves) in the beginning, (to wit, when Sheba and his men first came into the city, and they were informed, that Joab was pursuing him,) saying, Surely they will ask of Abel, and so make an end. They will peaceably expostulate the business with us, and inquire why we received Sheba into our city, and whether we would deliver him up into their hands, and would inform us of the reason of their hostile attempt upon us, and offer to us conditions of peace, which by God's law, Deut. xx. 10, they were to do even to strange, and much more to Israelitish cities. So she doth both modestly reprove Joab for the neglect of this duty, and oblige him to the performance of it.

19 Or, I (to wit, the city of Abel, in whose name and person she speaks this) am one of the peaceable and faithful cities of Israel. Whatsoever Sheba may design, whom we have innocently received into our city before we well understood the matter, we of this city abhor the thoughts of warring and rebelling against the king, as having had no hand in Absalom's late rebellion : which is probable enough, considering both their situation in the utmost borders of the land, very remote from the seat of that civil war ; and their open profession of their peaceableness and fidelity or loyalty to the king ; which had been impudent if they had been so lately involved in the last war and rebellion. A city and a mother, i.e., a mother ; for great cities are commonly called mothers ; as lesser towns or villages subject to them, and depending upon them for direction and defence, are called their daughters, as Ezek. xvi. 27, 46. The inheritance of the Lord, i.e., a considerable part of that land which God hath chosen for his peculiar possession. The destruction which thou art about to bring upon us is an injury also to Israel, and to the God of Israel.

Bishop Patrick.—18 According to this translation of the words, she praises the city of Abel as famous, time out of mind, for wisdom and giving sound advice : and now, she would have him believe, was not without persons of great prudence and fidelity also (as it follows in the next verse), who would not willingly offend their king. But there is another translation in the margin of our Bibles, which I take to be more literal, by referring the word barishonah not to old time, but to the beginning of the siege. As if she had said, When the people saw thee lay siege to the city, they said, Surely they will ask us if we will have peace, and then we shall soon come to an agreement and make an end. Whereby she secretly remembers Joab of a rule in the law, Deut. xx. 10, which commands them to offer peace to the cities of other nations when they came to besiege them ; and therefore much more to a city of their own, as Abel was. To this purpose R. Solomon Jarchi ; and it agrees well with what follows, that they were a peaceable people and faithful to their prince : and therefore would not have refused to yield, upon summons, to him. R. Levi ben Gersom gives another sense of them ; that Sheba and his company, when they first came into the city, asked if they would follow him, and said no more : to whom the men of the city answered, We are peaceable and faithful ; that is, we cannot join with thee and rebel against king David. But there is a late writer, who thinks the words will bear this sense : This was a common saying in old time, If any one asked whether Abel was a place of justice and judgment, or a den of thieves ; the answer was, They are an upright people. And therefore she asks Joab, why he went about to destroy a city so famous for virtue. Thus Mayerus in his Annotations on Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 14.

19 I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful.] She speaks in the name of the whole city : which was of a peaceable temper ; and had been faithful to David in the time of the late revolt.

Thou seekest to destroy a city and a mother in Israel.] A great city, which had many towns depending on it, and therefore called a mother.

Why wilt thou swallow up the inheritance of the Lord?] Do an injury to the public; by depopulating a part of the country, which is God's peculiar.

Bp. Horsley.—18 They shall surely ask counsel, &c. Beth-maachah was probably an oracular temple, which might give rise to the proverb.

Dr. A. Clarke.—They shall surely ask counsel at Abel.] This is a proverb, but from what it originated we know not; nor can we exactly say what it means: much must be supplied to bring it to speak sense. Abel was probably famed for the wisdom of its inhabitants; and parties who had disputes appealed to their judgment, which appears to have been in such high reputation as to be final by consent of all parties. To this the wise woman refers, and intimates to Joab that he should have proceeded in this way before he began to storm the city, and destroy the peaceable inhabitants.

19 I—peaceable and faithful in Israel.] I am for peace, not contention of any kind; I am faithful—I adhere to David, and neither seek nor shall sanction any rebellion or anarchy in the land. Why then dost thou proceed in such a violent manner? Perhaps the woman speaks here in the name and on behalf of the city: "I am a peaceable city, and am faithful to the king."

Ged.—18 She then spoke thus: "There is an old saying: 'Make first sure inquiry, and then act accordingly.' 19 We are peaceable, faithful Israelites: thou seekest to destroy a mother-city in Israel! why wouldst thou devour the inheritance of the Lord?"

Booth.—18 Then she spoke, saying, They were wont to speak in old time, saying, Make, indeed, sure inquiry, and then act accordingly. 19 We are [Chald.] peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a mother-city in Israel: why wouldst thou swallow up the inheritance of Jehovah?

18 Make, indeed, sure inquiry at Abel.] I have followed Dathe in this version, and suppose that for some reason the people of this city were celebrated for their knowledge and sagacity. The city seems to have been large. Compare verse 14, 19. The woman reprehends Joab for attacking the city before he had inquired whether the citizens had willingly received him, and were actually his abettors. The Syr. and Arab. read for Abel נבאים, prophets. The Sept. and Chald. are incoherent. I believe the sense is that given.

Houb.—18 Tum illa; vetus erat proverbium; qui consulit, in Abel consulat, sicque res perficiebantur. 19 Ego sum pacis amans, in Israel fidelis; tu verò urbem perdere paras, quæ in Israel mater est. Quare igitur hæreditatem Domini destruis?

19 אברה: Veteres legebant אברה, tu vero. Nexus ו ibi est necessarius, ubi transitus fit a sententia in sententiam contrariam.

Dathe.—18 Primo debuisset, inquebat, inquiri in Abela, et deinde, quid faciendum sit, decerni a). 19 Ego sum una ex oppidis Israeliticis pacificis et fidelibus, tu vero perdere cupis urbem metropolin Israelitarum. Cur destruis terram Jovæ sacram?

a) Plerique interpretes verba textus ut dictionem proverbialem explicant de Abela, nescio, qua occasione divulgatam. Sed valde quæsitam esse hanc explicationem, facile intelligitur. Ego vero utrumque membrum impersonaliter accipio, et sensum in versione, non singula verba indicavi. Reprehendit mulier Joabum, quod oppidum aggressus sit, antequam cives interrogarit, num velint Sebam defendere! Sed per humanitatem, uti videtur, eum non in secunda, sed in tertia alloquitur: Man hätte erst die Stadt fragen, und dann seine Maassregeln nehmen sollen.

See notes on viii. 17, &c., p. 559—566.

Pool.—26 The Jairite; so called from his birth [so Patrick] or dwelling in the country of Jair in Gilead, Numb. xxxii. 41; Judg. x. 4. A chief ruler; either the president of the king's council; or his chief minister (as the Hebrew word cohen signifies) of state, instead of Ahithophel; or in some other very high place near the king's person. Compare 2 Sam. viii. 18, where this title is given to David's sons, the chief of which were now cut off. And these things are here repeated with some alteration to show that David was now fully re-established in his former estate.

Bp. Patrick.—26 Was a chief ruler about David. The Hebrew word cohen (as hath been often observed) signifies any minister, either sacred or civil: a priest or a prince. Instances of the last are many, and the Targum thus expounds it here, Rab le David, a prince, or great man about David. And so the "priest of On," Gen. xli. 50, and the "priest of Midian," Exod. ii. 26, signify the priest or ruler of On and of Midian. As, in Job xii. 19 we, following the Chaldee, translate it, "God leadeth princes away spoiled."

Dr. A. Clarke.—25 Sheva was scribe. The king's secretary.

26 Ira was a chief ruler about David. The Hebrew is כֹּהֵן לְדָוִד, a priest to David; and so the Vulgate, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic. The Chaldee has נָם, a prince or chief. He was probably a sort of domestic chaplain to the king. We know that the kings of Judah had their seers, which is nearly the same: Gad was David's seer, chap. xxiv. 11; and Jeduthun was the seer of king Josiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 15.

καὶ ἐγένετο λιμός ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις Δαυὶδ τρία ἔτη, ἐνταυτὸς ὁ ἐχόμενος ἐνιαυτοῦ· καὶ ἐζήτησε Δαυὶδ τὸ πρόσωπον κυρίου. καὶ εἶπε κύριος, ἐπὶ Σαουλ καὶ ἐπὶ τὸν οἶκον αὐτοῦ ἀδικία ἐν θανάτῳ αἱμάτων αὐτοῦ, περὶ οὗ ἐθανάτωσε τοὺς Γαβαωνίτας.

Au. Ver.—1 Then there was a famine in the days of David three years, year after year; and David enquired [Heb., sought the face, &c.; see Numb. xxvii. 21] of the Lord. And the Lord answered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites.

Pool.—Then there was a famine: when? Either, first, after Absalom's and Sheba's rebellion, as it is here related; or rather, secondly, in some other time before. It is well known and confessed that the particle then doth not always note that the thing was done in that order in which it is mentioned, but is oft of an indefinite signification; as also that the Scripture in its histories and relations doth not always observe the order of time, but the order of things, putting that after which was done before, as occasion requires. And so it seems to be here. The things related here and chap. xxiv. are by the most and best interpreters conceived to have been done long before Absalom's rebellion. And this opinion is not without sufficient grounds. First, This particle then is here explained, in the days, i. e., during the life and reign of David; which general and indefinite words seem to be added as an intimation that these things were not done after the next foregoing passages, for then the sacred writer would rather have added, after these things, or some such expression, as it is 2 Chron. xxxii. 1, and in many other places. Secondly, Here are divers passages which it seems very improbable to ascribe to the last years of David's reign: such as these, first, That Saul's sin against the Gibeonites should so long remain unpunished. And indeed that this was done, and Saul's seven sons hanged by David's order before that time, seems plainly to be intimated by that passage, 2 Sam. xvi. 8, where he is charged with the blood of the house of Saul; for which there was not the least colour till this time. Secondly, That David should not remove the bones of Saul and Jonathan to their proper place, here, ver. 12—14, till that time. Thirdly, That the Philistines should wage war with David again and again, ver. 15, &c., so long after he had fully subdued them, chap. viii. 1; and that David in his old age should attempt to fight with a Philistine giant, or that his people should suffer him to do so. Fourthly, That David should then have so vehement a desire to number his people, chap. xxiv. 1, &c., which being an act of youthful heat and vanity, seems not at all to agree with his old age, nor with that state of deep humiliation and great affliction in which he then was. And the reason why these matters are put here out of their proper order is plainly this, because David's sin being once related, it was very convenient that David's punishments inflicted for it should immediately succeed; this being very frequent in Scripture story, to put those things together which belong to one matter, though they happened at several times. And this is the more considerable, because it tends to the clearing of that great difficulty, 2 Sam. xv. 7.

Bp. Patrick.—1 Then there was a famine.] The Jewish doctors commonly say this famine was before the rebellion of Absalom. But Abarbinel will have it, that things are related here in the order wherein they were done; so that this was after that rebellion was ended.

Because he slew the Gibeonites.] When he slew the whole city of Nob (saith the same Abarbinel) where the Gibeonites lived, and served as hewers of wood and drawers of water to the high-priest, whom Saul then cut off (1 Sam. xxii. 18, 19).

Dr. A. Clarke.—1 Then there was a famine.] Of this famine we know nothing; it is not mentioned in any part of the history of David.

Because he slew the Gibeonites.] No such fact is mentioned in the life and transactions of Saul: nor is there any reference to it in any other part of Scripture.

Houb.—נשמדנו: Lege, cum Græcis Intt. נשמדנו, addita ו conjunctione, quæ habet nexūs ut Latini potestatem; nam Gabaonitæ sic dicunt, qui cogitavit super nos ut periremus, ut etiam interpretantur Syrus et Arabs. Neque enim נשמדנו, in voce passiva, active unquam sumitur; sic ut non liceat interpretari, delere debemus, quod tamen fecit Vulgatus.

Ver. 6.

וַיִּתְּנוּלָנוּ שִׁבְעָה אַנְשִׁים מִבְּנָיו וַהֲוִיָּעֲנֵם לַיהוָה בְּגִבְעַת שָׂמָוֶל בְּחֵיר יִהְיֶה וַיֹּאמֶר הַמֶּלֶךְ אֲנִי אֶקַּח מִסֹּס בְּנֵי־צֶדֶק יִתְּנוּ :

δὴ τότε ἡμῖν ἐπτά ἀνδρας ἐκ τῶν υἱῶν αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐξηλίσσωμεν αὐτοὺς τῷ κυρίῳ ἐν τῷ Γαβῶν Σαουλ ἐκλεκτοὺς κυρίου. καὶ εἶπεν ὁ βασιλεὺς, ἐγὼ δώσω.

Au. Ver.—6 Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us, and we will hang them up unto the Lord in Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did choose [or, chosen of the Lord]. And the king said, I will give them.

And we will hang them.

Ged.—That we may hang them up, &c. The Hebrew is of a dubious meaning; and may signify suspension or luzation of any kind. Jerom renders the word crucified.

In Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did choose.

Ged.—On the Lord's hill at Gibeah-of-Saul. A conjectural emendation; but founded in analogy, and confirmed by p. p. v.

Booth.—6 Let seven of his sons be delivered to us, that we may hang them up before Jehovah in Gibeah-of-Saul.

The chosen of Jehovah.] These words are wanting in the Syr. and Arab. and it is not probable, that the Gibeonites would honour Saul, their cruel enemy, with this title.

Houb.—6 יִרְן, Detur. Delendum punctum majus, quod antecedit. Nam כִּבְנֵי, de filiis ejus, pertinet ad דָּוִד, ille homo, quod nomen antecessit versu 5. Masora respuit יִרְן, quod tamen non inusitatum; vult יִרְן, quod idem est. Unus Codex Orat. יִרְן, in Hophal, detur, etiam recte. ... שָׂאֻל בְּדִיד יִרְן, Saül electus Domini. Vidit Vulgatus, parum consentaneum esse, ut Gabaonitæ, quo tempore filios Saülis ad necem postulant, Saülem dicant esse electum Domini. Itaque vertit, quondam electi Domini. Similiter nos, quem Dominus elegerat. Quidam volunt, ut legatur בְּדִיד יִרְן, in monte Domini, quod stare non potest cum eo, quod antecessit. Nam collis Saülis non erat idem, atque mons Domini. Forsan legebatur olim בְּדִיד יִרְן, juxta verbum Domini. Nam, cum David Gabaonitas sic interroget, quid faciam vobis, videtur Deum jussisse, eo sanguine expiari Saülis scelus, quem sanguinem Gabaonitæ postulaturi essent. Aliter David Deum unum consulisset, nec ivisset ad Gabaonitas, ut quidquid vellent, eis concederet.

Dathe.—Hæc verba דָּוִיד יִרְן merito suspecta sunt, quod parum probabile est, Gibeonitas Saulum, cui adeo infesti erant, hoc honoris titulo condecorasse. Omittunt ea Syrus et Arabs. Vulgatus addit: quondam, quoniam intelligebat, quam inepta essent. Non displicet conjectura Hubigantii, legi posse: דָּוִיד יִרְן. Poterant enim Gibeonitæ certiores esse facti de responso divino, quod David acceperat.

Maurer.—[דָּוִיד יִרְן] Hæc verba Dathius suspecta habet, "quod parum probabile sit, Gibeonitas Saulum, cui adeo infesti fuerint, hoc honoris titulo condecorasse. Omittere

Ver. 8.

וַיָּקָח הַמֶּלֶךְ אֶת־שֵׁנֵי בְנֵי רִצְפָּה בַת־אִיָּה אֲשֶׁר יָלְדָה לְשָׂאֻל אֶת־אַרְבָּנִי וְאֶת־מִפְּבֹשֶׁת וְאֶת־חִמְבֹּשֶׁת בְּנֵי מִיכָל בַת־שָׂאֻל אֲשֶׁר יָלְדָה לְעִדְרֵיָאֵל כִּדְּבָרֹתֶיהָ:

καὶ ἔλαβεν ὁ βασιλεὺς τοὺς δύο υἱοὺς Ῥεσφά θυγατρὸς Αἰᾶ, οὓς ἔτεκε τῷ Σαούλ, τὸν Ἑρμωνοὶ καὶ τὸν Μεμφιβοσθεῖ, καὶ τοὺς πέντε υἱοὺς τῆς Μιχὰλ θυγατρὸς Σαούλ οὓς ἔτεκε τῷ Ἑσδρμηλ υἱὸς Βερζελλὶ τῷ Μωουλαθί.

Au. Ver.—8 But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal [or, Michal's sister], the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up for Adriel [Heb., bare to Adriel] the son of Barzillai the Meholaithite.

Pool.—The five sons of Michal, or, of Michal's sister, to wit, Merab; for Michal had no children, 2 Sam. vi. 23, nor was she married to this Adriel, but to Phalti, or Phaltiel, the son of Loish, 1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 15; and Merab her sister was married to this very Adriel the Meholathite, 1 Sam. xviii. 19. And it must be remembered, that the Hebrew language is very short, and full of ellipses or defects of words, which yet may be easily understood from the sense. Particularly relative words are oft lacking, and to be supplied; as Goliath is put for Goliath's brother, here, ver. 19, and uncle for uncle's son, Jer. xxxii. 7, 12. Or, the sons of Merab are called the sons of Michal, to wit, by adoption; or, the near kindred and next heirs of Michal, and brought up by her; for upon that and such-like accounts the title of son is oft given in Scripture, as Gen. xlviii. 5; Exod. ii. 10; Deut. xxv. 5, 6; Ruth i. 11, 12; iv. 17. Quest. But why then are not these called the sons of Merab? Answ. Because they were better known by their relation to Michal, who was David's wife, and, it may be, alive at this time, and having no children of her own, took these, and bred them up as her own; when Merab was now a more obscure person, and possibly dead many years before this. Whom she brought up; for so this Hebrew verb, which primarily and properly signifies to bear, is sometimes used, as Gen. i. 23; Ruth iv. 17, because the education of children is a kind of bearing of them, as requiring frequently no less care and pains than the bearing doth; whence it is that nurses are reputed as mothers, and sometimes go under that name both in sacred and profane writers. See Ruth iv. 16, 17; and compare Gen. xvi. 2; xxx. 3; Numb. xi. 12; Gal. iv. 19.

Bp. Patrick.—Whom she brought up.] In the Hebrew, “whom she bare,” i. e., which were born: according to an usual manner of speaking among the Hebrews; of which see Dr. Hammond upon Luke xvi. note b.

For Adriel.] It is plain from hence, that by was born is meant, as we translate it, was brought up. For Michal was not the wife of Adriel, but was given to Phaltiel (1 Sam. xxv. 44). Merab her eldest sister being married to Adriel (1 Sam. xviii. 19), by whom she had these five sons, whom Michal brought up, and therefore they are called her children. Thus the Jews say, in the Gemara Sanhedrin, cap. 2, “Merab brought them forth, and Michal educated them.” And the like we read (as they allege for the proof of this) Gen. xxx. 3; i. 23 (see Selden, De Uxore Hebr., lib. i., cap. 6). Kimchi also here alleges the words of the women in Ruth iv. 17. “There is a son born to Naomi;” who was not the mother of it, but only laid it in her bosom, and became nurse to it, as is said in the precedent verse. Thus also Rasi, Ralbag, and a great many other Jews, following the Chaldee paraphrase. And we have an example of this in the heathen writers. For Agamemnon and Menelaus are called sons of Atreus, because their father being dead, he took care to bring them up. So Eustathius on the second book of the Iliads: Plisthenes (who was their father) being dead, the youths being bred up by Atreus, αὐτοῦ παῖδες ἐκλήθησαν, “they were called his children.”

Grotius, Le Clerc, Houb., Dathe, Horsley, Ken., Ged., Booth.—The five sons of Merab the daughter of Saul whom she had borne [or, bare] to Adriel, &c.

Ken.—The king took the two sons of Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore (יָרָד) unto Saul, and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she brought up (יָרָד) for Adriel the son of Barzillai. Though our last English translators have sometimes expressed, not what they found in the Hebrew text, but what in their opinion ought to be there; yet at other times, rather than admit a corruption, they have offered violence to the sense of the plainest words: as in this instance, by rendering the same verb, in the very same connexion, very differently and without authority. But the corruption is obvious. For it is clear from 2 Sam. vi. 23, that Michal, Saul's daughter, had no child. And it is clear from 1 Sam. xviii. 19, that Adriel's wife was Merab. It is therefore for the honour of two Heb. MSS. to have preserved here the name Merab, undoubtedly the true reading.

Dathe.—In textu quidem legitur Michal. Sed permutatio nominum Michal et Merab tam manifesta est, ut non nisi fidiculis adhibitis cum aliis locis possit conciliari. Primo cap. vi. 23 narratur, Michalam per omnem vitam suam prolem non habuisse. Deinde non Michala, sed Meraba matrimonio juncta fuit Adrieli, 1 Sam. xviii. 19; Michala vero durante exsilio Davidis nupta fuerat Phaltieli, 1 Sam. xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 15. — Duo codd. Kennicotti 250 et 198 habent מֵרַב, sed sine dubio tantum ex correctione scribæ, qui errorem observabat. Nam hoc quoque mendum est antiquissimum et in verss. antiquis deprehenditur. Habent illud οἱ ὁ et Vulgatus; Syrus vero habet aliud nomen מֵרַב, Nodoba, quod fortasse ex מֵרַב, litteris non valde dissimilibus, ortum est; nam Saulum filiam nomine Nodobam habuisse, nullibi legitur. Chaldaeus contradictionem sic conciliare studuit: quinque filios Merabæ, quos educaverat Michal, filia Sauli, quos peperat Adrieli, etc.

Maurer.—מֵרַב לְאֶדְרִיֶּל Pro מֵרַב legendum esse מֵרַב, jam Grotius, Clericus aliiq. conjecerunt, et nuper existimavit Hitzigius Be-griff, p. 145 sq., collatis inter se locis 1 Sam. xviii. 19; xxv. 44; 2 Sam. iii. 14, 15; vi. 23. Per antiquum esse mendum, et fortasse ab ipso scriptore profectum, patet ex eo, quod jam apud LXX et Vulg. deprehenditur.

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill before the Lord: and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, in the beginning of barley-harvest.

Pool.—In the hill, or, in a hill, in or near Gibeah; in a conspicuous place, for their greater infamy, and for the caution and terror of others who should make any attempt upon the Gibeonites for the future. Before the Lord; as a sacrifice offered up to God to appease his wrath; or, unto the Lord, as was said, ver. 6. They fell, i. e., died; for so the word to fall is oft used, as Exod. xix. 21; 1 Chron. xxi. 14; Psal. xci. 7; Jer. xxxix. 18; Hos. v. 5; or were executed.

Houb.—9 וקצם: Unus Codex Orat. וקצם, et suspenderunt eos. Au. Ver.—15 Moreover the Philistines had yet war again with Israel; and David went down, and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines: and David waxed faint.

16 And Ishbi-benob, which was of the sons of the giant [or, Rapha], the weight of whose spear [Heb., the staff, or, the head] weighed three hundred shekels of brass in weight, he being girded with a new sword, thought to have slain David.

15 And David waxed faint. 16 And Ishbi-benob, &c.

Geddes.—But David being now feeble, (16) Ishbiboneb, who was of the Raphaite race, the brass of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels, and who was begirt with a new sword, thought to kill David.

Of the sons of the giant.

Pool.—The giant: so called by way of eminency. Or, of Rapha, a giant so called. The weight of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels: see 1 Sam. xvii. 5. With a new sword, or rather, with a new girdle or belt; for, first, This was the usual habit of soldiers, 1 Sam. xviii. 4; 2 Sam. xviii. 11; xx. 8; 1 Kings ii. 5; Isa. v. 27, and when it was of an extraordinary fashion and price, an ensign of dignity and command in the army, Ezek. xxiii. 15. So this may be mentioned to note that this was the first time either of his going out to fight, or of his advancement to some eminent place in the army; which made him desirous to signalize himself with some great action. Secondly, This supplement is more natural and usual, the word girdle being easily supplied from the word being girded; such ellipses of conjugate words being frequent in the Hebrew tongue, as Numb. xi. 14; Psal. lxxvi. 12; Matt. xx. 12. Thirdly, The newness of the sword seems to have no emphasis nor significance for the present purpose, seeing an old and tried sword would seem more considerable for his encouragement than one new and unproved.

Bp. Patrick.—16 Ishbi-benob, which was of the sons of the giant. That is, of Goliath: who by way of eminency is called the giant; though Bochartus thinks the Hebrew word rapha signifies any giant; and so these words should be translated, "of the race of the giants," i. e., of the Anakims who fled into this country, particularly to Gath, when Joshua expelled them from Canaan (Josh. xi. 22).

The weight of whose spear weighed three hundred shekels of brass.] This is to be understood of the head of his spear, which weighed half as much as that of Goliath (1 Sam. xvii. 7).

He being girded with a new sword.] The word sword is not in the Hebrew; nor is there anything remarkable in his having a new sword; therefore it should be translated, "with a new kind of weapon," or rather, "with a new belt;" which had been bestowed upon him as a reward of some great exploit which he had done, or as a token of some new honour, or command, conferred upon him in the army (see xviii. 11).

Dr. A. Clarke.—Being girded with a new sword.] As the word sword is not in the original, we may apply the term new to his armour in general; he had got new arms, a new coat of mail, or something that defended him well, and rendered him very formidable; or it may mean a strong or sharp sword.

καὶ ἐγένετο ὁ πόλεμος ἐν Ῥὸμ μετὰ τῶν ἀλλοφύλων· καὶ ἐπάταξεν Ἐλεανὰν υἱὸς Ἀριωργίμ ὁ Βαυθεεμίτης τὸν Γολιάθ τὸν Γεθαῖον. καὶ τὸ ξύλον τοῦ δόρατος αὐτοῦ ὡς ἀντίον ὑφαινότων.

Aug. Ver.—19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where Elhanan the son of Jaare-oregim [or, Jair], a Beth-lehemite, slew the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

Pool.—The brother of Goliath the Gittite: the word brother is not in the Hebrew text, but is fitly supplied out of the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 5, where it is expressed. And such defects of relatives are not unusual in Scripture. Thus the word wife is understood, Matt. i. 6; John xix. 25; and father or mother, Mark xv. 40, 47, compared with Mark xvi. 1; Luke xxiv. 10; and son, Matt. iv. 21; Mark ii. 14; John xxi. 15; and brother, Luke vi. 16, compared with Jude 1. And such ellipses do also frequently occur in profane authors. Although the place may be and is otherwise rendered, Elhanan, the son of Jaare-oregim, slew Beth-halachmi, or Lahmi (as he is called by way of abbreviation, 1 Chron. xx. 5, which is very frequent in the Hebrew tongue), who was (which words are frequently understood in the Hebrew text) with (so eth is often rendered, as hath been noted before) Goliath the Gittite, i.e., in his company, bred up with him to the war, and related to him as his brother. Or, he slew Beth-halachmi, a Goliath (or another Goliath) of Gath, or the Gittite. So the name of the giant was Beth-halachmi, who may be here called Goliath, not only for his near relation to him, being his brother, but for his exact resemblance of him in feature, or in stature and strength, or in courage and military skill; as John the Baptist was called Elias for the like reason. Peradventure also, after the death of the first and famous Goliath the Gittite, 1 Sam. xvii., that name was either given to him by others, or taken by himself.

Ken.—Every one knows, that Goliath the Gittite was slain by David, and therefore there must have been a mistake of some transcriber here; since Goliath could not be slain also by Elhanan the son of Jaare Oregim. Under this perplexity we are seasonably relieved by a repetition of this very place in Chronicles; which, though perhaps the most corrupted book, as well as the latest in the Old Testament, is extremely useful (among other reasons) because it will frequently settle the true reading in books which are more ancient and more important.

We read then 1 Chron. xx. 5—

ויד אלחנן בן יעור את לחמי אחי
גלית הגי'

And Elhanan, the son of Jaor, slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath of Gath, &c. Here all is plain and consistent; and these words have evidently been corrupted into the words now found in Samuel. But, for conviction, let us place both together; first the regular line of Chronicles, and under it the corrupted line of Samuel—

Chron. ויד אלחנן בן יעור . . .

Sam. ויד אלחנן בן יערי ארגים

Chron. את לחמי אחי גלית

Sam. בית הלחמי את גלית

The corruption is now evident to every eye—that יערי (or as the marginal reading has it in Chronicles יעיר) is corrupted into יעיר into יערי; after which it was natural for some copyist to insert the ה at the beginning of לחמי, to make it a regular local name; for ביה יהמי is a Bethlehemite—and then יערי has plainly been corrupted into יערי. But then; how comes in the long word uncorrupted text to introduce it? How is it, that after יערי (which should be יעיר or יעיר—And Elhanan the son of Jaor) comes in a participle plural Masculine, signifying YFAINONTES, Weavers; and which confessedly so signifies, at the end of this very verse?

I think there is but one way of answering these queries, to any reasonable man's satisfaction, and that is—by saying, that the word was taken into the middle of the verse from the end of it, in the following manner.

A transcriber is to copy these words—

ויד אלחנן בן יעור את לחמי אחי
גלית הגי' וצץ חנייתו כמנור ארגים:

He writes on regularly, till he has transcribed יעיר Jaor; and then, upon the next reference to his book, carelessly casting his eye upon the line under יעיר Jaor, and seeing כסנור Kinnor a word ending with the same letters he had just set down, he writes on the next word from thence ארגים Oregim—ארגים בן יעור ארגים—יד אלחנן בן יעור ארגים—after which, referring again to his book, and finding his mistake, he returns to the line above, and there (without striking out the word ארגים Oregim, which he had inserted improperly) writes on from יעור Jaor, as he should have done at first—

ויד אלחנן בן יעור ארגים את לחמי אחי גלית

—which words, by the farther carelessness of some transcriber or transcribers since, have been corrupted (we see) into the words following—

ויד אלחנן בן יערי ארגים בית הלחמי את גלית הגתי ועץ חניתו כמנור ארגים :

So Dr. Adam Clarke.

Bp. Horsley.—19 At Gob; read again, at Gezer. Where Elhanan—the Gittite. Upon comparing this with the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 5, I would read, with Houbigant, and Elhanan the son of Jair, a Bethlehemite, slew Lechami the brother of Goliath the Gittite.

Ged.—Again there was a battle with the Philistines at Gob; when Elhanan Ben-Jair-oregim, a Bethlehemite, slew Lahami, brother to [supplied from 1 Chron. xx. 5] Goliath, the Gathite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

At Gob. Here again forty MSS. have Nob. In the different copies of Sep. we find Nob, Rob, and Rom. The words are wanting in Syr., Arab., and p. p. 1 Chron. xx. 5.

Booth.—19 Again there was another battle with the Philistines at Gob, where Elhanan, the son of Jair, a Bethlehemite, slew Lahumi, the brother of Goliath, the Gathite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

Houb.—19 Fuit adhuc bellum cum Philistæis in Gazer, in quo Elchanan filius Jair Bethlehemita percussit Lechmi fratrem Goliath Gethæi, cujus hastæ lignum erat ut jugum textorum.

Au. Ver.—1 Now these be the last words of David. David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel, said,

2 The Spirit of the LORD spake by me, and his word was in my tongue.

3 The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me, He that ruleth [or, be thou ruler, &c., Ps. cx. 2] over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God.

4 And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain.

5 Although my house be not so with God; yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it not to grow.

6 But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands:

7 But the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear; and they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.

Pool.—1 The last words of David; not simply the last that he spoke, but some of the last uttered in his last days upon the approach of his death; or the last which he spoke by the Spirit of God, assisting and directing him in an extraordinary manner. The sweet psalmist of Israel; or, sweet, or, delightful, or, amiable in the songs of Israel: either, first, As the object of them; he whom the people of Israel mentioned in their songs with joy and praise, as when they sung, Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands; Or, secondly, As the author of them, he who was eminent and famous among the people of God for the composing of sweet and holy songs to the praise of God, and for the use of his Church in after-ages.

3 Spake to me, by way of command; or of me, by way of prediction and promise concerning me and my house, and the Messiah who is to come out of my loins. He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God: thus it is a precept or declaration of the duty of kings, and particularly of Solomon his son, (to whom as a dying man he gives this advice,) and of his successors the kings of God's Israel, for whose instruction he gives this rule. And so here are the two principal parts of a king's duty, answerable to the two tables of God's law, justice towards men, and piety towards God, both which he is to maintain and promote among his people.

Others make it a prophecy of Christ; and then the words are or may be thus rendered, There shall be a ruler over men, (or rather, among men, as the Hebrew word properly signifies, to wit, the Messiah, who, though he be the eternal and invisible God, yet shall visibly appear and rule among men,) a just or righteous one (a title oft given to Christ, as Isa. liii. 11; Jer. xxiii. 5, 6; xxxiii. 15; Zech. ix. 9), ruling in the fear of the Lord, making it his great business to advance the service, and worship, and glory of the Lord; or, as it is in the Hebrew, ruling the fear of the Lord, i. e., governing and ordering the worship of God, which is oft called the fear of God. And so this clause is added to prevent or remove scandals and offences which might be taken at the Messiah when he should come, because of his changing and abrogating the ceremonial law; and to insinuate that he should have no less power in the governing of God's house and worship than Moses had, and that he might make such laws as he thought meet.

4 These words are either, 1. A further description of the king's duty, which is not only to rule with exact justice and piety, but also with sweetness, and gentleness, and condescension to the infirmities of his people; to render his government as pleasant and acceptable to them as is the sunshine in a clear morning, or the tender grass which springs out of the earth by the warm and refreshing beams of the sun after the rain, which hath a peculiar kind of sweetness and fragrantcy in it. Or rather, 2. A prediction or declaration of the sweet and blessed effects of such a government, both to the governor himself, in that peace, and prosperity, and glory, and happiness which it brings to him, and to his people; to whom it is no less grateful, and comfortable, and beneficial, than those great and public blessings of sunshine and rain, and the fruits which they produce; which is true of every good king or governor, but most eminently of the Messias.

5 Although my house be not so with God; although God knows that neither I nor my children have lived and ruled as we should have done, so justly, and in the fear of the Lord; and therefore have not enjoyed that uninterrupted prosperity which we might have enjoyed; but our morning light, or the beginning of that kingdom promised to me and mine for ever, hath been overcast with many black and dismal clouds, and my children have not hitherto been like the tender grass springing out of the earth, and thriving by the influences of the sun and rain; but rather like the grass that withereth away, or is cut off before its due time. Yet he hath made with me an everlasting covenant: notwithstanding all our transgressions whereby we have broken covenant with God, and the confusions and civil wars which have threatened our dissipation and utter destruction; yet I comfort myself with this, that God, to whom all my sins were fore-known before I committed them, was graciously pleased to make a sure covenant, to give and continue the kingdom to me and to my seed for ever, chap. vii. 16, until the coming of the Messiah, who is to be my son and successor, and whose kingdom shall have no end. Ordered in all things; ordained in all points by God's eternal and unchangeable counsel; and disposed by his wise and powerful providence, which doth and will overrule all things, even the sins and sufferings of my house, so far, that although he would punish them for their sins, yet he will not utterly root them out, nor break his covenant made with me and mine; as is said, Psal. lxxxix. 31—34. Sure, or preserved, or observed, or kept, to wit, on God's part, or by God's power and faithfulness, in the midst of all the oppositions and uncertainties to which it seems to be exposed on our part. Compare Rom. iii. 3; 2 Tim. ii. 13. For, or therefore, as the Hebrew particle chi oft signifies; therefore, i. e., because God hath made such a covenant. This is, or, he is, he who hath made this covenant; or, in this is, i. e., it consists in and depends upon this covenant. All my salvation; both my own eternal salvation, and the temporal salvation, or the preservation of the kingdom to me and mine. All my desire, or, every desirable thing; the word desire being oft put for desired, or a desirable thing; as Ps. xxi. 2; lxxviii. 29, 30; Ezek. xxiv. 16. David being deeply sensible, and having had large experience, of the vanity and uncertainty of all earthly things, here declares that the covenant made by God with him and his in the Messias, is the only happiness which he prizeth and desireth, in which he doth fully acquiesce. Although he make it not to grow, i. e., my house, mentioned before. So the sense is, Although God as yet hath not made my house or family to grow, i. e., to increase, or to flourish with worldly glory and prosperity, as I expected; but hath for my sins cut off divers of my most eminent branches, and sorely afflicted my person and family; and although he may for the future deal in like manner with my sons and successors for the like miscarriages, which it is probable they may commit: yet this is my great support and comfort, that God will constantly and inviolably keep this covenant; and therefore, in the midst of all the shakings, and confusions, and interruptions which may happen in my house and kingdom, will preserve my line and family until the coming of the Messiah out of my loins, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom; who, as he is the desire of all nations, Hag. ii. 7, so in a special manner is my desire, and the author of all my salvation.

6 The sons of Belial, or, the men of Belial, as it is expressed 2 Sam. xvi. 7, and elsewhere. Having in the foregoing verses described the nature, and felicity, and stability of that kingdom which God himself had by a sure and everlasting covenant settled upon him and his seed; and especially, upon the Messiah, who was to be one of his posterity; he now describes the quality, the mischievous nature, the hazardous and miserable condition, of all the enemies of this holy and blessed kingdom, whom he justly calleth sons of Belial, because they rebelled against God's appointment, and against that king whom God had set over them; for which reason others are so called, 1 Sam. x. 27; 2 Chron. xiii. 7. As thorns thrust away; which men do not use to handle, as they do other trees, but thrust them away from themselves, by some instrument chosen for that purpose. And so will God remove or thrust away from himself, and from his people and kingdom, all those who shall either secretly or openly set themselves against it. And this may be here added, either, 1. By way of prescription to rulers, whom, as before he admonished to be just and kind to their people, ver. 3, 4; so here he requires them to be severe in punishing and purging away weak and incorrigible men from about his throne, and from among his people. Or, 2. By way of caution; to show, that notwithstanding the holiness, and happiness, and sureness of this kingdom, yet there would be sons of Belial in it, who would endeavour to disturb and overthrow it, but to no purpose.

7 The staff of a spear; so the meaning is, he must fill his hand, or arm himself with some iron weapon, whereby he may cut them down; or, with the staff of a spear, or some such like thing, whereby he may thrust them away from himself, that they do him no hurt. Or thus, he will be filled, or will fill himself, i. e., his hand, wherewith he attempted to touch and take them, with thorns, as with iron and the staff of a spear; i. e., he will be as surely and sorely wounded, as if one should run the iron head and part of the wood of a spear into his hand. And they shall be utterly burned, or, therefore; because men cannot safely touch them, therefore they will burn them up. Or, i. e., if they do not cut them down with iron, or thrust them away with the staff of a spear, they will burn and consume them. In the same place, or, in their place, where they grow or stand; and they will not trouble nor hazard themselves to remove them. Withal, it may imply that they shall be destroyed when and where they thought themselves most secure, even in their own place. And it may possibly intimate, that those children of Belial, the wicked and unbelieving Jews, who rejected and rebelled against the Messiah, David's successor, and their lawful King, should be destroyed in their great, and strong, and holy city Jerusalem, where the greatest part of that people were gathered together as fuel for the fire, and were destroyed together by the Romans under Titus, where also their wicked predecessors had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar in former times.

Bp. Patrick.—These be the last words of David.] These were the last words that he spake by the Holy Ghost, as Abarbinel expounds them. The Chaldee paraphrase takes these words, as if they were a prophecy of the Messiah: for so it expounds them; "These are the words of the prophecy of David, which he prophesied of the consummation of all things, in the day of consolation, which is to come."

3 The God of Israel said.] By Nathan or by Samuel.

He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God.] Or, as we render it in the margin, "Be thou ruler over," &c., which the Chaldee expounds of the Messiah in this manner, "The faithful God spake (so he interprets the word Rock), I will constitute to me a king, he is the Messiah, who shall arise, and reign in the fear of the Lord." But this relates first to David, the type of Christ; who was taught to rule justly, and in the fear of God: that is, in the exact observance of all the Divine laws. Or, as Abarbinel interprets it, "When he that rules men is just, then the fear of the Lord will rule and have dominion in the earth;" for all the people are apt to tread in the steps of their king: so that when he that rules is just, it is as if he did not rule, but the fear of the Lord ruled in the earth.

4 He shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth.] The dominion of the just (as the same Abarbinel interprets it) shall be as the morning light, when the sun ariseth, and the light continually increases.

As the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain.] We have in this translation quite transposed the Hebrew words, where they run thus, "From splendour and from rain, grass out of the earth." The sense of which Abarbinel thinks is this, It shall be such a morning, in which there is sometimes sunshine, and sometimes showers of rain, to make grass spring out of the earth.

Although my house be not so with God.] Which he thus interprets; Although the kingdom of a just man, by little and little, grows and increases; and sometimes is clouded, and sometimes the light shines upon it: the kingdom of David shall not be so, but God hath made a perpetual covenant, &c.

For this is all my salvation.] Or, as he interprets it, This is all my salvation, and my desire, that he would not make it grow or shoot up (for that supposes it to be buried), but that, as was said before, it may always remain in an equal manner ordered and conserved.

It must be acknowledged, that there are no words so obscure in this book as these two verses. The sense of which Ludovicus De Dieu seems to me to have most clearly opened:—The stability and perpetuity of his kingdom, saith he, David amplifies by a comparison with three natural things, which are very grateful to men, but not constant and stable; in a settled order and sure. For the sun arises, but goes down again; and the morning may be clear, but clouds afterwards arise; and the tender grass springs up, but withers away. Not so, saith he, is my kingdom before God. It is flourishing, like all these, but perpetual: for he hath made an everlasting covenant with me; though some afflictions have befallen me; and he hath not made all my salvation and desire to grow. So he makes the first caph of similitude to stand for three; and to be repeated thrice in this manner:—

"The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake concerning me; The just man ruleth among men: he ruleth in the fear of God. And as the sun ariseth, with a shining light: as the morning is without clouds, by reason of its splendour; as from rain the tender grass springs out of the earth: yet (or truly) so is not my house with God. Because he hath made an everlasting covenant with me; disposed in all things, and well kept and preserved in that order. Although he doth not make all my salvation and desire to grow (that is, though some adversities happen to me and my family), yet that always remains, which, in the covenant of God made with me, is in all things orderly, disposed, and preserved."

6 The kingdom of impious men shall not be like the kingdom of the house of David: being so far from being like to grass, which is useful, that they are rather like thorns; which are rejected as hurtful and pernicious. That is, such wicked men are not fit for human society.

7 But the man that shall touch them must be fenced with iron and the staff of a spear.] If any body will meddle with them, it must be at his peril. For so the word jimmale (which we translate fenced) signifies "shall be filled," with the iron and the staff of a spear. Spears are never used to cut down thorns; but iron gives one a sore wound, like that which a man receives from a spear, when it runs into his body, iron and wood withal. So the same De Dieu very judiciously.

They shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.] Therefore men burn them with fire, in the same place where they grow: and so wicked men are destroyed, where they think themselves most secure. Which the Targum applies to the judgment of the great day, saying, "Their punishment is in the hand of man : but they shall be burnt up utterly, when the house of the great judgment appears : that they may sit on the throne of judgment to judge the world."

Ken.—We are now arrived at a part of Holy Scripture, which is of more than common importance : a part, which promises something very magnificent, but sadly disappoints (at present) our reasonable expectations. It is not in the power of words to form a more solemn and splendid introduction : and yet, when we have perused the whole song, whether the darkness be owing to errors in the present text, or mistakes in our version, or to both; the general subject, as well as most of the particulars, want much illustration.

The great point is, to fix and ascertain the subject : whether it be, the celebration of a good and righteous governor, in general ; or, in particular, that righteous and just one, the Messiah. In favour of this latter sense, new evidence has arisen from an investigation of the Heb. MSS. ; the oldest and best of which has preserved the word Jehovah, in one part of this hymn ; where, if the word be genuine, it solves the chief difficulty. As this word appeared to me from the first, and does still, to be of very great consequence ; I represented it in my "First Dissertation on the Hebrew Text," p. 468—471 [see below] : adding, that the old Greek version proves the ancient existence of the word in this place. With what success this discovery was made to the public, the reader will in part judge from the review of that Dissertation by the learned Professor Michaëlis, who says :—Ultima verba Davidis mendis laborare quibusdam, vix audemus dubitare : frustra in illis explicandis desudasse totum interpretum tanquam collegium intelligentes ; neque ipsi, sollicita verborum investigatione, adhibita etiam luce quam Arabia ac Syria præferre solet, aliquid satuti invenientes. Quicquid ex verbis eruas, hiat ; nec apparet, ad quem finem pertineat. Legimus et sicut lux matutina oriatur sol, sive, et circa tempus lucis matutinæ oriatur sol ; languente utraque sententia. Quod igitur verum, felix, rei que Christianæ faustum sit, codex Kennicottianus, omnium hucusque inspectorum antiquissimus, habet atque ut lux matutina oriatur Jehova sol—quod Dei nomen, nunc deletum, in nostro commate legebat interpres Græcus. Vaticinium ergo de Messia deprehendisse se credit Kennicottus ; dignum εὐρημα quod ei gratulemur, cupiamusque magis confirmari.

I therefore presume, that the subject of this sacred song, composed near the close of David's life, is the Messiah : and certainly no other subject was so worthy to employ the last poetry of the man after God's own heart. He labours to introduce it with an accumulation of all such expressions, as would command the greatest attention to what he was about to deliver, as he was king, and as he was prophet. That a good ruler, in the general, should be here treated of, seems impossible : not only from the introductory pomp and splendour, but also from the subsequent particulars being inapplicable to any king or ruler, but Messiah. The everlasting covenant, concerning this son of David, is expressly mentioned ; as well as the spiritual nature of his kingdom. All the particulars agree to the Messiah : and while some describe the fate of his enemies, others are descriptive of his own crucifixion ; all very similar in sense to what is foretold elsewhere. We read in Ps. xxii., they pierced my hands and my feet ; they parted my garments, and cast lots upon my vesture. And if David was thus circumstantial, in that Psalm ; why may he not have mentioned here the same or other circumstances, relative to the same event ? It is no just objection, that this song is not quoted in the New Testament ; for the New Testament does not quote the other words, they pierced my hands and my feet. And should it be objected further, that nothing of this interesting nature appears, at present, in these last words : I reply, that nothing clear appears at all ; not only no consistent plan, but not even common sense is to be made out of the words in our present version. If therefore, by the assistance of Heb. MSS., and a better English version, this passage shall be found to contain a consistent prophecy of the Messiah ; we cannot but be particularly struck with the mention made here of the iron and the spear. With spikes of iron was he to be filled ; as he was fastened to the cross by these, at the opposite extremities of his body, his hands and his feet : and with the spear was his side pierced. So that if, with the apostle, who at first doubted, we should at last see here the print of the nails, and the wound made by the spear ; let us, like that apostle, be no longer faithless, but believing.

In the present case I shall postpone, and reserve for a more critical appendix, the several notes which may be necessary, in support of the alterations here proposed: as I have before expressed my intention, in relation to other very difficult passages. And I shall now give such a correction of our common translation of these verses, as appears to me just and necessary.

New Translation of 2 Sam. xxiii. 1—7.

TITLE.

Now these are the last words of David.

PROEM.

The oracle of David, the son of Jesse;
Even the oracle of the man raised up on high:

The anointed of the God of Jacob;
And the composer of the psalms of Israel.

The spirit of JEHOVAH speaketh by me;
And his word is upon my tongue:
JEHOVAH, the God of Israel, sayeth;
To me speaketh the rock of Israel.

SONG.

THE JUST ONE ruleth among men!
He ruleth by the fear of God!

As the light of the morning, ariseth JEHOVAH;

A sun, without clouds, for brightness;
And as the grass from the earth, after rain.

Verily thus is my house with God;
For an everlasting covenant hath he made with me,
Ordered in all things and safely secured:
For he is all my salvation, and all my desire.

But the sons of Belial shall not flourish;
As a thorn rooted up, shall be all of them:
For they will not be taken kindly by the hand.

And the Man, who shall reprove them,
Shall be filled with iron, and a wooden spear:

But in the fire shall they be utterly burnt, with ignominy.

Kennicott's 1st Dissertation on the Hebrew Text.—2 Sam. xxiii. 4. This song of David's seems to contain a prophecy of the Messiah; and will, I presume, be certainly determined to that important sense, if a various reading in our oldest MS. No. 2 should appear to be genuine. It concerns that remarkable part, which expresses the light of the morning and the rising of the sun.

וכאור בקר יורה שמש

Et sicut lux matutina oriatur sol.

If we take these words literally, are they sense? Is not the sun the light of the morning; or, is not the morning light the only and certain effect of the sun rising? And can a thing be compared to itself, or the cause to its effect? The various reading, which (if true) not only frees us from this difficulty, but proves this passage to be prophetical, stands thus—

וכאור בקר יורה יהוה שמש

Et sicut lux matutina oriatur JEHOVAH sol.

This word ירה, Jehovah, is regularly writ in the MS., as here expressed; and, if the original reading, seems to have been omitted in other copies, on account of the similitude of the adjoining words ירה and ירה. This reading receives a strong confirmation from the Greek version; which it may be necessary to compare with the printed Heb. text,

וכאור בקר יורה שמש בקר לא

עבות מננה

LXX, Vat. copy, Kai en φωτι ΘΕΟΥ πρωιας ανατειλαι ηλιος το πρωι ου KYPIOS παρηλθεν εκ φεγγους, and the Alex., Kai en ΘΕΩ φωτι πρωιας ανατειλαι ο ηλιος το πρωι ου παρηλθεν εκ φεγγους. From which versions, however unintelligible at present in themselves, an argument arises in favour of the reading in this MS. For in the Vat. edition we have Θεος and Κυριος, and in the Alex. Θεος; words, which have nothing in the printed Heb. text to authorize or introduce them, and seem only to be accounted for by this MS. reading. According to which perhaps the Greek version stood originally thus, Kai en φωτι (reading וכאור) πρωιας ανατειλει ο Κυριος (in another copy Θεος) ο ηλιος, το πρωι ου παρηλθεν (reading עבר, which is generally rendered by παρερχομαι, instead of עבר or עבר נפילאי) εκ φεγγους. The true Greek version therefore seems to be, Kai ως φως πρωιας ανατειλει ο Κυριος ο ηλιος, πρωια ου νεφελαι (εν αυτη) εκ φεγγους. Transpositions of words are frequent in the present Greek version; which in some places is a jumble of two or three different renderings of the same word or words thrown together: which seems to have been the case here. For the words Θεος and Κυριος seem to be different renderings of the same word ירה or perhaps of that and אדום writ in some copies instead of it; and then both words have been transposed, both removed from their place after וַיִּשָּׂא, where this MS. and the context require the word Kypnos should be stationed: and indeed there the sense is excellently illustrated by its situation—

Et sicut lux matutina orietur Jehovah Sol.

It is impossible to read these words, without recollecting the allusion to them in Malachi, shall the Sun of Righteousness arise, &c., which words, in the original, farther confirm the reading in the MS. For in Malachi we have the same verb and the same noun, as in Samuel; but with a remarkable difference in their connexion. In Samuel the verb is masculine, but in Malachi feminine; and as the phrase seems copied by the latter from the former, one might have expected to find the same verb, when joined to the same noun, in the same exalted image, carefully expressed in the same form. Hence also it is probable, that the word וַיִּשָּׂא was originally in Samuel; as the verb there is masculine, because more immediately connected with וַיִּשָּׂא than with שָׁשׂ.

Sam. —Shall Jehovah, the Sun, arise—

Mal. —Shall the Sun of Righteousness arise—

Jer. —Jehovah, our Righteousness.

Isaiah lx. 1. Arise, shine, for thy light is come; and the glory of Jehovah is risen upon thee. 2 For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but (וַיִּשָּׂא) JEHOVAH SHALL ARISE upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. 3 And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. I leave the inference to the reader.

a) Literally, He that is sweet in the songs of Israel.—Israeliticorum carminum deliciae. Castalio.

b) Or, shall rule—and so in the line following.

c) בְּיָסוּד, MSS.

d) He, the Just One. I see no necessity for inserting Jehovah here, to be the nominative of the verb וַיִּשָּׂא. The ellipsis of the pronoun of the third person is frequent in all languages, when the subject of the verb cannot be mistaken, which is the case here, when the lines are properly divided.

e) Shining upon. שִׁנָּה, participle Hiphil of the verb שָׁנָה, after rain. The air is generally in the purest state after heavy showers in the spring, and the sun shines with heightened lustre. The verdure of the ground, literally, “the young herbage from the ground.” This mention of the herbage, or verdure, presents the idea of spring. What an assemblage of pleasing images! the dawn—sunrise—sunshine after rain—the vernal season.

f) Regular and guarded. שְׂמִינָה וּשְׂמִינָה. I take these words for forensic terms.

g) For וַיִּשָּׂא, I read, with Houbigant, וַיִּשָּׂא.

h) For God shall make him to grow. For וַיִּשָּׂא וְגִלְעָד, I read וַיִּשָּׂא וְגִלְעָד, taking וְגִלְעָד again interrogatively. Him to grow. Him, that is, the Just One, the subject of the third stanza, and the principal subject of the covenant here mentioned, who is perpetually spoken of in prophecy under the image of a growing plant or branch. See Jer. xxxiii. 15; xxiii. 5; Zach. iii. 8; vi. 12; Is. iv. 2. In these passages, and particularly in Jer. xxiii. 5, an allusion may well be supposed to this original prophecy of David.

i) The profane. Houbigant is mistaken when he says the word בליל is never used but when attached to some noun substantive, as אש, בן, רבר, &c. It is evidently used as a collective in Nahum ii. 1. As a collective, the plurals מלחם, יקדו, &c, are properly joined with it. The insertion therefore of the word בני is unnecessary. Neither the sense nor the syntax demand it: and it is without authority either of MSS. or versions. בליל, the profligate, the profane, the graceless, the reprobate.

k) The thorn to be extirpated. כקץ מר, Quasi spina evellenda.

l) For they will not be taken by the hand. They will not accept of the Redeemer's help.

m) And whoever—with iron and the wood of a spear. Dr. Kennicott very properly supposes an allusion to the iron spikes which fastened our Lord's body to the cross, and the spear which pierced his side. But as these sons of Belial persecuted not our Lord only, but others, the first preachers of Christianity who came unto them, as he had done, with words of friendly admonition and reproof, as before the times of the Gospel they persecuted the prophets who were sent to them upon the like merciful errand, I think the word אש is rather to be rendered by the indefinite pronoun, quis, or whoever, for which it often stands, than by The Man, as Dr. Kennicott renders it, understanding it specifically of Christ. Prophecy, I think, rather delights in very general expressions, with very particular allusions.

n) In the sabbath; i.e., in the end of all things: that final sabbatism of the people of God, of which the apostle speaks in Heb. iv. 9.

Dr. A. Clarke.—1 These be the last words of David.] I suppose the last poetical composition is here intended. He might have spoken many words after these in prose, but none in verse. Other meanings are given; this I prefer.

The words of this song contain a glorious prediction of the Messiah's kingdom and conquests, in highly poetic language.

3 The Rock of Israel.] The Fountain whence Israel was derived.

He that ruleth over men must be just.] More literally, מושל במשפט, He that ruleth in man is the just one; or, The just one is the ruler among men.

Ruling in the fear of God.] It is by God's fear that Jesus Christ rules the hearts of all his followers; and he who has not the fear of God before his eyes, can never be a Christian.

4 He shall be as the light of the morning.]

This verse is very obscure, for it does not appear from it who the person is of whom the prophet speaks. As the Messiah seems to be the whole subject of these last words of David, he is probably the person intended. One of Dr. Kennicott's MSS. supplies the word יהיה; and he therefore translates, As the light of the morning ariseth Jehovah (see above)—He shall be the Sun of righteousness, bringing salvation in his rays, and shining—illuminating the children of men, with increasing splendour, as long as the sun and moon endure.

As the tender grass.] The effects of this shining, and of the rays of his grace, shall be like the shining of the sun upon the young grass or corn, after a plentiful shower of rain.

5 Although my house be not so with God.] Instead of כן, so, read כן, established; and let the whole verse be considered as an interrogation, including a positive assertion; and the sense will be at once clear and consistent: "For is not my house (family) established with God; because he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all, and preserved? For this (He) is all my salvation, and all my desire, although he make it (or him) not to spring up." All is sure relative to my spiritual successor, though he do not as yet appear; the covenant is firm, and it will spring forth in due time.

6 But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns.] There is no word in the text for sons; it is simply Belial, the good-for-nothing man, and may here refer—first, to Saul, and secondly, to the enemies of our Lord.

As thorns thrust away.] A metaphor taken from hedging; the workman thrusts the thorns aside either with his bill or hand, protected by his impenetrable mitten or glove, till, getting a fair blow at the roots, he cuts them all down. The man is fenced with iron, and the handle of his bill is like the staff of a spear. This is a good representation of the dubbing-bill, with which they slash the thorn hedge on each side before they level the tops by the pruning shears. The handle is five or six feet long. This is a perfectly natural and intelligible image.

Ged.—

1 The following, also, though posterior, are the words of David.

“Thus, saith David, the son of Ishai; Saith the man, who was exalted to be The anointed of the God of Jacob: Who harmonized the psalmody of Israel.

2 The spirit of the Lord speaketh by me, And his word is on my tongue.

3 To me, the God of Israel hath said, The Rock of Israel hath promised; A just ruler over mankind; Who will rule in the fear of God.

4 Not like the grass of the earth (which, When the morning sun riseth clear and cloudless, Glistereth from the previous rain),

5 Shall be my house before God.

For with me he hath made a perpetual covenant, In every point regular, and sure. For every sort of welfare is mine; And mine every wish he hath accomplished.

6 Whereas lawless men, all of them, Are like briars, to be thrust out, (For with the hand they may not be taken,

7 But the man, who would meddle with them,

Must be provided with an axe and spear-shaft)

And to be burned, on the spot, with fire.

1 The following, &c. The common rendering is: These too are the last words of David. But that I think cannot be the meaning. They seem a supplement to the foregoing song, composed some time after.

Ib. Who harmonized the psalmody of Israel. Comp. ch. i. 18 and 1 Chron.

4 Not like the grass, &c. There is great beauty in this metaphor. That grass, which from the dews and showers of the night appears so glossy and glistering, at the rising of the sun, shall soon decay and wither before his meridian rays: but not so the house of David, &c.

6, 7, The parenthesis must be read as such; and the last line joined to the second.

Booth.—Now these, though later, are the words of David.

1 Thus saith David, the son of Jesse; The man who was highly exalted saith; The anointed of the God of Jacob; The pleasant Psalmist of Israel.

2 The spirit of Jehovah speaketh by me, And his word is on my tongue.

3 The God of Israel hath said to me; To me the Rock of Israel hath promised, A just ruler over mankind, Who will rule in the fear of God.

4 As the morning light when the sun ariseth;

A morning cloudless and resplendent; As the grass from the earth after rain;—

5 Is not my house thus with God?

For with me he hath made an everlasting covenant.

Wisely ordered in all points and sure.

Truly in this is all my salvation;

And mine every desire will he not accomplish?

6 But lawless men, all of them, Are like thorns, to be thrust away, (For they cannot be taken with the hand, 7 But the man who would cut them up, Must have an axe and a spear-shaft,) And to be burned, in the place, with fire.

3 A just ruler over.] These words contain the substance of what God had promised; and they cannot be applied with propriety to Solomon. For how could he be said to be a ruler over mankind? This is certainly the sense when נָסִיךְ is used absolutely, without any restrictive or qualifying term. The just ruler then must signify the future Messiah, who sprang from David, and whose kingdom was to be universal.

5 Is not my house.] This line is clearly the apodosis or application of the beautiful comparison in the preceding verse; and this naturally contributes great assistance in ascertaining its genuine sense: “As lovely as the morning, when the sun ariseth; a morning, not gloomy, threatening tempests and hurricanes, but cloudless and bright; as flourishing as grass from the earth after rain; so shall my house or family abide, splendid in rank and in honours; flourishing until he come, who is to be the just ruler over mankind; and when every other branch is cut off, flourishing for ever." Such I take to be the import of this passage. That ו is used as an interrogative particle see Nold. and Michaelis. Compare Isaiah xxxvi. 19, with 2 Kings xvii. 34. In the Syr. and Chald. this signification is common. —For with me.] This is the reason of his confidence and hope.

6 But lawless men.] Is there not here a reference, not only to the punishment of the wicked in general, but to the lawless, wicked Israelites, who, when the just king should come, would not submit to his law? The metaphor in this view has peculiar force and propriety. As thorns are cut up and burned with fire, in the place where they grew, so shall these sinners be cut off and consumed in their own land.

Houb.—1 Hæc autem sunt novissima verba David. Dicit David filius Isai: dicit vir, qui exortus est propter Messiam, Deum Jacob, quique egregia fecit cantica Israel: 2 Spiritus Domini per me locutus est, et sermo ejus mea in lingua fuit. 3 Deus Israel mihi locutus est; verba mihi fecit Petra Israel, qui præest homini justo, qui præest timenti Deum; 4 Quomodo lucente mane sol oritur, et mane est splendidum ac sine nubibus, quomodo post imbres humo nascitur herba virens. 5 Non ita erit de domo mea cum Deo, ut statuatur mecum fœdus sempiternum, perque omnia ratum fulurum et observandum; nam quancunque habui salutem, et quæcunque ejus beneficia in me extiterunt, hæc non amplius revirescent. 6 Sed filii Belial tanquam spina omnes evellentur; quam nemo manu apprehendit. 7 Sed quam si quis attingere parat, palmam ejus implet ferrum, aut hastile lancea, quæque ad extremum igne comburitur.

1 והנה דאס על משיח אלהי יעקב... Vir ille, qui exortus est propter Messiam Deum Jacob. Nam David propterea exortus est, ut adumbraret Messiam futurum; qui Messias dicitur Deus Jacob, ut pote is, in quem Jacob speravit, qui et ejus diem, quomodo et Abraham, vidit et gravior est. Licebat convertere, propter Messiam Dei Jacob. Sed cum Deus Jacob sit ille ipse Messias, nihil causæ erat, cur Deus a Messia distingueretur. ... ונעם ומרחם, quique egregia fecit cantica. Sic habendum נעם, tanquam מנעם Participium, quod respondeat alteri participio ורחם, regatque ומרחם in accusandi casu. Ita rem tractat Syrus, qui מנעם, suavia reddens; nam si נעם esset adjectivum, post legeretur vel ומרחם, vel במרחם, non sine præpositione antecedente.

3 אסר לי. דבר... locutus est mihi, dixit; adde alterum לי post דבר, ne casu personæ verbum דבר destituatur, postquam eo non privatur verbum אסר. Græci Intt. et Syrus adjungunt ad לי דבר: Sed דבר לי non est Hebraicum, cum contra passim legatur לי דבר. מושל יראת אלהים... dominans timorem Dei. Hoc parum intelligitur, quid sit dominans timorem. Et ex antecedentibus, ubi legitur, dominans in hominem justum, satis declaratur, alterum מושל, dominans, requirere subjectum, non timorem Dei, sed timentem Deum. Peccat in Grammaticam יראת, post מושל, sine ב præpositione, ut liquet ex membro priore, in quo legitur יראת. Itaque legendum מושל בראת האלהים, qui præest timenti Deum; ita Syrus, ושלם ברחם, qui dominatur in timentes.

4 וכאז, et sicut lux. Legendum כאז, sine ו, cum Vulgato et cum Syro. Nam sententia talis est; Deum dominari in hominem justum et in timentem Deum, similiter ut sol præest diei ac luci, et ut imbres terræ proventibus. Eam sententiam demonstrat verbum כסל, quod Gen. i. de sole usurpatur, diei dominante: Davide docente, quomodo non sine sole adveniente lux oritur, nec sine imbribus herba tellure generatur, ita non sine Deo Israel illabente mentibus humanis olimque in orbem venturo, esse posse in homine justitiam et Dei timorem. ... ממטר, ex pluvia, vel post pluviam. Nos, quomodo post imbres, addito quomodo, quia illud כו similitudinis, quod est in כאז, est ἀπὸ κοίτου, utroque in membro.

5 דאס בי. Lege דאס בי. voluntas erga me, vel beneficentia in me; nam ... quomodo Syrus, טרדני, cura de me. Omissum fuit בי prope כי ob similitudinem. Legi etiam potest דאס, quomodo antea ישע. Caput est, ne affixum primæ personæ post דאס omittatur, quoniam id non deest post ישע: nam sine affixo, nihil דאס significabit. Ait David non sic fore domum suam, ut fœdus cum ea sempiternum Deus faciat, quemadmodum fœdere Dei sempiterno sol redit ac lucet, et quomodo ex pluviis semper herba generatur; nam non fore ut salus sibi facta regerminet: quasi dicat: Hæc finem habebunt, et domus ea una perpetua erit, quæ erit ejus, qui dominatur in hominem justum. Quibus verbis David præcavet, ne quæ in Psalmo lxxxix. dixerat, et thronus ejus, ut sol, coram me, et similia in aliis Psalmis, Israelitæ de domo sua dicta esse credant, quæ quidam dixerat de altera domo David, seu Messiaæ, in sempiternum tempus mansura.

6 וְבִלֵּאל, Et Belial. Nusquam legitur בִּלְיָל, nisi alteri nomini substantivo subnixum, ut אִישׁ, vir, בֶּן, filius, &c. Nec dubium, quin sit legendum, וְבִנֵּי בִלְיָל, fili autem Belial. Nam id probatur ex verbis כֹּל et קָו, pluralibus, quæ verba de filiis (בְּנֵי) efferuntur. Significat David eos filios Belial, qui jugum Messiaæ olim detrectaturi sunt, quique olim, ut spina, futuri sunt intractabiles, posteaque igne comburendi.

7 נִשְׁכַּח: Græci Intt. ἀποχύνη αὐτῶν, confusionem eorum; legunt נִשְׁכַּח, ex radice נָכַח, qua ex scriptione assumendum affixum ם, ut legatur נִשְׁכַּחם, in quiescendo illos, i. e., cum eorum finis advenerit; quod nos vertimus, ad extremum.

Dathe.—Carmen Davidis, in quo spem suam testatur de adimplenda promissione sibi data futuræ perpetuitatis regni sui a).

1 Hæc quoque a Davide, sed posterius b) dicta sunt: Dicit David, filius Isæi, dicit vir in loco sublimi constitutus, unctus ex voluntate Dei Jacobitarum, suavis propter cantica Israëlitis usurpata. 2 Spiritus Jovæ per me est locutus, ejus verbum super lingua mea. 3 Promisit Deus Israëlitarum, mihi promisit immutabilis Israëlitarum Deus: Erit dominator in homines, c) justus erit dominator religionem Dei propagans. 4 Ut lux matutina oriente sole, ut tempore matutino non nubilo a splendore solis post fluviat herba ex terra progerminat. 5 sic domus mea futura est d) juvante Deo. Nam promissionem æternam mihi dedit, definitam in omnibus, servandam. Num igitur salutem meam et omne desiderium non promoveret? 6 Impii vero omnes e) erunt sicuti spinæ amovendæ, quæ manu prehendi non possunt. 7 Quas qui excindere vult, ferro aut hasta instructus accedit, tandemque f) igne comburuntur.

a) Mirentur fortasse nonnulli, me in vertenda hac pericopa lectionem textus presse secutum esse, et recentissimorum interpretum conjecturas, quibus difficultates remove annisi sunt, ei non substituisse. Sed quamquam non nego, structuram verborum per has emendationes tentatas fieri faciliorem, tamen fateor, me in hujus generis locis, quæ quidem difficilia sunt, sed tamen explanationem grammaticam admittunt, malle in hac acquiescere, quam ingenio indulgere. In scriptoribus quidem profanis viri artis criticæ peritissimi reprehendunt male sedulam curam corrigendi omnia, quæ duri quid aut insoliti habere videantur. Multo magis ab ea abstinendum putavi in hac pericopa, quæ, si quam habet in verborum constructione duritiem, eam ab ipso auctore fortasse traxerit, qui haud dubie jam ætate provecta hæc scripsit, qua solent homines concisius et abruptius nonnunquam cogitata eloqui.

b) Assentior interpretibus, qui putant, non probabile videri, Davidem hæc in extrema senectute, quæ 1 Reg. i. describitur, scripsisse. Sed וְיָדָע de re sequenti cum respectu ad antecedentem quoque dicitur, Exod. iv. 8. Igitur respicitur ad carmen præcedens, quo hoc fuit posterius.

c) Hæc verba summam continent illius promissionis. Quam non de Salomone intelligo, sed de Messia, Davidi promisso, quamcumque hic deo cognitionem habuerit. Nam Salomo non בָּרוּךְ dici potuisset, quoniam אִישׁ absolute positum totum genus humanum notat, non populum aliquem in specie, qui tamen h. l. esset intelligenda, nempe Israëlitis, cujus בָּרוּךְ Salomo fuit, non aliorum et multo minus omnium.

Expressi in versione sensum affirmativum, quoniam genio lingue convenientius videbatur. — Ultimum membrum hujus versus eodem modo explicio וְיָדָע וְיָדָע, in quo interrogationem retinui.

Maurer.—[וְיָדָע וְיָדָע] Fuerunt qui interpretarentur de ultimo Davidis carmine, quod sub finem vitæ composuerit. Sed recte monuit Dathius, וְיָדָע de re sequenti cum respectu ad antecedentem quoque dici Ex. iv. 8. Igitur respici ad carmen præcedens, quo hoc fuerit posterius. [וְיָדָע] qui supra, i. e., in loco sublimi constitutus est. [וְיָדָע] poetice tanquam adverbium, ut וְיָדָע, infra, Gen. xlix. 25, cf. וְיָדָע, ib. xxii. 13. dominator, dominator timens Deum. Sed non vehementer repugnabo, si verba כוֹשֵׁל non vehementer repugnabo, si verba כוֹשֵׁל 'וְרִי' quarto casu vertere malueris: dixit — promisit — justum in homines dominatorem cet. coll. Deut. vi. 3. 4 — Et prodibit ille quidem, ut lux matutina lucet, sol oritur, lux matutina non nubila; ut a splendore post pluviam herba ex terra progerminat. 1 notat et quidem ut Ps. lxviii. 10 al. G. Gr. min., p. 80. Comparandi particula וְ repetenda est, ut ante וְרִי et וְרִי, ita etiam ante כְּנָנָה, ubi illam in versione expressimus. Voc. וְרִי non est nomen subst. sed infinitivus, qui progrediente oratione transit in verbum fin. וְרִי. Verba וְרִי וְרִי propr. significant lux matutina, non sunt ei nubes = וְרִי וְרִי, lux matutina sine nubibus, ut 1 Chron. ii. 30: וְרִי וְרִי al. Ad postrema verba וְרִי וְרִי mente supplendum est verbum progerminandi, quod eo facilius potest suppleri, quoniam praecedens וְרִי non solum de ortu lucis adhibetur, sed etiam de plantis ex terra erumpentibus. Cf. voc. וְרִי al. In omnia alia abierunt Michaëlis, Dathius, et reliqui, quos quidem inspicere licuit, omnes. Michaëlis: "wenn der Morgen anbricht, wird die Sonne aufgehen, ein Morgen cet. quæ constructio nonnisi impeditum et hiulcum sensum fundere videtur. Dathius in eo potissimum peccavit, quod comma 4 cum 5 ita copulavit, ut illud protasin, hoc apodosin efficiat. Cui structuræ manifesto repugnat particula וְ ab initio vs. 5 posita. 5 — Nonne enim sic futura est domus mea cum Deo, i. e., juvante Deo? — nam fœdus sempiternum fecit mecum, definitum in omnibus, servandum; — omnem enim salutem meam et omne desiderium meum nonne promovebit? וְ primum ab init. et sub fin. membri quarti repetitum auget orationis gravitatem. Dathius וְ primum cum quarto positum vult pro וְ, quod hic ne sensum quidem præberet. Michaëlis verba וְרִי וְרִי maluit ab antecedd. dirimere et ad seqq. referre pro וְרִי וְרִי legens וְרִי וְרִי, impii non proveniunt. Cui interpretationi præter formam Hiph., quæ notat provenire facere obstat id, quod verba præcedentia וְרִי וְרִי eum sensum, quem dedit Mich., nempe hunc: ille (deus) solus est omnis mea salus et omne meum desiderium non ferunt; hoc enim esset וְרִי וְרִי vel certe וְרִי וְרִי. 6 — Impii vero omnes erunt sicuti spinæ ejiciendæ (וְרִי); nemo enim manu eas prehendit. וְרִי Nomin. abs. De וְרִי cf.

E. § 311. Verbum וְרִי impers. capitur. 7 — Qui voluerit tangere eas, implebitur, i. e., instruetur, se armabit ferro et hasta; igne comburentur in sede sua, i. e., in eo loco, ubi crescunt. Alii וְרִי deducunt a וְרִי, ut וְרִי sit in fine, tandem.

Au. Ver.—8 These be the names of the mighty men whom David had: The Tachmonite that sat in the seat, chief among the captains [or, Joshebbassebet the Tachmonite, head of the three]; the same was Adino the Eznite: he lift up his spear [see 1 Chron. xi. 11 and xxvii. 2] against eight hundred, whom he slew [Heb., slain] at one time.

Pool.—Whereas there are some differences between this list and that 1 Chron. xi., most of them are easily reconciled by these two considerations: 1 That nothing is more common than for one person to have divers names. 2. That as some of the worthies died, and others came in their steads; so this must needs cause some alteration in the later catalogue, 1 Chron. xi., from this, which was the former. The Tachmonite, or, Hachmonite, called Jashobeam, 1 Chronicles xi. 11, from his place; or, as here, Joshebbassebet, i. e., as we render it, that sat in the seat, i. e. was, under Joab, chief or president of the council of war, or lieutenant (locum tenens). The same was Adino: this was his proper name. The Eznite; so called, either from his family, or from the place of his birth or education. He lift up his spear; which words are fitly supplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 11, where they are expressed. Or thus, he was above eight hundred, i. e. he conquered them. So there is only an ellipsis of the verb substantive, which is most frequent. At one time; in one battle. Object. But this man is said to have slain only three hundred in 1 Chron.

xi. 11. Ans. 1. Possibly he slew eight hundred at one time, and three hundred at another: whereof the former is related here, as being most considerable; and the latter in the Book of Chronicles which supplies many passages omitted in the former writings. 2. He slew three hundred with his own hands; and the other five hundred, though killed by his men, are said to be slain by him, for he was the chief cause of all their deaths; for he, by his undaunted courage, killing three hundred, put the rest to flight, who were easily slain by his soldiers in the pursuit. 3. Some of the Hebrew writers affirm that these were two distinct persons, being called by differing names; the one the father, and the other the son, who succeeded his father, as in strength and valour, so also in his place of honour and trust.

Bp. Patrick.—There is a list of these mighty men in 1 Chron. xi. very different from this in several things. But Abarbinel thinks that it creates no difficulty, if we do but observe, that there he distinguishes them into three classes: those that had always been with him; and they that came to him to Ziklag, a little before he was made king of Judah; and they that came to him to Hebron, after he was made king of all Israel. All whose memories were fit to be preserved: but here, in this book, the Divine writer intended only to mention the most excellent heroes, who were always with him in his wars; and for whose sake he composed the precedent song of praises to God.

The Tachmonite that sat in the seat.] Or, as it is translated in the margin, “Josheboshebat the Tachmonite;” for so he is called in 1 Chron. xi. 11, Ishobeam; which may well be thought the same name abbreviated. He “sat in the seat” (as we translate it here) in the council of war; next to Joab: being, it is thought, his lieutenant-general. For that he was one of the Sanhedrin, who sat in the seat of judgment, as some would have it, is not probable: though it is likely these were men of great wisdom as well as valour: and this man being called a Chachmonite, Abarbinel thinks it was because he was a man of learning, being given to study as well as fighting; for in Hebrew the word chacham signifies a wise man: as this was no question in military affairs, if not in affairs of state, and other sorts of wisdom.

Chief among the captains.] The principal commander, as I said, under Joab. Who is not here mentioned, though he was a great man, inferior to none of these; but had stained himself by the base murder of two great persons, Abner and Amasa. Which some take to be the reason why he had not the honour to be put into the number of those worthies who served David.

The same was Adino the Ezrite.] It is thought he had two names, and was of the family of the Ezrites; though Abarbinel will have his name to have been Adino-haezri.

He lift up his spear.] These words are supplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 11.

Against eight hundred, whom he slew at one time.] In that place of the Chronicles it is said he killed three hundred: that is, after the slaughter he made in one battle of eight hundred; but killed in another (as Kimchi understands it) three hundred.

The catalogue of David's mighty men in Samuel coincides with the catalogue in Chronicles, at this 11th verse; and in this one verse (so contradictory in the two chapters, and so remarkably defective in that of Samuel) there are more difficulties than in almost all the other verses united. Here then it will be necessary to make several observations, and those of some considerable length; especially, as the right understanding this one place will lead us easily to the true sense of many others, which would be else extremely difficult.

1. That the words of this verse, and of the verses following in these two chapters, originally contained the same sense—no one can doubt who has at all considered them, or will at any time carefully compare them. And hence it will follow, that, however different a word, or words, or the manner of expression may be in some verses of these two chapters (as it evidently is in many) yet the sense must have been, and should be still the same in both places; and where the sense is not now uniform, but manifestly contradictory, one of the two places must have been corrupted.

2. The next observation, which is of great importance to the truth of the history before us (and seems necessary to be established antecedently to any farther inquiries) concerns the exact number, and the superior or inferior rank of these celebrated warriors.

As to the number, we are expressly assured in Samuel, ver. 39, that they were thirty and seven in all. But then, how to make out this number by a particular detail of the several worthies in their order, has been the subject of much disquisition, but does not appear to have been yet properly determined. In both Samuel and Chronicles we frequently have thirty of these thirty-seven mentioned together, as a fixt and well-known body of them, which were celebrated only by the general name of mighty men. See Sam. xiii. 23, 24; Chron. xv. 25. And in both chapters we have also frequent mention of the number three; and sufficient reason for concluding, that the remaining seven were divided into a double ternary, or two ranks different in dignity, and each rank containing three heroes: consequently there was yet one hero remaining to be accounted for. See Sam. ix. 17, 18, 19, 22, 23; and Chron. xii. 15, 20, 21, 24, 25. Now the most rational and certain method of investigating the truth of these positions, and discovering the difference of rank among these thirty-seven heroes, is, to see first who are properly the thirty, so frequently mentioned in a body, and celebrated only by the name of הנבירים, the mighty men.

Here then we shall find, that there are exactly thirty enumerated after Asahel, the brother of Joab, Sam. xxiv. And from the thirty upward we meet with six names, which are Jashobeam, Eleazar, Shammah, Abishai, Benaiah, and Asahel; to which in Chronicles is prefixed (as before observed), Joab the captain-general, who certainly is considered as the first and chief of David's mighty men.

Let us now see, how the notion of a division of the next six into a double series of three is supported by the history. And here (without rectifying at present some corrupted numbers on this subject) let us only observe, that in Chron. xx. it is said of Abishai, He was head of three, i. e. (as in the next verse, very remarkably)—Of the three he was more honourable than two, therefore he was their captain; but yet he attained not unto the three, i. e., not unto the three, which had been mentioned just before him; and were superior in honour, as they had been in merit.

Again, it is said of Benaiah, who was next under Abishai (and therefore the second of the second ternary), Sam. xxii; Chron. xxiv., these things did Benaiah, and had a name among three; and then, in the next words, he was more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not unto the three, i. e., the three generals mentioned before Abishai, and superior to Abishai and himself. Now as Abishai, Joab's brother, was at the head of three, and Benaiah next under him was one of three; there must follow a third man to complete this ternary: and the next man being Asahel, another brother of the captain-general, we must conclude (as there is no other mentioned) that he was the third general of the second series, especially as he was evidently not one of the body of thirty, there being thirty expressly named after him.

If then Abishai, Benaiah and Asahel constituted a second ternary of heroes, who were more honourable than the thirty and yet attained not unto the three mentioned before them; certainly there was a first order of three, superior in honour to this second three: which first order of three must be Jashobeam, Eleazar, and Shammah. The first is mentioned corruptly, but the second and third clearly and expressly in Samuel; whereas, in Chronicles the two first are mentioned clearly and expressly, and the third is omitted.

Thus then we have the whole thirty-seven mighty men enumerated, and ranked in their order—Joab the captain-general—a double series of three generals (the three most honourable next to Joab making the first series; and the more honourable than the thirty, but less honourable than the first three, making the second series) and then the body of thirty. But this arrangement of these several heroes will receive additional confirmation from a farther examination of these two chapters.

3. The next observation must be with regard to the name of the first general of the first series, mentioned in the verse now before us; the letters of which in Chronicles and Samuel are at present very different.

If we consult the form constantly observed through the remainder of the chapters, we shall find the first thing that occurs of either of the mighty men is his name, as we might naturally expect it should be; and, in general, first his proper name, and then his family or local name. This being the case, we might reasonably expect to find the proper name of this hero recorded in the beginning of his character in both places; especially as his family or local name is actually expressed in both. In Chronicles we have his proper name so expressed, and find it to be Jashobeam, יִשׁבֶּעַם; and that this was in fact his proper name is certain from 1 Chron. xxvii. 2—where we learn, that this mighty man was the first officer or captain of the body of 24,000 men, who, during the first month of the year, were in waiting upon the king—Over the first course, for the first month, was יִשׁבֶּעַם Jashobeam. After Jashobeam, who was over the first month, are mentioned Eleazar the son of Dodi for the second month, Benaiah for the third, Asahel for the fourth, &c. Men, whose names follow that of Jashobeam in the history now before us; and therefore prove—that Jashobeam, who is first before them there, is the same man with Jashobeam, who is first before them here.

But, instead of יִשׁבֶּעַם in Chronicles, we have in Samuel יִשְׁבָּשֶׁבֶת—two words, which have greatly perplexed the commentators, and yet seem not properly accounted for. As to those, who have been led away by the strange version of the Vulgate in this place, and have applied these words to David, ingeniously making David the first of his own mighty men; I suppose, nothing need be said to weaken their opinion: and indeed it is too absurd to be answered seriously.

There are others, who suppose the proper name of this general to be expressed either in the two words יִשְׁבָּשֶׁבֶת—or in the word יִשְׁבָּשֶׁבֶת—or in יִשְׁבָּשֶׁבֶת. But that Adino is not the proper name will easily be concluded from its situation in the middle of his character (contrary to the settled rule), and more especially from its being a corruption of a regular verb, as will be seen hereafter. To which it may be added—that no such man as Adino the Ezrite is mentioned anywhere else in Scripture; which he most probably would have been, had that been the true name of the person here meant: because we find the names of the inferior generals frequently mentioned in other places. That יִשְׁבָּשֶׁבֶת Tachmoni is not the proper name is plain, because it is the family or local name; as is evident from its termination and situation, and from a comparison with the more correct text in Chronicles. And that Jashob-bashebet is not the proper name, may be inferred, because it is not expressed as such in any ancient version—because it may be inferred from the confusion in all the versions, that the corruption (which is so great in the remainder of this verse) begins in these words—and because it is certain (from 1 Ch. xi. 11, compared with xxvii. 2) that the true name was Jashobeam; and therefore these two words must have been corrupted.

But do not the same men appear frequently in Scripture to have two names? If so, this general might be called both Jashobeam and Jashobbashebet. In answer to this it may be observed, first, that men have not two names in Scripture so frequently as is supposed; a variation of their name being certainly owing sometimes to a mistake of the transcriber. Besides, where a second name has been given, it has been generally more distinguished from the former than these two are from one another: as Jethro and Reuel, Solomon and Jedidiah, Simon and Peter, &c. And therefore, when we have two names, varying but little from each other, evidently belonging to the same person, we may reasonably suppose the one to have been accidentally varied from the other; and that they were not both original, unless we have an express authority given in the text for such small variation.

But that nothing of this kind appears here is certain; and that the following heroes have only one proper name is certain also. And therefore, as the proper name of this hero is given twice exactly the same, Jashobeam; and that in places where the text in the concomitant words is well preserved; we must conclude, that Jashob-bashebet, which differs from Jashobeam only in the end of the name, has been corrupted from Jashobeam, especially as the corrupted name only appears here, in a text which is greatly corrupted in other instances.

But lastly it may be objected, there is no necessity for supposing Jashob-bashebet to be the proper name of this mighty man; as it might be intended, in conjunction with the following words, to express the quality or dignity of the person spoken of. For thus Queen Elizabeth's version, 1599, He that sat in the seat of wisdom, being chief of the princes, was Adino of Ezri.

To this it may be answered first, that there is not mentioned through the whole Bible any such man, as Adino of Ezri; and that there will appear a necessity for admitting Adino Ezri to have been a corruption of two common words. So that Calmel might have spared the following improper observation on Jashobeam, in his Dictionary of the Bible:—"We cannot see, from whence they took Adino the Ezrite, which is entirely superfluous in this place." It is true, as containing a proper name, the words are superfluous; but it seems no difficult matter to discover from whence they came, as they are absolutely necessary to complete the sentence in the quality of common words.

In consequence then of this necessity, we are obliged to look out for some other proper name; and fortunately we have the concurrent testimony of two other texts (and one of them almost an exact copy of the present) to prove, that the mighty man here meant was Jashobeam. But there is an inaccuracy through the whole of this version in the words just cited. Chief of the princes is a wrong version of ראש השבטים, and he that sat in the seat of wisdom is rather more improper than the former; since שבת (when derived from ש and used substantively) signifies the act of sitting, and perhaps a seat or chair is never its proper signification. But, admitting that, the word חכמה never signifies wisdom; that being expressed by the regular noun חכמה. But, even admitting that both these words might so signify elsewhere, they could not here, as we should then have no proper name at all; and consequently one of David's generals would be recorded in a catalogue that was to do honour to his name, without any name to be so honoured: which is sufficiently absurd.

But though this version of Queen Elizabeth's is so defective in this place; yet, in the older English version of Coverdale before-mentioned, the words are here very remarkably translated, Jasabram the sonne of Rachmont, the chettest amonge thre.

If we consult the several editions of the LXX, they evidently help us in assigning this name of Jashobeam to this hero. The Alexandrian has Ιεσοβαμ and the Vat. Ιεσοσθε, in which words are preserved the three first letters שב, only the two last transposed; but the Complutensian has the three letters right Ιεσβαθ. And in Chronicles the LXX is almost as clear as the original; Alexandrian Ιεσαμ יסם (Chron. xxvii. 2, Ιεσοαμ יסם) Vat. Ιεσβαδα, Ald., Ιεσβαλ, Comp., Ιεσβαυ. To which may be added the testimony of Josephus, Πρωτος μεν ουν Ιεσσαυμος (שם) υιος Αχαμαν (הכמני) p. 401; Edit. Haverc.

Upon the whole, then, there seems to be an absolute necessity for admitting, that this proper name has been corrupted into Jashob-bashebet in Samuel from Jashobeam; as it now stands, and evidently has ever stood in Chronicles. And this (considering how many mutilations equally great, and indeed greater, must be allowed) will probably be admitted by all but such as are determined to maintain the absolute integrity of the present Hebrew text, in opposition to the clearest proofs of the contrary. And such a corruption would probably be admitted upon these several evidences; even though the variation of the latter part of the word could no otherwise be accounted for, than by the fallibility of the copyist, and the plain conviction that so the thing is, which is frequently all the satisfaction that can be obtained.

But here there seems a way of accounting for this mistake of the transcriber, by remarking that the word בשנ occurs in the line immediately preceding this proper name. And therefore it seems not irrational to suppose, that the transcriber, being to write ישבע, regularly writ the three first letters ישב; and then, instead of continuing the word, carelessly cast his eye upon the word בשנ in the line immediately above (which following a word that begins like ישב might the more easily mislead the eye) and transcribed it in here, instead of the remaining syllable of the proper word.

That the word בשנ is not a corruption of a patronymic in this place, is plain from 1 Chron. xxvii. 2; where we are told, that Jashobeam's father was זבדיאל, Zabdial, a word not at all similar. And therefore, as בשנ is so confined between ישב the three first letters of the true proper name, and החכמי the family or local name; there is no great room for indulging conjecture with regard to it, as there would be if it stood in a general sentence of common words: and the only probable account of it seems to be (as before observed) that it was carelessly transcribed in here from the line above.

That the supposition of such an accident as this may appear the more rational, besides the several preceding reasons, I shall now produce (from this same book, and but two chapters before) one clear instance of such a mistake or dislocation; which does not appear to have been considered as such, but has been given up by some, under the more general name of a corruption.

[See notes on xxi. 19, p. 645.]

The conclusion from hence is—that if אריים may have been, and most probably was, inserted from the line immediately under, בשנ most probably was inserted from the line immediately over what was then transcribing, thus—

ובאש שרוף ישרפו בשבת : אלה
שמות חגברים אשר לדוד ישב (בשבת)
.....

It may be here objected, that, in order to recommend the two preceding suppositions, the lines have been made to consist of such a particular length, as it is impossible for us to know they actually did consist of, at the time the mistakes here supposed were made. But it will certainly be allowed, that each line might be of the length here assigned it; and the insertion of each word, here supposed, is a strong argument that the lines were so. And perhaps the reader will be fully convinced of this, when it is observed, that, since assigning the number of words here given to each line, I have found a very extraordinary confirmation of this supposition in "Lewis's Hebrew Antiquities," book vii., chap. 13; which author, treating of the manner in which the ancient Jews transcribed the holy books, says, Thirdly—the length of the line was to be of thirty letters. Now this is most exactly the number of letters assigned to the first line of the last instance; and thirty-one is the number of letters assigned to the first line of the former.

Taking it for granted that enough has been said to prove, that the name of this mighty man must have been originally in Samuel Jashobeam, as we find it twice in Chronicles, and having also endeavoured to account for the corruption; it may be time to proceed from his proper name to the name of his family or country. And this may be easily ascertained, since it is nearly the same in both places; the one having החכמי and the other בן חכמי. The name here in Samuel was at first החכמי, the article ה at the beginning having been corrupted into a ח; for the word בן חכמי in Chronicles is regularly supplied in Samuel by that article. A parallel instance of this remarkably occurs in the very next verse; where האחיהי in Chronicles is בן אחיהי in Samuel.

This last instance will be one proof among a thousand, of the insertion or omission of the vau in the middle of a word, at the pleasure of the transcriber; as above, in החכמי and החכמי. It may also be remarked, that though Jashobeam is here said to be the son of Hachmoni, yet his father's name was Zabdial; and therefore the Hachmonite, or the son of Hachmoni, must have been the name of his family, tribe, or country (for it is impossible sometimes to distinguish one of these from another), just as the Ahohite, or the son of Ahohi, is the family or local name of the next hero—Eleazar the son of Dodi.

4. In the second observation the order of the thirty-seven mighty men was found to be, Joab, the captain general, a double series of three, and a body of thirty; the first series of three consisting of Jashobeam, Eleazar, and Shammah, and the second of Abishai, Benaiah, and Asahel. This then prepares the way to an easy solution of the next difficulty; which arises not only from the reading השליש, tertius, in Samuel and השלשים, triginta, in Chronicles, but from that variety of meanings put upon both words by different commentators. The truth is, both words are corrupted; and, instead of signifying either tertius or triginta, should be both השליש, tres; since we see Jashobeam was the head or captain of three, being the first of the first series of three.

That the termination of the similar words שליש, tres, שליש, tertius, and שלשים, triginta, is frequently exchanged by mistake, might be proved by many instances; two of which (at least) appear in other parts of this very chapter in Samuel. For שלשים, triginta and שליש, tertius in the 13th and 18th verses will be proved to have been originally שליש, tres, in Samuel, as they are now truly read in their corresponding verses in Chronicles. It may not be improper to consider here the necessity of thus correcting השליש in the 18th verse, as it will lead us the more easily to see the same necessity in this 8th verse.

Abishai then, who in the 18th verse is said to be השליש, the third head or captain, was not so in fact; for, being the first captain of the second series, he must have been the fifth captain, Joab and the three captains of the first series being before him. The reading then must have been at first in the text, as it is still in the margin השליש, tres, since that and that only is true; for we see that Abishai was properly head of three, being the first captain of the second ternary. Thus in the Bomberg edition of the Hebrew Bible (1517) we have השליש in the margin; and in the Complutensian edition of 1515 (the oldest printed copy extant) השליש is read in the text itself, without any various reading in the margin. These arguments, added to that drawn from the same passage in Chronicles, where this very word השליש is read in the text universally, must be allowed fully sufficient to prove it should have been also השליש in Samuel. And as such it is remarkably rendered in Coverdale's English version before-mentioned, Abisai the brother of Joab the sonne of Zerū Ja was one also chefe amonge thre.

If then this word השליש is certainly a corruption from השליש in the 18th verse, it will be obvious to infer, that the same may have been the case in this 8th verse. And indeed it must have been the case: since Jashobeam was not more the third captain than Abishai; but as Abishai was the fifth, Jashobeam was the second; he being the first captain of the first series, and inferior only to Joab the captain-general. But though Jashobeam was not the third captain, he was head of three; and therefore the true reading here also must have been השליש, tres, agreeably to which the Vulgate renders this word tres, and the Complutensian copy of the LXX very justly reads here, πρωτος των τριων; and also Theodotion, πρωτος των Γ ουτος.

This alteration being admitted, it will of course follow, that one mistake has also been made in this verse in Chronicles, which has been faithfully preserved in every other word; and that is in השלשים. That this word has been mistaken for השליש is demonstrable from the 13th verse in Sam.; and that the same must have been the case in Chronicles, is also certain from what has been already established as to this verse in Samuel. But this point is farther confirmed by reflecting, that Jashobeam was not truly head or captain of the thirty; because the thirty were not more under him, than under any other general of the two series; but were less under him, than under Joab, who was the head or prince over the whole thirty-seven. The clearness therefore of the history in this point will oblige us to allow a mistake of השלשים, thirty, in Chronicles for השליש, three; which mistake will be proved to have obtained elsewhere in this very chapter, and must be allowed to have obtained here also for the sake of truth, and to make a proper harmony with the passage in Samuel.

It may just be remarked that the mistake of a ה for a כ is not uncommon; the son and successor of Rehoboam is called, in 1 Kings xiv. 31, אבiam, Abiam; but in 2 Chron. xii. 16, אבiah, Abiah, a corruption, which is frequently repeated in the history of that king. And the cause of so easily mistaking these two letters ה and כ (as well as of others, which differ chiefly in their being open or closed at bottom) probably was, that the blackness of the line, which was ruled to direct the pen, sometimes appeared like the transverse bottom-stroke of a letter: for the best Jewish manuscripts were ruled before writing, as appears from Lewis's Hebrew Antiquities, book vii., chap. 23.

5. The next difficulty in the corrupted text in Samuel lies in fixing the true reading of הוא עירי העצני.

Among the many different versions of these words, the English is—The same was Adino the Eznite. But that Jashobeam the Hachmonite should be the same with Adino the Eznite, is not only highly improbable, but evidently impossible. Besides; if these words should be thus rendered, or in any manner like it, there would be in the sense such an hiatus, as no ellipsis can excuse—Jashobeam the Hachmonite, the same was Adino the Eznite against 800, whom he slew at one time.

As these words then cannot be proper names, or a proper and local name, they must be a corruption of common words; and of such words, as complete the sense of this, and answer to the sense of the other passage. I only say—answer to the sense, because it is impossible to bring one of the words to resemble its corresponding word in letters, on account of their absolute dissimilitude. Nor is there any necessity for endeavouring it; since a verbal sameness is not observed in every other part of these two chapters, instances to the contrary being very numerous.

The first of these three words is הוא, which is the same in both passages. The second, being somewhat alike in both as to form, though different in some letters; and being only writ properly in the first passage, the word there must be the standard and correct the last. That it is truly writ in Chronicles is plain, because it makes a regular sense in the original, and is uniformly translated; and indeed is the very word, which would have been expected in that place, as it occurs in several other places in company with the same words as here.

How unlike soever the words עירי and עירי may appear at first sight, it must be considered, that they consist of letters which have been frequently mistaken for each other elsewhere, and therefore they may have been so here. (And we should constantly remember—that the similar letters were much less distinguishable formerly when expressed in manuscripts, than they are at present when printed from types prepared with great exactness and a just distinction), * * &c., &c.

VOL. II.

These several letters then being frequently changed, let us suppose these alterations here, and the word עירי will be עירי; which is very near עיר, and doubtless was carelessly writ instead of it, as it must have been עיר originally here, as well as in Chronicles. For that this word must have been a verb of the same sense with עיר is plain from the substantive that follows it; which at present is less understood (if possible) than עירי with all its corruption. I shall only add here—that this will not be considered as taking improper liberty, or assuming a license for supposition, by any who have carefully attended to the much greater corruptions that frequently occur, and consequently to the greater liberties that must be taken elsewhere: and in this very chapter we have mistakes much less probable than that just mentioned, such as אשר (Sam. xxi.) instead of איש, &c., &c.

Le Clerc observes, Quid sibi velint עירי העצני, nemo dixerit; and adds, Hic deformantur verba in Paralipomen, seu male descripta fuerint, seu fugientibus literis satis commode legi non potuerint. But though he pronounces both these words inexplicable, and will have them to have been both greatly mistaken; yet we need desire this to be admitted only as to the first word: for the second will probably be found to require no change at all, the true reading עירי being retained in all the best copies.

The word עירי having the pronoun suffixed at the end and the article prefixed at the beginning (as it sometimes is prefixed—see among other instances העירי, Lev. xxvii. 23), answers exactly in form and force to אשר in the correct passage. It will therefore be allowed, that עירי was, and consequently is, a true Hebrew noun; when it appears, that it is a noun in the Arabic language just in the same sense with העירי. That this is the case may be proved from the concurrent authorities of Castell, Schindler, Golius, and Giggeius. Castell gives the word עירי, as not occurring in the Hebrew Bible; but after the word עירי sets down the Arabic verb عَصَرَ attraxit ramum, the regular noun from which عَصْر (עירי) he renders thyrsus. Schindler also gives us עירי, and says—Arab. cum punctato עירי ramavit, et inde עירי ramus. In Golius we have عَصَا percussit baculo vel gladio, vicit pug-nans, &c., under which verb is the noun עס (sounded עץ), baculus. And with Golius, Schindler, and Castell agrees Giggeius; who, in his Thesaurus, gives us العصا, baculus, hostile; and الغصن, ramus, thyrsus. To these several authorities may be added that of St. Jerom, who in the Vulg. has rendered the word by lignum; which, being nearly the same in sense with the thyrsus, ramus, baculus, and hostile of the Arabians, is a strong argument that עץ was an Hebrew noun so signifying, though (like many other words) it may occur but once in the Bible.

If then העצני signifies thyrsus suum, hostile suum, or hastam suam, as חרבו does; it will follow that עץ has certainly been corrupted from עור as before observed. For the verb in Samuel, governing also the noun hostile or hastam, must signify elevavit as well as the verb in Chronicles; but there is no other verb of that signification that has any resemblance of letters. Wherefore, as the word עור preceding is the same in both passages, and the first letter of the next word in both is the remarkable letter ע; we must infer that the remainder of the word in Samuel has been corrupted from the remainder of the word in Chronicles.

It may also be observed, that the word עץ is frequently used in conjunction with חרבו, as in this very chapter of Samuel, ver. 8, עץ וחרבו, ἔσλον δοράτος, LXX; so 2 Sam. xxi. 19; and 1 Sam. xvii. 7; in which last place it is corrupted into עץ. If then עץ be frequently used for the staff of a spear, and is joined here and in many other places with חרבו; we may reasonably suppose, that there was also such an Hebrew word as עץ signifying a spear; especially as we find it so in the Arabic language.

Or lastly (which is a solution that may be more agreeable to some), it may easily be conceived, that in a corrupt place (as this confessedly is) the ך might be inserted by mistake (as it is evidently in Prov. xv. 14) so that the word would be then העצך; and had we found it so, we should naturally have acquiesced in the reading, and said, the word עץ, which was frequently used for the staff of a spear, was used here for the spear itself, &c.

I shall only add, with regard to the word עור, that in the 18th verse of this same chapter we read of Abishai אבישאי עור, which words are exactly the same in 1 Chron.

xi. 20. These two instances then, so extremely pertinent, added to that third correct instance in the corresponding place of ver. 11, are certainly sufficient to show the necessity of reading עור in 2 Sam. xxiii. 8; instead of a word at present unintelligible, begun with the same remarkable letter as the regular word, and carried on in letters that are very easily mistaken for each other, and are confessedly so mistaken in other places.

6. The difficulty next occurring is in the number עסנה מאה, eight hundred, since the correct passage reads שלש מאה, three hundred. This we may account for by supposing, that as the Jews, in transcribing the Bible as well as in their own writings, frequently expressed the numbers by single letters; so, the letter ש which is 300, being the first letter both of עסנה and שלש, might (upon reducing that numeral letter back into its word at length) for want of attention be writ עסנה in Samuel instead of שלש as in Chronicles.

That the transcribers of the Bible, in the several translations, have sometimes expressed the numbers by single letters, is evident from Coverdale's translation of the 11th verse of this chapter of Chronicles, smote thre & at one tyme; and from Theodotion's version of the 8th verse of this chapter of Samuel, where we read, πρωτος των Γ ουτος. And that the Jewish transcribers did frequently express the Bible numbers, in the original, by single letters is well known to the learned.

Thus in Walton's Prolegom. de Textuum Orig. Integr., p. 42, we read, Ipse etiam Scaliger sic scribit—litteris numeralibus, non verbis, antiquitus numeri concipiebantur. And in the Hebrew Grammar printed with the Complutensian Bible, so long since as 1515, we are told, Hebræi per litteras alphabeti per ordinem numeros scribunt. Sunt, qui 500 et deinceps per quinque litteras finales designarent; sed hæc ratio numeros designandi non ab omnibus recipitur, sed per litteras alphabeti compositas id faciunt, ut 500 per חק, i. e., 400 et 100.

This then being the case, there seems no doubt, but many of the numbers, which now appear almost incredible in some places and contradictory in others (as in the place now before us), are owing to mistakes in some of the similar letters. One or two material mistakes of this kind, rationally accounted for, will sufficiently confirm this point, and it is a point of no small importance.

The first instance shall be the remarkable contradiction between 2 Kings viii. 26, and 2 Chron. xxii. 2; which has so much perplexed the commentators, that Walton (Prolegom., p. 36) puts it among the quædam anopa [see notes on 2 Chron. xxii. 2].

Another very remarkable example of this kind occurs in the 3d chapter of the Book of Numbers. We read in ver. 11th, And these were the sons of Levi; Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.—22 The Gershonites were 7,500.—28 The Kohathites, 8,600.—34 The Merarites, 6,200.—39 All the Levites were 22,000. But the sum total of the preceding numbers, instead of being really 22,000, will be found to be 22,300, &c. [see notes on Numb. iii. 22, vol. i., p. 514].

The Hebrew numbers having therefore been certainly expressed formerly by letters, this is a sufficient vindication of the preceding solution of the difficulty as to the 800 and 300 men. And how easy a mistake of 500 might be in our way of expressing numbers, will immediately appear upon setting down the very same numbers 800 and 300. But that the number in Samuel was originally 300, as well as in Chronicles, will be farther evident from an argument that falls more properly under the next article.

7 The word ל is read the same in both passages, and properly. For though it carries with it a difficulty at first sight, as being singular; yet there are many instances where a numeral, or a conjunction of numerals, expressive of very many, take after them and agree with a noun that is singular. One example of this we find in Gen. v. 4, And the days of Adam, after he begat Seth, were 800 year (not years) שְׁמֹנֶה עָשָׂר שָׁנָה, just as we say, 800 year, and 800 pound; not years, and pounds. Another example may be 1 Sam. ix. 22, וְשָׁלִשִׁים אִישׁ, about thirty man. The regularity of this singular noun being admitted, the next consideration must be, the true meaning of it.

Here the versions are widely different; and the general run of them make strange work, by rendering ל, occisus or vulneratus. For, according to this rendering, Jashobeam obtained his pre-eminence by bravely lifting up his spear against 300 men, after they were dead, or at least, after they were wounded. Thus we have the word rendered here in a MS. English version of 1408, he reised his Spate. (Spere) on the hundred wounded men in one time. Indeed our present English version in Samuel renders ל, whom he slew, but such a version seems not to be defensible; and so the authors of it thought by putting the word slain in the margin, and by translating it in Chronicles against 300 men slain.

The reasons against rendering ל, whom he slew, are, first, that there being then no noun after the numeral, the sentence would be incomplete, he lift up his spear against 300 whom he slew at one time. And secondly, because of the almost incredible nature of the action, a man's killing 300 men with his own single spear, which incredibility is removed by considering ל as a noun of the signification assigned it in the following observations. Were not these reasons strongly against it, ל might be admitted as a verb, with its signification of occidit; and we might suppose the pronoun אשר understood before the verb here, as in other places. Thus Exod. iv. 13, שָׁלַח אֶת יָדִי בְךָ, mitte, quæso, per manum (quam, vel illius quem) mittes; and Exod. xv. 13, בָּרַחְתָּ עַם יִשְׂרָאֵל בְּרַחֲמֶיךָ, duxisti in misericordia tua populum hunc (quem) redemisti.

But the true sense of the word ל in this place seems to have been preserved only in the Vatican edition of the LXX in Samuel, where it is rendered ΣΤΡΑΤΙΩΤΑΣ [against this meaning of ל see note of Gesen. on 2 Sam. i. 19, p. 491]. For however some lexicographers may refuse the active sense of occidens or vulnerare to the verb ל in Kal, yet they all allow it in Pihel; but these two conjugations are the same in the preter tenses without points; and indeed this active sense is allowed the word here according to the common interpretation—whom he slew. Castell informs us, that this verb in Arabic حل signifies descendit, castrametatus fuit, grassatus fuit, protexit, &c. This idea of the verb is farther deducible from the nouns derived from it; and thus the following nouns of this verb are rendered by Giggeius, in his Thesaurus — المحل and المحلة statio, castra — المحلة telum, missile — and الجلال vir validus et audax; which latter remarkable signification is confirmed by Castell, and greatly recommends the Vat. version of ל by ΣΤΡΑΤΙΩΤΗΣ. This verb then having the ideas of fighting, warring, and wounding so evidently annexed to it; and the Arabic noun from its verb signifying vir validus et audax; the Hebrew noun from its verb will regularly answer to Στρατιώτης, or miles. This then being sometimes the sense of this noun, we may conclude it to be the proper translation of it in this place; so that Jashobeam lifted up his spear against three hundred fighting men (or, three hundred soldiers) at one time.

But it may be said, if soldiers had been here meant, why was not the Hebrew noun for soldiers here made use of? The answer is, that if הַלָּלִים be not that Hebrew noun, there seems to be no other for it in the Bible. In 2 Chron. xxv. 13, the two words which we translate by the term soldiers are בְּנֵי הַדָּוָד, the sons of a troop; and what we term fighting men, 1 Kings xii. 21, are מַלְחָמִים לַיָּהּ literally those that do the war. The noun הַלָּלִים then, coming from a verb, whose sense in Hebrew is vulneravit, occidit, and which in Arabic has the military ideas which are always affixed to Στρατιώτης, or a soldier, must be properly expressed by that word; especially as there is no other word for it in the Hebrew language.

But this is too material a point to be passed over, without some farther observations; since many of the places, where this noun occurs, seem to have been misunderstood by every interpreter, for want of considering it in the sense here contended for. Such an assertion as this will require some proofs to support it; and probably the several texts here subjoined will be fully satisfactory.

We may previously remember, that the sense given at present to the noun הַלָּלִים is the passive sense of interfectus or vulneratus; which it is still allowed to have, where the context requires it: but that the following texts are produced as requiring the active sense of interficiens or vulnerans, or rather miles, and that the including this latter sense, where necessary, does no more exclude the former, when necessary in other places, than the participle מַלְחָמִים, confodiens, in Ezek. xxix. 9, prevents מַלְחָמִים from being confossus in Ezek. xxxii. 26.

The first instance may be Judges xx. 31, where הַלָּלִים occurs in the following manner, וַיָּדָל לַחֲנוּךְ מֵהָעָם חֲלָלִים בָּעָם בְּמִלְחָמָה בְּשָׁלִשִׁים, איש בשרו, which words are rendered by the LXX, Καὶ ἤρξαντο τυπτεῖν ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ τραυματίας καθὼς ἀπαξ καὶ ἀπαξ ἐν ταῖς ὁδοῖς—ὡς ἐν τριακοντα ἀνδρας ἐν τῷ Ἰσραὴλ. Now it seems evident, that neither the sense of occisus nor that of vulneratus can take place here, if we consider the context. The Israelites were assembled to attack the Benjamites at Gibeah the third time, and the sons of Benjamin went forth to meet the people, and were drawn off from the city—then follow the words here cited; and what propriety can there be in rendering them, and they began to smite of the people the wounded or slain? Can we suppose any of the Israelites (who now advanced to attack the Benjamites) to be slain or wounded, before the battle begun? And yet we seem obliged to suppose thus much, if the word הַלָּלִים be taken here in the sense usually contended for. Thus the Chaldee version is here rendered, Et cæperunt ad occidendum ex populo occisos; and thus the LXX, by rendering the original words, ἤρξαντο τυπτεῖν ἐκ τοῦ λαοῦ τραυματίας. The Vulgate endeavours to make sense here, by the insertion of three verbs, neither of which are in the original. And our English translators, who were sensible how improper the word slain or wounded would be in this place, have inserted one verb by rendering הַלָּלִים, and kill.

But this is endeavouring to make good sense in English at the expense of the original language, which (every one must see) will not admit such a translation; and it must be observed, that the English translators, being sensible also of the impropriety of this version, have rendered the words in the margin, To smite of the people wounded. But this and every other impropriety will perhaps be removed by translating the word הַלָּלִים, milites; for the sentence will be then, Et milites cæperunt percutere (or, et cæperunt percutere milites) ex populo, sicut primo die et secundo, in stratis—quasi triginta viros in Israele. And that this is the proper version of the word in this place seems to be farther evident from the 39th verse; where we read וַיָּדָל לַחֲנוּךְ מֵהָעָם חֲלָלִים בְּשָׁלִשִׁים, איש ישראל נשלים, Et Benjamin percute cæpit milites, inter viros Israelis, quasi triginta viros.

The next instance may be taken from Psalm lxxxix. 11, אֲדָר וְכֶסֶף כָּל דָּבָר בְּיוֹדֶךָ שׁוֹרָה אֵינֶךָ. The better to illustrate these words, it must be observed, that in the Book of Psalms and Proverbs each verse consists generally of two parts called hemisticks; one of which is exegetical of the other, either by expressing the same sense in different words, or explaining one assertion by its opposite or contrary. Let us now see how this rule has been observed as to this verse; which is evidently of that kind, which expresses in its two parts the same sense in different words.

The LXX read, Συ εταπεινώσας, ως τραυματίαν υπερήφανον· εν τῷ βραχίονι τῆς δυνάμεως σου διεσκορπίσας τοὺς ἐχθροὺς σου. And I believe all the other versions render the word כָּחַל here either tanquam vulneratus or tanquam occisus. But probably neither of these senses will be thought very applicable, when we reflect that רַחַב, Rahab, here is a name for Egypt or the Egyptians; and that the Psalmist in this verse alludes to the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea. For, is there propriety in saying, that God destroyed the Egyptians like dead men, or like wounded men? Were not the Egyptians destroyed? Did they not perish? Did not Pharaoh and all his host die in the Red Sea? And can their destruction by death be compared to itself? Can it be said with any dignity, that men slain were destroyed like men slain? Or lastly, as these Egyptians were thus totally destroyed, can it be said, that they were destroyed like wounded men?—which certainly is to compare great things with small, with a peculiar impropriety. Our common English version is, Thou hast subdued Egypt, AND DESTROYED IT; thou hast scattered thine enemies abroad with thy mighty arm. But the last translators, seeing the absolute unlawfulness of translating כָּחַל, and destroyed it; have rendered the verse, Thou hast broken Rahab in pieces, AS ONE THAT IS SLAIN; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm.

Without any more previous observations then, let us now see how this verse will be expressed, with the signification of כָּחַל at present contended for, Tu, tanquam miles, confregisti Ægyptum; in brachio roboris tui dispersisti inimicos tuos. It is impossible not to observe, how exactly the hemisticks now answer to each other; since every expression in one has its corresponding expression in the other, Tu, tanquam miles, in brachio roboris tui—confregisti, dispersisti—Ægyptum, inimicos tuos.

Tu, tanquam miles, confregisti Ægyptum;

In brachio roboris tui, dispersisti inimicos tuos.

For the more successful recommendation of this translation, let us subjoin the former—

Tu confregisti, quasi occisum (vulneratum) Ægyptum;

In brachio roboris tui, dispersisti inimicos tuos.

But the translation here proposed will receive additional confirmation from observing, not only, that the Lord mighty in battle, the Lord strong and mighty, &c., are frequent appellations in the books of Scripture; but that, as this part of the Psalm evidently alludes to the destruction of the Egyptians in the Red Sea, so the images and ideas in this verse are evidently taken from the sublime ode, which was sung after that wonderful event. For we read in Exod. xv. 3, The Lord is a man of war (tu tanquam miles). 6 Thy right hand, O Lord, is become glorious in power; thy right hand, O Lord, hath dashed in pieces the enemy—Tu, tanquam miles, confregisti Ægyptum; in brachio roboris tui, dispersisti inimicos tuos.

Thus again we read, of the strange woman, or harlot, in Prov. vii. 26, כִּי רַחֵם וְהָיָה לָהּ וְהָיָה לָהּ וְהָיָה לָהּ, which words the LXX have translated, Πολλοὺς γὰρ τρωσάσα καταβέβηκε, καὶ ἀναριθμητοὶ εἰσὼν οὖς πεφόβευκε. The learned reader will readily observe that τρωσάσα can no more be the true version of וְהָיָה here, than עַצְמִים can be interpreted by ἀναριθμητοὶ, which it never is but in this place; and here Symm. and Theod. render it ἰσχυροί, as the sentence requires it should be. Since the noun, which is expressive of multitude in the second hemistick, and answers to רַחֵם, multos, in the first, is certainly כֹּל, omnes, or plurimos, which in this version of the LXX is entirely omitted.

The Arabic version, following the LXX, reads, Quoniam sauciavit multos et deprædata est eos; neque recensetur numerus illorum, quos enecavit. The Syriac has, Quia copiam occisorum prostravit, et fortissimi sunt omnes quos necavit. The Chaldee Paraphrase, Quoniam multos interfectos dejecit, et fortes sunt omnes interfecti ejus. And the Vulgate, Multos enim vulneratos dejecit, et fortissimi quique interfecti sunt ab ea. This last sense has been followed by our English translators thus, For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her. But is the correspondency of the two hemisticks, which very perfectly obtains in the original of this verse, at all illustrated by any of these versions? I leave the determination to the learned reader; and shall observe, that the translation of this verse by the very learned Albert Schultens is, Nam multos ad lanienam profectos (profanatos) cadere fecit, et numerosi omnes trucidati ejus. We learn from hence, that as this celebrated professor of the oriental languages was not pleased with the common translations of הָאֵלִים, vulneratos or occisos, by rendering it ad lanienam profectos; so neither was he pleased with that version of his own (as we may easily suppose he could not) and therefore we see he has rendered it by profanatos in a parenthesis.

From all this uncommon fluctuation then in the best expositors we may be led to suspect some general mistake; and perhaps it will appear to have been, in the sense of the word הָאֵלִים. For if we here again render this word milites, we shall find every part of the hemisticks perfectly to correspond; thus, multos agrees with omnes or plurimos, milites with fortes or fortissimi, dejecit with interfecit or interfecti sunt ab ea:

Multos enim milites cadere fecit;

Et fortissimi quique ab ea interfecti sunt.

In Jeremiah li. we seem to have several instances, where this word should be rendered as before. In verse 4 we read וַיָּהָרְגוּ אֶת הָאֵלִים, which words have been usually rendered, et cadent interfecti. But, as the verb הָרַג signifies to fall mortally, or to be slain in battle (Josh. viii. 24, 25; Judg. viii. 10; xii. 6; xx. 44, 46), the question is, whether cadent (interficiuntur) interfecti is not an improper expression. Or rather, as the words immediately preceding are וַיִּמָּחוּ אֶת הָעָרִים וְאֶת הַבָּיִת, penitus delete omnem ejus exercitum, the question may be, whether nam cadent milites be not a much more significant and proper version than et cadent interfecti; when the substantive last preceding was the singular noun exercitus or militia.

But let us take the context with it. The prophet here foretells the fall of Babylon; and in the conclusion of the 3d verse we read, וְאֵל הַחֲמֹל אֶת בְּרוּיָהּ הָרָחוֹק לֹא צָרָהּ, Et ne parcat super juvenibus ejus, penitus delete omnem ejus exercitum. Then follows the 4th verse, וַיִּהְיֶה הָאֵלִים בְּצִוְיָהּ כְּשֶׁרִים וּמִדָּקִים בְּרוּיָהּ, Nam cadent milites in Chaldeorum terra, et transigentes gladio (cadent) in plateis ejus. That the word הָאֵלִים should be here rendered milites, seems farther deducible from the 30th verse of the preceding chapter; which verse, treating of the very same destruction with the verse before us, has these words, יִשְׁלַח בְּרוּיָהּ בְּחִזְקָהּ וְכָל אֲנָשִׁי מִלְחָמָה יִדְמוּ בְּיוֹם הַהוּא, Cadent juvenes ejus in plateis ejus, et omnes viri belli ejus succidentur in illo die. Here we see that in two texts prophetically declaring the same circumstances of the same destruction, we have juvenes in one expressed by the same word for juvenes in the other; and then the word הָאֵלִים, which is here rendered milites in one, expressed by virii belli in the other.

But, let us proceed to the other instances in this same chapter. In verse the 47th we read וְכָל הָאֵלִים יִשְׁלַח בְּרוּיָהּ, which words have been generally rendered et omnes interfecti ejus cadent in medio ejus. But what can be the meaning of interfecti ejus or interfecti Babylonis? or is there propriety in saying—interfecti ejus interficientur? The whole verse is, Propterea ecce dies veniunt, et visitabo super sculptilia Babylonis, et omnis terra ejus confundetur; and the next words in this solemn denunciation of vengeance seem only properly translated by—et omnes milites ejus cadent in medio ejus. There are some commentators indeed, who seeing the impropriety of interfecti, have rendered the word here sallatores; but this comment seems to deserve no farther notice, than to shew that the authors of it were not satisfied with the common interpretation.

If we proceed from this 47th only to the 49th verse, we shall find farther reason for allowing this translation of הָאֵלִים by milites. The intermediate verse is, Et laudabunt super Babylonem cæli et terra, quia ab aquilone venient ei vastatores, ait Dominus. Then follows verse 49th וְכָל הָאֵלִים יִשְׁלַח בְּרוּיָהּ, Omnes milites ejus cadent in medio ejus. These words have been variously interpreted, and yet have been generally (perhaps it might be said universally) misunderstood by commentators. Our English translation is, As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall; so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the earth.

The impropriety of causing those who had been slain to fall, or to be slain, induced our translators to place in the margin, Both Babylon is to fall, O ye slain of Israel; and with Babylon, &c. But this address to the slain is certainly the greater impropriety; and the former English version is confirmed by the LXX, who read, Και γε Βαβυλων πεσειν εποισσε τους τραυματίας Ισραηλ, και εν Βαβυλωνι πεσονται τραυματια πασης της γης. The English and Greek versions seem right here in the form and disposition of the passage, but are probably wrong again in the translation of הָלָלִים by slain instead of soldiers; since the true translation seems to be, As Babylon hath caused the SOLDIERS of Israel to fall; so at Babylon shall fall the SOLDIERS (not, of all the earth, but) of all that country.

In Ezekiel xi. 6, 7, we read וְיָבִיאוּ אֲלֵיכֶם בְּיָד הָאָדָם וּמִלִּידֵי הָרָצָחָה הָאֵל לֵךְ כֹּה אָמַר אֲדֹנָי יְהוֹה וְהָלָלִים אֲמַר שְׂמָחָם בְּתוֹכָהּ הָמָּה הַבָּשָׂר וְהָאָדָם הַסֵּדֶר. These words are delivered to men, who gave wicked counsel in the city (of Jerusalem) probably by recommending an increase of their military force; and who, vainly confiding in the arm of flesh, thought to defend themselves against the destruction denounced by the prophet, omnem lapidem movisse, ut sese adversus Chaldaeos confirmarent, &c.—Jun. and Tremellius. For thus saith the Lord, ver. 2. These are the men אֲנִי הָאֲשֶׁרֶם, οἱ λογιζόμενοι ματαια, who contrive vanity (since all their defence shall be in vain) and counsel evil counsel in this city, &c., therefore prophesy against them and say—ver. 5 I know the imaginations of your hearts. 6 Ye have multiplied your SOLDIERS in this city, and with SOLDIERS ye have filled the streets thereof. 7 Therefore thus saith the Lord, the SOLDIERS, whom ye have placed in the midst of you, shall be flesh, and this city the caldron. 8 Ye have feared the sword, and I will bring the sword upon you. This interpretation of the word הָלָלִים in these three places seems to make this passage speak good sense itself, and perfectly to agree with the context; neither of which can easily be allowed it, while it is rendered, Ye have multiplied SLAIN MEN in this city, and filled the streets with SLAIN MEN; therefore your SLAIN MEN, whom ye have placed in the midst of you, &c.

It may be worth while to consider the version of the LXX, Ἐπληθύνσατε νεκρῶν ὑμῶν ἐν τῇ πόλει ταύτῃ, καὶ ἐνεπλησάτε τὰς οὐδὺς αὐτῆς τραυματίων. Δια τοῦτο ταδε λέγει ὁ ὀνομαζόμενος Κύριος· τοὺς νεκροὺς ὑμῶν, οὐς ἐπαύσατε ἐν μέσῳ αὐτῆς, &c. We see here, that הָלָלִים is translated first by νεκρῶν then by τραυματίων, and then again by νεκρῶν, a plain proof, that the translators did not well know how to reconcile the word to the sense of the context; and indeed it seems impossible, that either the word ΝΕΚΡΟΥΣ or ΤΡΑΥΜΑΤΙΑΣ should be applied to ΕΤΑΞΑΤΕ with any propriety in this place: whereas the propriety of ΣΤΡΑΤΙΩΤΑΣ ὑμῶν, οὓς ΕΤΑΞΑΤΕ ἐν μέσῳ ὑμῶν is so obvious, as to need no illustration.

It is true the Vatican edition of the LXX, instead of ἐπαύσατε, has ἐπαύσατε; but then it must be observed, that this very common verb שׁוּם is never rendered by παύσσω in any other place, but it is forty times rendered by τάρτω, as we now have it in the Alexandrian copy of this place. Nor is it elsewhere rendered by any verb of a similar signification with παύσσω; but generally by verbs signifying like τάρτω, and verbs which are very applicable to the true sense of this passage, as τίθημι and ἵστημι with their compounds ἐμβαλλω, ἐπιχεω, &c.

There is another instance in this prophet, which is too remarkable to be here omitted. In chap. xxi. 14, we read, וְהָלָלִים הָאֵל לֵךְ כֹּה אָמַר אֲדֹנָי יְהוֹה, which words are literally, upon the common acceptation, as in the interlineary version, Gladius interfectorum, hic gladius occisi magni—But that this sword of vengeance, which was thus sharpening for the yet future destruction of Jerusalem, could not be gladius interfectorum, or (which seems more unintelligible) gladius occisi magni, is so evident, that it has compelled two interpreters to come almost to truth here, in rendering the latter expression, gladius occisionis magnæ, as in the Vulgate; and gladius interfectionis magnæ, as in the Chaldee paraphrase. And it seems strange, that these two interpreters should not have seen the much greater propriety (from the masculine termination of the words, and for every other reason) of translating the words gladius occisoris, interfectoris, or militis magni. The true version then of these words probably is, Gladius militum (Babyloniorum) hic gladius militis magni (bellicosi regis Babylonis) for thus it is expressly called in the 19th verse וְהָלָלִים הָאֵל לֵךְ כֹּה אָמַר אֲדֹנָי יְהוֹה, the sword of the king of Babylon.

I shall refer only to one chapter more, the first chapter of the second Book of Samuel [see notes on 2 Sam. i., p. 494].

If then the noun הָלָלִים so frequently signifies a soldier, it will readily be admitted that Jashobeam lift up his spear against 300 soldiers at one time. This was a very extraordinary display of courage, and worthy of one of David's chief captains. We can hardly believe, that so brave a man would lift up his spear against 300 men, that were either dead or wounded; or, that he could kill so prodigious a number by himself, with his own single spear: but we may reasonably believe, that, when surrounded or rendered desperate, he might fight his way through a body of 300 soldiers, or defend a narrow pass against a body of that number.

What the divisions in armies then were, is not much known at present; but we read (1 Sam. xxix. 2) the lords of the Philistines passed on (to battle) by hundreds and by thousands. And as the Philistine army was thus divided, probably a company of theirs consisted of an hundred men; and if three companies formed a regiment, that regiment would consequently consist of three hundred men, which is exactly the number encountered by Jashobeam. It seems extremely probable, that three hundred might be one constant division in the army of the Israelites, in honourable remembrance of Gideon's troop of three hundred, which beat the Midianites; which troop God himself thought proper to fix at three hundred, which were a small body selected out of thirty-two thousand, the number of men in Gideon's whole army. And if this were a division amongst the Israelites, the Philistines might copy their example in this instance. But whether this division obtained amongst the Israelites, or not; that it obtained amongst the Philistines seems highly probable from this history of Jashobeam. And a farther confirmation of this opinion may be drawn from the 18th verse of this chapter in Samuel and the 20th in Chronicles; where we read, that Abishai also, at another time, lifted up his spear against the same number three hundred: and he was rewarded for this act of heroism by being placed at the head of the second series of generals, as Jashobeam had been made head of the first.

Wherefore, as both the places relating to Abishai make the enemy three hundred, and as that in Chronicles relating to Jashobeam has also three hundred; we need not scruple to reduce the eight hundred in the corrupted passage to the same number; which will leave room enough for applauding the hero, and will render the passages consistent, as they must originally have been. Not to add, that it will greatly abate the marvellous, which is carried very high upon the common acceptance of Jashobeam's slaying three hundred men by his own single spear. But then what shall we say to that increase of the marvellous, which arises from Abishai's slaying 300 men by his single spear—that these two men should each slay so prodigious a number, and each the very same number to a man as the other? But this appears entirely rational, upon the preceding interpretation.

Besides, if both could be supposed to have achieved such an exploit, certainly both would have deserved an equal reward and the same rank in military honour. But we are told, that Abishai attained not unto the first three: yet how could he be less honourable than Jashobeam, when he had done the same marvellous exploit, or rather, how could he be less honourable than the two captains that were inferior to Jashobeam, since no action of theirs can be conceived to have been greater. Whereas, if Jashobeam and Abishai fought their way through, or encountered, a whole regiment of the Philistines; that was eminently to the honour of both; and deservedly raised Abishai to the head of the second series, though he had not attained to the honour of Jashobeam, who had also distinguished himself gloriously on other occasions.

8 The last observation on these two very difficult verses is, that $\pi\tau\alpha$ in Samuel should be $\pi\tau\tau\alpha$ as in Chronicles [so Keri], &c. It may be remarked here, that we have in this verse of Chronicles one example of that jumble of versions, which makes up some part of the present edition of the LXX. The phrase $\pi\tau\tau\alpha$ had in this verse been rendered $\pi\tau\alpha\zeta$ by one translator, and $\epsilon\nu \kappa\alpha\iota\omega \epsilon\nu$ by another (for we cannot suppose the same person would translate the phrase two different ways, and place one version of it in the middle and the other at the end of the verse); and the conclusion of this verse in the original version of the LXX having been lost, it is repaired by part of two different versions; one of which read $\pi\tau\alpha\zeta$, and the other $\epsilon\nu \kappa\alpha\iota\omega \epsilon\nu$: and so both renderings continue in the same verse, even to this day, $\text{ΟΥΤΟΣ ΕΣΠΑΣΑΤΟ ΤΗΝ ΡΟΜΦΑΙΑΝ ΑΥΤΟΥ ΑΠΛΩΣ ΕΠΙ ΤΡΙΑΚΟΣΙΟΥΣ ΤΡΑΥΜΑΤΙΑΣ ΕΝ ΚΑΙΩ ΕΝΙ}$. See another such jumble of versions in the LXX, 2 Sam. i. 23.

The English version of Chronicles is, And this is the number (in Samuel, These are the names) of the mighty men, whom David had: Jashobeam the Hachmonite, chief of three; he lifted up his spear against three hundred soldiers at one time.

Dr. A. Clarke.—8 These be the names of the mighty men.] This chapter should be collated with the parallel place, 1 Chron. xi.; and see Kennicott's First Dissertation πρὸς τὴν μάχαιραν· καὶ ἐποίησε Κύριος σωτηρίαν μεγάλην ἐν τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἐκείνῃ· καὶ ὁ λαὸς ἐκάθητο ὀπίσω αὐτοῦ πλὴν ἐκδιδύσκευν. 11 καὶ μετ' αὐτὸν Σαμαία υἱὸς Ἀσα ὁ Ἀρουχαῖος· καὶ συνήχθησαν οἱ ἀλλόφυλοι εἰς Θηρία· καὶ ἦν ἐκεῖ μερὶς τοῦ ἀγροῦ πλήρης φακοῦ· καὶ ὁ λαὸς ἔφυγεν ἐκ προσώπου ἀλλοφύλων. 12 καὶ ἐστηλώθη ἐν μέσῳ τῆς μερίδος, καὶ ἐξείλατο αὐτήν, καὶ ἐπάταξε τοὺς ἀλλοφύλους· καὶ ἐποίησε Κύριος σωτηρίαν μεγάλην.

Au. Ver.—9 And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away :

10 He arose, and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and the Lord wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil.

11 And after him was Shammah the son of Agee the Hararite. And the Philistines were gathered together into a troop [or, for foraging], where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philistines.

12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines: and the Lord wrought a great victory.

Pool.—9 When they defied the Philistines [so Patrick]; when he either in the name of all the Israelites, or with the countenance and help of some of them, challenged the Philistines to fight. Or, when some of, or among, the Philistines defied them, i. e., the Israelites, according to their manner, and the example of their great Goliath, 1 Sam. xvii. 25, 36. Or in Horpam (for some make it a proper name of a place) among the Philistines. Gone away, i. e., fled away, 1 Chron. xi. 13, being dismayed at the approach of their enemies. Heb., ascended, i. e., vanished away like smoke, which ascends, and so disappears, as that verb is oft used.

He arose, i. e., he undertook the work, as that word sometimes is used. Or, he stood (as it sometimes signifies) when the rest fled. His hand clave unto the sword; or thus, yet did his hand cleave to his sword, i. e., though he was weary, he did not desist, but continued fighting. Only to spoil, i. e., to pursue the enemy, whom he had discomfited, and to take their spoil.

11 Full of lentiles, or barley, as it is 1 Chron. xi. 13; for both might very well grow in the same field, in divers part of it [so Patrick]. And this fact is ascribed to Eleazar, 1 Chron. xi. 12, but so as it is implied that he had some partner or partners in it; for it is there said, ver. 14, They set themselves, &c. So Eleazar might stand and fight in that part where the barley was, and Shammah there where the lentiles were.

Bp. Patrick.—11 Into a troop.] Or, as we translate it in the margin, “for forage.” For so Ralbag interprets the Hebrew word chajja (which Kimchi takes to be a city), that they came to get some sustenance out of the field.

Hallet.—The present expression in the Hebrew is very strange and difficult עָמְדוּ. This expression has greatly perplexed all the translators. The Vulgar Latin renders it, They were gathered together in a station. The Alexandrian and Vatican copies of the Greek version render it, They were gathered together at Theria [i. e., wild beasts], because טָרִי signifies a wild beast: the Complutensian copy has it, at Siagon, i. e., a jaw, which in Hebrew is called טָרִי. The Chaldee takes it to be a proper name of a place, Hajah. The Syriac renders it, to catch beasts: the Arabic renders it, with an addition, to steal the cattle of the children of Israel: some render it, they gathered together in a farm, or in the country, in villam: Le Clerc renders it, contra villam, against the village: others, at a certain place. All this insuperable difficulty will be avoided, if we suppose, that there is an error of the transcribers, and that instead of עָמְדוּ, we should read, as in the parallel place, נִלְחָמוּ, to war; which reading is the most natural, and what one would have expected the historian should have written. I make the less scruple of venturing to propose this emendation of the text, notwithstanding that all the ancient versions agree with the present reading of the Hebrew, because it evidently appears, from comparing the two places we are now considering, that there were errors in both, older than all the versions of them that are now known in the world. The omission now mentioned [see note of Ken. below] in Chron. is older than all the versions of that book: for all those versions have omitted the same long passage. And though the transcribers of Sam. have well preserved that passage, yet they have been guilty of some little mistakes, in which all the versions have followed them, which may be corrected by the parallel place in Chronicles. A comparison of the places will show that the expressions should be the same in both.

It seemed necessary to compare together thus much of the two chapters in this place, that so the reader might see the more clearly what a great mutilation or defect there is in this part of the text in Chronicles. The principal evidence for the proof of this must arise from the inspection and comparison of the text in both places; and from thence it will appear, almost beyond a possibility of doubt, that the history in Chronicles breaks off abruptly in the middle of the 9th verse in Samuel; and recomences, in a manner equally abrupt, in the middle of the 11th verse. But if any one should be disposed to deny this defect in Chronicles, and to maintain the perfection of the text as it now stands there; he need only be desired to make out from that alone the history of the thirty-seven mighty men, which seems absolutely impossible. For as Shammah, the third general of the first series is there omitted, the history will be so far from being found regular, that it is thrown into total confusion.

That there is a deficiency then of one whole verse and a part of two others here in Chronicles will, in general, be allowed. And the omission seems manifestly owing to the resemblance of some words at the place where the transcriber broke off and where he went on. For having writ וַיִּתְּנֵם בְּיָדָם, he cast his eye down on וַיִּתְּנֵם בְּיָדָם (two of which words are very similar) and copied on from the last place; and so caused the omission [so Hallet], which has been continued ever since.

Let us now consider each of these verses particularly; comparing one text with another, where the two parts accompany each other; and endeavouring to establish the true reading in the places that are corrupted.

In Samuel the 9th verse begins thus, And after him was Eleazar the son of Dodi (not Dodo) the Ahohite, i. e., next after Jashobeam, and therefore the second general of the first series. The word וַיִּתְּנֵם in Samuel is writ more properly in Chronicles in the plural form, with a Yod before the pronoun; and is so expressed here in Samuel in the Complutensian Bible. The patronymic of Eleazar in Samuel is Dodi, with Dodo in the margin. The LXX (in the Alexand. copy) have a version for both Dodo and Dodi, υιος πατραδελφου αυτου, υιος Σουσει—Σουσει being a various reading for Δουδει, as appears from the Vatican copy. In Chronicles it is Dodo; but in the LXX (Vat. and Alexand. copies) Δωδαι, as from Δωδ. But this point is determined at once by 1 Chron. xxvii. 4, where we read that as Jashobeam, the first general of the first ternary, was the first officer for the first month in waiting upon the king, so, for the second month, was Dodi the Ahohite, doubtless Eleazar the son of Dodi the Ahohite (the second general of the first ternary) as before observed. Eleazar the son of is dropped in this last place, and the next word is not ויר but דוד (Dodi) in the text, and Δωδαι in the LXX; which is an authority sufficient for determining between the disagreeing copies of the verses now before us.

Besides, the reading here Eleazar the son of Dodi the Ahohite will the more effectually distinguish this hero from Elhanan the son of Dodo the Bethlehemite, who stands recorded the first of the body of thirty mighty men, in Sam. 24 and Chron. 26. And it seems to have been owing to the resemblance of these two names, that Dodo at first crept into the text, after Eleazar; since Eleazar is also confounded in the Vatican edition of the LXX with Elhanan. To all which may be added the testimony of Josephus, who calls this Eleazar υιος Δωδειου, lib. vii., cap. 12. As to the family or local name, it has been already observed, that the son of Ahohi, and the Ahohite, signify just the same thing.

The word גרים in Samuel should have the ה prefixed [so Houb., Hallet], as in Chronicles; it is placed so in the margin of the several editions, and in the text of the Complutensian. Before this, and its preceding word, we have in Chronicles the pronoun הוא; which does not appear in any version, and therefore probably was not original [Hallet maintains that this word was original].

The next words are very obscure, and on that account it may be proper to compare them—

חוא היה עם דוד בפס דמים	Chron.
עם דוד	Sam.
והפלשתים	Chron.
בפלשתים	Sam.

The text here is corrupted in Samuel; the differences there evidently destroying the regular sense in Chronicles and making it unintelligible. It would be endless to enumerate all the constructions of the word בפס: but whether it has been thought a verb active or passive, whether the sense that some have laboured to extract from it be, that the Philistines reviled the Israelites, or the Israelites defied the Philistines; or that the Israelites exposed their lives to the Philistines, according to others—certain it is, that neither of these contradictory opinions can be the true one. For (not to insist upon שמים having a נ prefixed after דוד, which that verb never admits after it) this word contained originally some proper name of a place.

This appears, not only from there being such a name here in the copy of Chronicles, and that name of letters very similar to the word so corrupted; but also, because in Samuel itself the third word from this is שם, ibi, which is directly relative to some place antecedently mentioned: otherwise, there can be no sense in, When they defied the Philistines, that there were THERE gathered together to battle. And farther—according to the present reading in Samuel there is no nominative case, nor introduction to the verb סעס; as there regularly is in Chronicles. Some commentators, therefore, seeing the absolute necessity of making this word the name of a place, have rendered it at Horpam: but there is no such place in the Bible as Horpam; and if there were, it would neither make this passage sense, nor the two passages consistent.

This then, and the beginning of the next word, have been corrupted; and the true reading is preserved in the corresponding copy of Chronicles [so Houb., Hallet], which has also two additional words הוא דוד before עם דוד, two words, which we may conclude to have been originally also in Samuel [so Hallet]; as the Ald. and Complut. editions of the LXX read there ουτος ην μετα Δαυιδ: and Josephus, speaking of this very place, has ος ην μετα του βασιλεως εν Αρασαμω (which last word was perhaps originally Αφασδαμω, the version of דמים), lib. vii., cap. 12.

As to the true name of this place, we have it in Chronicles Pasdammm [so Houb., Hallet]; or, as it is sometimes writ, Ephesdammm (1 Sam. xvii. 1); and most of the letters in the true and the corrupted word are very similar, and therefore the more easily mistaken.

Chron. עם דויד בפסדמם והפלשתים

Sam. עם דוד ב חרפם בפלשתים

Chron. נכספ

Sam. נכספ

I have only omitted the yod here in the proper name; which, being frequently omitted in nouns of the plural number, might be so here: and have shortened the oblique stroke of the mem, as it appears from Origen's Hexapla to have been formerly written, which brings it very nearly to a pe, the daleth and resh are frequently mistaken, the samech is only distinguished from a heth by its union of the perpendicular strokes at the bottom, and the first and last letters are the very same.

The next word, without doubt, was the nominative case to the verb יָצָא, which immediately follows it in Samuel as well as in Chronicles; and therefore must have been in both, as we now find it in Chronicles, יָצָא [so Houb., Hallet]. The sense then is, He was with David at Pasdammim. And when the Philistines were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were gone away (fled) he arose, &c.

Here is another argument against the present reading in Samuel, arising from the words, when they defied the Philistines; since we can hardly suppose, that the Israelites were so hardy, as first to defy their dreadful enemies; and, upon the appearance of a party of them, shamefully to get up into the mountains, and fly from them without a battle. Wherefore, that they did not defy the enemy they dreaded, is probable; but that they fled from them upon their appearance, is certain. And yet we find in the next verse, there was then among them one hero, who maintained his ground against this party of the Philistines; and not only maintained his ground, but obliged the party to retire with great loss.

But we must remember, that the sacred historian, who was fully sensible how surprising this event would appear in after times, takes care to inform us in the following words that the hand of the Lord was with Eleazar, and that the chief author of the great deliverance wrought that day was the Lord:—the Lord, who had assured the Israelites by Moses, that One of them should chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand of their enemies to flight.

There is no word that requires particular observation in the 10th verse, but יָצָא; which in the Alexand. and Vat. copies of the LXX, is rendered εκαθητο, and in the Ald. and Complut., επιστρεφεν, in which last sense are the Vulgate and the English version. If it be considered as the Preter tense, it must be the former; if the future, it may be the latter. Josephus evidently takes it in the latter sense; and his words are so just a paraphrase upon the passage before us, that it may not be improper to transcribe them, Μετ' αυτον (Ιεσσαιμον) ην Ελεαζαρος υιος Δαυειδου, ος ην μετα του βασιλεως εν Αρασαμω. ουτος ποτε, των Ισραηλιτων καταπλαγεντων το πληθος των Παλαιστινων και φευγοντων, μορος εμεινε' και συμπεδων τοις πολεμιοις απεκτεινεν αυτων πολλους, ως υπο του αιματος προσκολληθηναι την ρομφαιαν αυτου τη δεξια, και τους Ισραηλitas ιδοντας τετραμμενους υπ' αυτου τους Παλαιστινους, καταβαινας απο των ορειων, διωκειν, και θαυμαστην και διαβοητον τοτε νικην αρασθαι, του μεν Ελεαζαρου κτεινοντος, επομενου δε του πληθους και σκυλευοντος τους αναιρουμενους. Lib. vii., cap. 12.

The first word in the 11th verse has the Yod omitted again, as appears by the end of the preceding verse, and many other places; the Complut. edition reads here יָצָא. No other word in the first part of this verse has any difficulty, except הָיָה [Hallet reads הָיָה as in the p. p.], and that has been greatly the subject of disputation. The most rational account of it seems to be, that it signifies ad Lechi, the place where Samson made so remarkable a destruction of the Philistines; see Judges xv. 14, 17. Thus the LXX (Edit. Complut.) read επι ΣΙΑΓΟΝΑ, the same word which is used here by Josephus. And Bochart, in his Hieroicoicon (par. i., lib. ii., cap. 15) endeavours to establish this as the true sense of the word in this place.

After this proper name the passage in Chronicles takes place again, and goes on with its corresponding passage in Samuel. The word יָצָא in Samuel is omitted in Chronicles, possibly because it had been writ but the third word before, as the text now stands in the latter. The next variation is, that יָצָא in Samuel is יָצָא in Chronicles; which two words resemble each other so much in the number and nature of their constituent letters, though a little transposed, that it may be presumed from thence they were originally the very same word: and doubtless were so, as the two texts evidently treat of the same action in the same place.

In Samuel the word is שָׁשׁ, phakov, lente; in Chronicles שָׁשׁ, hordeo. The last word is writ almost universally without a Vau, and therefore probably was so writ here originally; and then there can be no doubt, but that the two words שָׁשׁ and שָׁשׁ, consisting of the very same number of letters, and of the very same letters, except a ו for a ר, and occurring in the same part of the history in two different copies, were originally the same word. (That such a transposition or dislocation of letters has been made elsewhere, see Ezra ii. 46, שָׁשׁ; which is שָׁשׁ in Neh. vii. 48. In Gen. xi. 31 we have שָׁשׁ, exierunt, instead of שָׁשׁ, eduxit, as in the Samaritan version and LXX. In 1 Sam. ii. 3, שָׁשׁ was read שָׁשׁ by the LXX, who have rendered it καὶ Θεός; and so in Job xiii. 15; to which may be added, from 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, שָׁשׁ or שָׁשׁ, for which the LXX seem to have read שָׁשׁ or שָׁשׁ, by rendering the word twice in this verse πικρος, as usual.) And as the piece of ground mentioned in these two chapters is said to be full of lentiles or barley, it is more probable it was the latter, on account of the greater use and plenty of barley. The copy in Chronicles differs also in reading שָׁשׁ: but either of the two numbers of that verb is right; because שָׁשׁ, being a noun of multitude, may be connected with a verb plural; as the noun שָׁשׁ was in Samuel verse the 9th.

In the two next corresponding verses the LXX being uniformly singular in the several verbs, that is a plain proof, that the plural verbs in the present text of Chronicles should be singular, as in Samuel. The alteration of them to plurals seems to have been owing to the preceding omission of one of the mighty men; whose existence some transcriber was desirous to support, by making two persons concerned in this action instead of one.

But the original history could speak but of one in this place, and that evidently was Shammah, the third general of the first ternary: of whom a wonderful instance of heroism is here recorded, that he stood alone against a party of the Philistines, in a field of barley, and saved the barley and destroyed many of the Philistines. This being another relation of a surprising nature, and somewhat similar to the preceding, the historian here also observes, that the hand of the Lord was with Shammah, the brave instrument of this defeat of the Philistines; and that the great deliverance that day was wrought by the Lord.

The only remaining difference is, that שָׁשׁ in Chronicles is corrupted from שָׁשׁ in Samuel [so Hallet]. This appears, not only from its being שָׁשׁ in the correct verse of Samuel; but because this and the three following words are exactly the same in the 10th as in this 12th verse of Samuel: and, that the word here in Chronicles was originally also the same (as the three that follow it are) is plain from the LXX, all the copies of which version uniformly so render it, καὶ εποίησε κύριος σωτηρίαν μεγάλην. To these several reasons it may be added, that שָׁשׁ cannot be the Hiphil future from שָׁשׁ, because that would be שָׁשׁ, as in Psalm cxvi. 6; and lastly, if it had been thus expressed, it could not have been the original word, as it makes no sense with the words following: for the version would be then, and the Lord saved a great deliverance.

The proper English version then of these several verses is, And after him was Eleazar, the son of Dodi [Hallet, Dodo], the Ahohite, one of three mighty men; he was with David at Pasdammim. And when the Philistines were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Israel were fled; he arose, and smote the Philistines, until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and the Lord wrought a great deliverance that day; and the people returned after him only to spoil. And after him was Shammah, the son of Agee, the Hararite: and the Philistines were gathered together at Lechi [Hallet, to battle], where was a piece of ground full of barley, and the people fled from before the Philistines. But he placed himself in the midst of the field (of barley) and saved it, and smote the Philistines; and the Lord wrought a great deliverance.

Ged.—9 Next to him, and one of the first three worthies, was Eleazar Ben-Dodi, an Ahohite. He was with David, at Phasdamim [pp. 1 Chron. xi. 13]; where, the Philistines being assembled to battle, and the men of Israel giving way; (10) he resisted and smote the Philistines, until his hand (which had stuck to the sword) was weary: and, by him, that day, the Lord wrought a great deliverance: the people only followed him to the spoil. (11) Next to him, was Shamah Ben-Agah, an Hararite: who, when the Philistines had assembled at Lehi (where was a spot of ground full of lentils), and when the people were fleeing from the Philistines, placed himself in the midst of the field, (12) and smote the Philistines: thus, by him, the Lord wrought a great deliverance.

Booth.—9 And next to him, and one of the first three mighty men, was Eleazar, the son of Dodo, the Ahohite. He was with David at Pasdammim [p. 1 Chron. xi. 13]: where the Philistines were assembled to battle, and the men of Israel were giving way; 10 And he arose, and smote the Philistines, until his hand, which had stuck to his sword, was weary: and by him Jehovah that day wrought a great deliverance; and the people followed him only to spoil. And next to him was Shamah, the son of Agee the Hararite. And the Philistines were assembled at Lechi, where was a piece of ground full of barley [p. p. 1 Chron. xi. 13]: and the people fled from the Philistines. 12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and smote the Philistines: thus by him, Jehovah wrought a great deliverance.

Sam. εἰν.

That the word שלוש, thirty, in Samuel should have been שלושה, three, as it is in the margin here and in the text in Chronicles, will readily be allowed; not merely because it is so in the margin and text, but because it is impossible the historian should say, And thirty out of the thirty went down. The Complutensian Bible has שלושה, three, here in the text of Samuel, and all the versions agree in saying, three of the thirty: and, if anything could be yet wanting to complete this evidence, there is the evidence of the text in Samuel against itself. For though here, at the beginning of the history of this exploit, performed by these men, they are called thirty; yet at the end of it, in ver. 17th, they are called שלושה, three,—these things did three of the mighty men.

The next point then must be, Who those mighty men were, and of what rank among the thirty-seven heroes. The words שלושה do not appear to have been rightly translated in any ancient version. They begin the exploit of the three heroes, who broke through the army of the Philistines, and brought David water from the well of Bethlehem. The Hebrew words are literally tres ex (or præ) triginta caput; which last word may be rendered plurally. Our English version renders the words, And three of the thirty chief, but this cannot be the sense, because there were not thirty heads or chiefs—there being thirty-seven, if we reckon all the mighty men; and there being but seven, if we reckon only those who were more honourable than the thirty, and to whom alone the name of ראש, head, is attributed; these being properly the HEADS of the other thirty.

The English translators seem to have been sensible of an incorrectness; and therefore, in the margin, render the words, And the three captains over the thirty. This is much nearer to truth than the former, but not exact; because there were not three, but seven captains over the thirty. The LXX (Alexand. and Vat.) render the words, Κατεβησαν τρεις απο των τριακοντα, but very improperly. For if these heroes were three of the mighty men in general, they must have been three of the thirty-seven, and not three of the thirty. But this version is very faulty in not translating the principal word ראש, at least not in the Alexand. and Vat., though it is in the Ald. and Complut. copies; and very false, because the three, that went down, were not of the last thirty, but of the first seven; three of the more honourable; and indeed the very three, that make the first series of generals.

Josephus, after he had recorded the three first generals, Ιεσσαίμωσ, Ελεάζαρος, and Σεβας, speaking of this exploit, says, οί τρεις ανδρες ΟΥΤΟΙ.—Lib. vii., cap. 12. Just so the sacred historian mentions Jashobeam, Eleazar, and Shammah, as the generals of the first series, recording in what manner each had particularly distinguished himself; and then adds this heroic action performed by them all together: after which, he proceeds to the names of the second three; and none of the thirty are mentioned till many verses afterwards.

The Vulgate renders the words, Nec non et ante descenderant tres, qui erant principes inter triginta. Here ראש is made properly to agree with ראש (tria capita, or tres duces), and this is true, because the title of ראש was given only to the first seven, as before observed. But inter triginta should have been præ triginta; and then the sense is clear, that the three, who went down, were (not three of the thirty captains, but) three, who were heads, or captains, over or above the thirty. That this is the true meaning of ראש is farther evident from the same expression applied to Benaiah, the second captain in the second series; in verses the 22d and 23d, These things did Benaiah—and had a name among the three mighty men; he was honourable above the thirty ראש הנהל, but he attained not unto the first three, the three captains of the first series.

The word ראש in Samuel being in all the ancient versions, and seeming to improve the propriety of the sentence, was probably read at first also in Chronicles; but the insertion or omission makes no material difference in the sense. The two next words are very different in sense, and yet very similar in sound and in the letters; and therefore we may fairly presume that one of them has been corrupted from the other; which has been so corrupted, is then the question. Now the phrase ראש קציר seems to be corrupted, as those words never signify in the time of harvest throughout the Bible; the phrases for that being ראש קציר as in Gen. xxx. 14; or בשק קציר as in Jer. l. 16; or ראש קציר as in Prov. vi. 8. That the LXX could not read it in this sense is plain from their translating it as a proper name; Κασωαπ in the Alexandrian, Κασωαν in the Vatican, and Κασωα in the Aldine copy; but after the time of the LXX the corruption settled into what now obtains; as is evident from the later versions.

On the contrary, the phrase ראש צור in Chronicles is supported uniformly by all the ancient versions, rendering the noun here the rock; which bears a proper relation to the word cave just following it in the text. These two words are frequently mentioned together, the former as the mountainous or upper part, and the latter as the hollow part contained within the former: which two were frequently found in the mountainous parts of Palestine; and, on account of the difficulty and danger of access, were called the holds, or places of safe retreat from an enemy. Thus 1 Sam. xxiv. 1, David went up, and dwelt במצודת, in the strong holds of Engedi. 3 And Saul went to seek David על סני צור upon the Rocks; where we have the same preposition preceding the same noun, as here in Chronicles. 4 And he came where was a CAVE כַּדָּה; which cave was so large, that David with some of his little party lay concealed in the inward recesses of it. Josephus calls it, σπηλαιον βαθυ και κοιλον, εις πολυ και μακροσ ανεωγος και πλατος.—Lib. vi., cap. 13.

The case of Engedi then seems to have been just the case of Adullam; where there was also כַּדָּה, a strong hold, 1 Sam. xxii. 4; and a cave כַּדָּה, 1 Sam. xxii. 1; both which words are also mentioned here in Sam. xiv. and Chron. xvi.: we may therefore safely conclude, that הַצֵּר (or rather הַצֹּר) was here also the name for the rock of Adullam, and that it originally was so in Samuel as it is still in Chronicles. So that הַצֹּר was first corrupted into קֶצֶר (or, as Houbigant tells us the q was formerly written כ, קֶצֶר) which was the form of it, when the LXX rendered it Kasowap; and thence it was corrupted into קֶצֶר, as it now stands.

The only remaining word to be considered here is חַיִּית [see notes of Lee and Gesen. on ver. 11, p. 675], which in Chronicles is וְחַיִּית; and we may infer, that the corruption is here also in Samuel. For it does not appear that חַיִּית ought for certain to be rendered a troop anywhere in the Bible; and it is never once rendered ταγμα by the LXX, but in this place: which therefore we may suppose to have been corrupted from חַיִּית, the regular word for a troop or host, and frequently occurring in Scripture: and indeed being the very word used in these same chapters but three verses afterwards. It may be added, that the Vulgate seems to have read חַיִּית in this very place of Samuel, by rendering the word there castra, which חַיִּית never signifies. As to Rephaim, that was the name of the valley lying between Jerusalem and Bethlehem; the distance of which two places, as Maundrell tells us, is two hours' travel, p. 87, Edit. 4.

The English version is, And there went down three captains, who were over the thirty, and came to the rock to David, into the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines was encamped in the valley of Rephaim.

These two verses vary considerably; yet in such a manner, that we can easily see they were originally the same. The present reading in Chronicles, in the middle of the verse where the difference is greatest, is exactly regular; and completely expressive of the wonder and surprise of David on such an occasion: but the present reading in Samuel is evidently broken, and wants all that spirited emphasis, which gives so much beauty to the other. That it is so broken and defective is clear from the loss of the verb אשה (bibam) which is found in the ancient versions, and therefore existed formerly in the original. And as the text of Samuel is plainly deficient in that verb, so it is in many more words, which are regular in the corresponding passage.

The participle הלכים seems foisted in by some transcriber, to make the passage sense, as it now stands; but, even with that word, it is apparently incomplete, wanting still the necessary word אשה. Or, at least, if we could suppose the sense to have been—Is not this the blood, &c., then there must have been originally the pronoun דמה, or something else, to perfect the sentence. As to the variation between the words מעשתי דמה in Samuel and מעשתי in Chronicles; the last word of each may be right: for the pronoun is found added to an infinitive in the present manner, 1 Kings xxi. 3; though such infinitive generally is without it, the pronoun immediately preceding the infinitive being sufficiently expressive of the person. Thus in Gen. xlv. 17, we have the very same words as here, דמה לי מעשתי זאת.

It does not appear, that אלהים is ever used in this solemn form of appeal to the Deity, the word being constantly דמה; as in 1 Sam. xxiv. 6; xxvi. 11; and 1 Kings xxi. 3. But then the word דמה should have the mem prefixed, as it is before אלהים; and as we find it in the several instances just referred to. This preposition is improperly omitted also in some other places; as Joshua x. 13; and in this very chapter of Sam., v. 24 and 32.

How the sacred name of דמה Jehovah came to be exchanged into אלהים God in this place, may probably be owing to the superstitious veneration the later Jews paid, and do still pay to the name Jehovah (the nomen ineffabile) which therefore they pronounced Adonai or Elohim. A Jew then, who was dictating to a transcriber, reading Elohim in this place instead of Jehovah, and not giving notice of such variation, the former word was set down instead of the latter: and probably the same mistake has been made in many other places.

The original cause of this superstition (the not pronouncing the name Jehovah) probably was—that Jehovah was the name of the God of the Jews, in contradistinction to all the deities, or false gods of other nations; as being the name of the necessarily-existent Being. And the Jews, perhaps, had learnt at Babylon, amongst other heathenish superstitions, to conceal the true name of the God of their country, to prevent its destruction. For the heathens had very early a superstitious notion, that a country or city could not be taken, till the tutelar god or presiding genius was invited out of it, by invoking him in his real name. The Jews, finding this a sacred custom observed by other nations, absurdly adopted the same precaution; and resolved, that the true name of their God should also be a secret, by declaring it unlawful to pronounce it.

That such a custom did obtain in the world very early, is evident from those celebrated lines in Virgil; Æneid. 2, 351, &c.

Excessere omnes, adytis arisque relictis,

Dii, quibus imperium hoc steterat—

On which words Servius remarks—Romani celatum esse voluerunt, in cuius Dei tutela urbs Roma sit; et jure Pontificum cautum est, ne suis nominibus Dii Romani appellarentur, ne exaugurari possent: et in Capitolio fuit clypeus consecratus—genio urbis Romæ, sive massit sive fœmina. Macrobius gives a whole chapter upon the words of the poet just cited, and says—De vetustissimo Romanorum more, et de occultissimis sacris vox ista prolata est: constat enim omnes urbes in alicujus Dei esse tutela, moremque Romanorum fuisse, ut cum obsiderent urbem hostium, certo carmine evocarent tutelares Deos: propterea ipsi Romani et DEUM in cuius tutelâ urbs Roma est, ut (et) ipsius Urbis Latinum nomen ignotum esse voluerunt; caventibus Romanis, ne quod sæpe adversus urbes hostium fecisse se noverant, idem ipsi quoque hostili evocatione paterentur.—Lib. iii., cap. 9. This then being the custom of the Romans at other sieges, and no such evocation having been practised at the siege of Jerusalem; it is probable, that their omission of that custom at a siege so remarkable was occasioned by their ignorance of the true name of the God of Jerusalem.

The English version is—And he said, The Lord forbid, that I should do this thing! Shall I drink the blood of these men, with their lives? (Shall I drink this water, which may be considered as the blood of these men, who have brought it at the hazard of their lives?) for, at the hazard of their lives, they have brought it!—And he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

Ken.—18 And Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, he was head of (an order of) three; for he lifted up his spear against three hundred soldiers [see notes on ver. 8, p. 667—673, and on i. 19, p. 491]; so he had a name among three.

Ged.—18 Next to them was ABISHAI BEN ZERUIA, Joab's brother, the chief of the second three. He brandishing his spear, broke through three hundred men; and hence had the first name among the second three.

Booth.—18 And next to them was Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, the chief of the second three. For he, raising his spear, penetrated through three hundred men; and had the first name, among the second three.

The only various reading here is, that יד in Samuel is in Chronicles בשנים; which variation does not affect the sense, and therefore both words may have been original. For, as Abishai has been proved to be the first general of the second ternary, the sense is the same whether we say, Of the three was he not most honourable? or, Of the three he was more honourable than two. But, as the ancient versions do not acknowledge an interrogation in the first instance, and as the first instance is evidently corrupt in the LXX by reading ἐκείνων (which is extremely improper, as his inferiors had not been yet mentioned) it seems much more eligible to prefer the last reading, as in Chronicles; which is adapted with great propriety to the circumstances of the history. To which it must be added, that one of the Greek versions in Origen's Hexapla seems to have read בשנים in Samuel; by rendering the words there, υπερ τους δυο ενδοξος.

Ged., Booth.—19 Of the three, he was the most honourable, and became their chief; yet he attained not the rank of the first three.

19 I greatly suspect that one worthy has been here dropped out of the text both of Sam. and Chron. as one, namely Shamah, has certainly been dropped out of the latter. We evidently want one worthy of the second ternary; unless with Kennicott we make him out of Ashael; which the text, I think, does not authorize us to do.—Ged.

Ken.—The word יד is evidently defective, for want of the last letter ל, which is preserved in Chronicles; and which is also preserved in the margin of most editions in Samuel, and in the text there of the Complutensian. The word אִישׁ in Samuel should be אִישׁ־ל [So Houb.] as in Chronicles; and, being compounded of אִישׁ, leo and ל, Deus, is used here as the strongest compound word for a man or men of valour [so most commentators]: and this sense of the word is confirmed by Vitranga, in his excellent Commentary on Isaiah, vol. ii. p. 138.

Ged., Booth.—20 And next to him was Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada (the son of a wealthy man of Kabzeel,) great in exploits. He slew two huge lions of Moab: he went down also and slew another lion in the midst of a pit, in time of snow.

The words איש מדה חמש באמה in Samuel should be, as in Chronicles, אשר המצרי; for the second word is twice repeated in this very verse with the article prefixed in Samuel; all the three places have it in Chronicles and it is prefixed in Samuel before both words by the LXX. The next variation is between איש מדה חמש באמה in Samuel and אשר מראה in Chronicles. The first word אשר in Samuel must have been writ by a very careless transcriber instead of איש; which latter word is placed in the margin of Samuel.

The next word מראה is very similar in its letters מדה, and therefore one may have been corrupted from the other. But, if we consider the sense of each word, and observe that מדה is followed by two other words, which do not follow מראה; we may more rationally suppose, that both words are original, each being proper in its present text; and that the three words in Chronicles were at first intended as a paraphrase upon the word in Samuel. For איש מראה, a man of great aspect, may very properly be explained by איש מדה חמש באמה, a man, whose stature was five cubits high. Josephus calls this Egyptian, θαυμαστος το μεγαθος. Lib. vii., cap. 12.

The two words כמנור ארנים are evidently wanting in Samuel, as the sense is otherwise defective—an Egyptian, a man whose stature was five cubits high; and in the hand of the Egyptian was a spear—certainly—like a weaver's beam: since this is the usual comparison for the vast spear used by one of these giants. And we find, the LXX read here ως ξυλον διαβαφρας, which puts the omission in the text of Samuel beyond dispute. We have here another instance in the LXX of the eye of the transcriber having been misled by the same word occurring in different places; and of his copying on from the last word, when he had writ only the first: for the several words inserted in Samuel in the small character were omitted between δορυ and δορυ.

The English version is—And he slew an Egyptian, a man (in Sam., of great aspect) whose stature was five cubits high; and in the hand of the Egyptian was a spear, like a weaver's beam: but he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear.

Ged.—21 He, moreover, slew an eminent Egyptian; and though the Egyptian had a spear in his hand, he [Benaiah] went up to him with a staff; and, pulling the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, slew him with his own spear. 22 Such deeds did Benaiah Ben-Jehoiadah; and, hence, had a name among the second three.

Booth.—21 He, moreover, slew an Egyptian five cubits high: and though the Egyptian had a spear in his hand, he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and slew him with his own spear. 22 These things did Benaiah, the son of Jehoiada; and hence had a name among the second three worthies.

Au. Ver.—23 He was more honourable than the thirty [or, honourable among the thirty]; but he attained not to the first three. And David set him over his guard [or, council; Heb., at his command, 1 Sam. xxii. 14].

Ken.—In Samuel the Alexandrian and Vatican copies of the LXX have τριῶν, as if אִשָּׁר had been אִשָּׁר; but in the Complutensian the words are ὑπὲρ τοὺς τριακοντα, which is the true translation of the Hebrew words and the true sense of the place. This will appear from recollecting what has been already proved—that Benaihu was one of the seven generals, who were more honourable than the thirty mighty men, being the second general of the second series. The text then must have been, as we now have it both in Samuel and Chronicles, He was honourable (or honoured) above the thirty; or (as in Chronicles), Above the thirty (behold him!) he was honourable: but yet he attained not unto the first three. And that the original words cannot properly signify prætribus honorabilis, is evident; because Benaihu, in consequence of this title, must have been the first general of a ternary: whereas it is certain from the history, that he was only second in the second ternary.

It is plain, that the extraordinary want of propriety so visible in the ancient versions of this piece of history, and particularly of this verse, has been principally owing to their several authors not attending to the nature and subordination of these mighty men, as here explained.

It only remains to be observed, that אִל in Samuel should be אִל as in Chronicles: and that the last word has been very differently interpreted, which interpretations have been owing to different readings of the word in question. The LXX in Chronicles by rendering it πατρια, seem to have read אִל־מִשְׁמַעְתּוֹ. Others, as Grotius observes, seem to have read אִל־מִשְׁמַעְתּוֹ, by rendering it custodiam suam. There is no great impropriety in the present reading both in Samuel and Chronicles אִל־מִשְׁמַעְתּוֹ, super auscultationem vel obedientiam suam, i. e. Benaihu was set over those, whose particular duty it was to hear and obey the king's orders, by being nearer his royal person.

And we find this to have been exactly the case. For we read 1 Chron. xviii. 17, and 2 Sam. xx. 23, that this Benaihu was over the Cherethites and the Pelethites: and, from 2 Sam. xv. 18; xx. 6, 7; 1 Kings i. 33, 38, it appears, that the Cherethites and the Pelethites composed David's body-guard. Benaihu then, in being placed over these, was properly captain of David's life-guard; and therefore the words before mentioned must be rendered, over his guard. Thus Josephus, Βαναια δὲ τῶ Ἰωαδου τῆς ΤῶΝ ΣΩΜΑΤΟΦΥΛΑΚΩΝ ΑΡΧΗΝ παραδίδωσιν. Lib. vii., cap. 12. But these authorities seem more strongly to recommend the word אִל־מִשְׁמַעְתּוֹ.

The English version is, Behold! he was more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not unto the first three; and David set him over his guard.

Here is a considerable difference between the two texts; and the occasion of it seems to be this, that the author of the catalogue in Chronicles, not confining himself to the consideration of the exact number of these mighty men (which had before been expressly mentioned in Samuel) does not at all distinguish Asahel, as to his rank amongst the thirty-seven. But, though Asahel was more honourable than the thirty, yet nothing particular being recorded of him, more than of the following thirty (who are celebrated by their names only, and not by their exploits), the author of Chronicles barely sets him at the head of the following thirty.

The author of the catalogue in Samuel observes a different method. He, having been exact with regard to the rank and number of these famous heroes, tells us, that Asahel was over the thirty, whose number, as a body of the same order, had been so often mentioned; and therefore, that he (Asahel) was the last of the second three, of which his brother Abishai was the first. For it is impossible, that Asahel should be one of or among the thirty, because there follow thirty exclusively of him; and because Asahel must be the last of the second ternary, which otherwise is incomplete; consequently the preposition א, prefixed in this verse to עָשָׂה, thirty, must be here rendered over or above; as it has been already proved to signify, in the observations on the 21st verse of this chapter of Chronicles.

And there is this farther proof of its signifying pre-eminence (and not equality) in this place, that the Arabic version renders the word עָשָׂה by رَيْدِس ثَلَاثِينَ, princeps triginta (fortium) triginta præfuit, or rather (according to the primary idea of this verb), triginta caput fuit: so that no word could more strongly express Asahel's superiority over the thirty, whose names (as the Arabic version adds) are these. Shamma, &c.

The English version in Chronicles is—Also the valiant men of the armies were Asahel, the brother of Joab: &c. and in Samuel, Asahel, the brother of Joab, was over the thirty.

Sam. Ἐλεανὰν υἱὸς Δουδὶ πατραδέλφου

Chron. ἐκ Βηθλεέμ.

Sam. αὐτοῦ ἐκ Βηθλεέμ.

This first hero, in the body of thirty, is expressed exactly the same in both the original texts; excepting, that the mem is dropped at the beginning of his local name in Samuel: just as the beth was before the same name in the 14th verse of this chapter of Samuel. How this worthy's name is properly distinguished from Eleazar, the son of Dodi, the Ahohite, has been already observed in page 134.

We have here another instance of the confusion and jumble of versions, which is now found in the LXX; for in Samuel the word דָּוִד, which had been rendered by one translator Δωδῶαι, and πατραδέλφου αὐτοῦ by another, is here translated by both. Or, rather, those two translations are by some transcriber or editor injudiciously thrown together: and of this there are, in the several editions of the LXX, many instances.

The English version is, Elhanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem.

Ged.—24 The names of king David's other thirty worthies were [So Sept. and equivalently Arab. The present text, with Vulg. has, among the thirty was]:

ASAHIEL, Joab's brother.

ELHANAN BEN-DODI, of Bethlehem.

Booth.—24 Asahel, the brother of Joab, was over the thirty, and one of the second three worthies. The names of David's thirty mighty men were [1 Chron. xi. 26], Elhanan, the son of Dodo, of Bethlehem.

שְׁמוֹת הַחֲרָדִי Chron.

שְׁמָה הַחֲרָדִי Sam.

Chron. Σαμωθ Θαδ,

Sam. Σαμμαι ο Αρονδαῖος

That this mighty man, the second in the body of thirty, cannot be the same with Shammah the Hararite, the third general of the first series of three, we may conclude at once. But that he is the same with Shamhoth (חַמְחֹת) mentioned in 1 Chron. xxvii. 8, as being the fifth captain in waiting on the king, seems very evident; because four of the twelve captains in waiting, who are mentioned presently after Shamhoth there, are mentioned presently after Shamhoth here. To which it must be added, that the several copies of the LXX agree in rendering the name in Chronicles Σαμωθ; but do not agree to read Σαμμαι in Samuel, since the Ald. Copy reads Σεμωθ there.

One of these names then being now improperly expressed in the original text, we may conclude, that the name שמה Shammah in Samuel is corrupted from either שמת Shammoth or שמה Shamhoth; if from the former, by a change of the two similar letters ה and ח—שמה from שמה; if from the latter, by an omission of the last, or two last letters—שמה from שמה or שמה.

As this worthy is thus distinguished from Shammah (one of the first seven) by the different termination of his proper name, Shamhoth; so of the different local or family names now found in Chronicles and Samuel, it may be proper to prefer that, which farther distinguishes this man from the former. The former then being Shammah the Hararite, this will be Shamhoth the Harodite; the last name being taken exactly as it is in Samuel. A farther reason for preferring the name of Harodite is, that the worthy, mentioned immediately after Shammoth, is also an Harodite; and two heroes of the same place or family are frequently mentioned together in the following parts of this catalogue.

And that Shamhoth was an Harodite, as in Samuel; and not an Hararite, or (more strictly) Arorite, as in Chronicles; appears yet more evidently from the Alexand. copy of the LXX; which makes the termination of the word in Chronicles the very same as in Samuel, δῆ, Θαδῆ; the Ald. copy, δῆ, Αδδῆ; and the ancient Cambridge Greek MS. retains also, δῆ, Αδῆ. To all which we may add lastly, that not only the Bomberg, and Complutensian editions agree in reading this name יהודי in Samuel; but that the English Polyglott has the very same termination (י) also in Chronicles. This different termination then, together with the difference of a ה in this name of Harodite, instead of an ח in Hararite, or Arorite, sufficiently distinguish the one from the other.

The English version is, Shamhoth, the Harodite.

That the local or family name of Heletz was Pelonite, as in Chronicles, and not Paltite, as in Samuel, is easily inferred from the LXX; but it is certain from 1 Chron.

xxvii. 10; where this same worthy is recorded as the seventh captain in waiting on the king; and there both his names are expressed literally the same, as here in Chronicles. The teth therefore, like many other complicated letters, is here in Samuel corruptly made up of the original vau and nun, ו of נ.

That a letter, thus compounded of two or more strokes, may be mistaken for two letters whose strokes coincide with the strokes of the letter so compounded, is easy to imagine. And, that such a complicated letter has been elsewhere so mistaken for two more simple letters, see page 19th of this Dissertation, in the words הנה and הנה. See also 1 Sam. xvii. 32; where יד is by the LXX rendered κυριος μου, and was therefore read by them יד; which, perhaps, was the true reading. And there is a remarkable instance of this change, in two words succeeding each other; or rather, in the same proper name repeated (or intended to be repeated) in Ruth iv. 20, 21, And Amminadab begat Nahshon, and Nahshon begat Salmah, and Salmah begat Boaz, &c.

Chron. και Σοββοχαι ο Ασωθει,

Sam. εκ των υιων του Ασωθειτου.

Here is a very considerable difference between the two expressions of this proper name, in the English version, and a still greater in some of the ancient versions. In the English this hero is called Mebunnai in Samuel, and in Chronicles Sibbecai. The English translators here express the two words, exactly according to the Masoretical pointing; but the name is evidently corrupted in Samuel by a mistake of two very similar letters סב for סב. For, there being no such Biblical name elsewhere as Mebunnai, the LXX, in the Alexand. and Vat. copies, do not acknowledge it for a proper name here; but render it εκ των υιων, which makes no sense, and therefore cannot be admitted; and besides it occasions a deficiency of a proper name.

The Ald. Edition of the LXX reads Σαβουχαι also in Samuel; which alone is a strong presumption that Sibbecai was the true name. But this is put out of all doubt, as soon as we observe, that this same hero, called Sibbecai the Hushathite here in Chronicles, is called also Sibbecai the Hushathite in chapter the 27th of this same book; where he is celebrated as the eighth captain in waiting upon the king. And lastly, his two names are expressed exactly in the same manner in 2 Sam. xxi. 18; and in 1 Chron. xx. 4.

The English version is, Sibbecai the Hushathite.

צִלְמוֹן הַחֹחִי Sam.

Chron. Ηλι ο Αχωρ,

Sam. Σελμων ο Ελωιτης.

The local or family name of this mighty man being here the same both in Samuel and Chronicles, we may safely infer, that his proper name also, in these two corresponding places, in the very same part of the catalogue, was originally the same in both (like every other hero's here mentioned) though at present the proper name in Samuel differs greatly from that in Chronicles. Neither of these words (I believe) occurs elsewhere in the Bible, as the name of a man; and there seems therefore to be no other way of determining what was the real proper name here, but by referring to the LXX; to learn from thence, whether the corruption of this name be צִלְמוֹן Zalmon from עִילֵי Ilai, or the contrary.

The name Ilai is regularly and uniformly rendered Ηλι in all the copies of the LXX, and in all the ancient versions, in Chronicles. But in Samuel the copies are confused. The Vatican reads Ελλων, the beginning of which word intimates it to have been originally the same with Ηλι. In the Alexandrian copy, the original name being lost, it is supplied by Σελλωμ in the margin, and Σελμων (in a small character) in the text, taken from some later translation. This therefore we may fairly suppose to have been the version of the proper name in Samuel, as it stood at the time of that later translation; after the true name, which we find uniformly in the original and the versions of Chronicles, had been corrupted. And the corruption will more readily be supposed in this name in Samuel, on account of the evident corruption there of the name immediately preceding, and the preservation of the true name in Chronicles.

That the two principal letters in these two words, v and z, may have been mistaken for each other, is easy to infer from their forms; the difference between them being only the turn of the bottom stroke, either returned horizontally, as in the latter, or drawn below the line a little obliquely, as in the former. And that these two letters have been elsewhere mistaken for each other, appears from 2 Kings xx. 4; where דַּעֲרִי Urbi is corrupted from אַדְרִי Atrium.

The English version is, Ilai, the Ahohite.

That the name of this mighty man was originally Heled, as it is now expressed in Chronicles, and not Heleb, as in Samuel, is plain from 1 Chron. xxvii. 15; where he is recorded as the twelfth captain in waiting on the king. It is there indeed writ, with a yod added at the end; which small letter is frequently found to have been added improperly in other places, and in words less likely to be mistaken: see the word נִשְׁאֵר ferens, in the 37th verse of this chapter of Samuel.

The original and the versions not only agree to read Heled here in Chronicles, but in Samuel also the Complutensian text has חִלְדָּן Heled, and it is there also Heled in the Vulgate. In Samuel, in the Vatican copy of the LXX, this name with the three words following it is entirely omitted (from the cause frequently before observed, the repetition of the word Νετωφαθι or Νετωφαθιτης), and in the present Alexandrian copy, the words foisted in are far from agreeing with the original words, which are regular and uniform in the corresponding places; excepting the common omission of a vau again in Samuel, and the mistake of a ב for a ד, a mistake, which has also been made in Josh. xv. 47; where we have נֶבֶל terminus instead of מַגְנָס magnus; and in Ezek. xl. 2, סגב, a meridie, was read by the LXX סגב, ex adverso.

The proper name here may reasonably be presumed to have been איתי Ithai, as in Chronicles ; which distinguishes this mighty man of Gibeah from איתי Ittai the Gittite, who came to David long after his possession of the throne (2 Sam. xv. 19) and therefore could not be one of those mighty men, who adhered to David in his humbler fortune, and whose valour contributed to make him king למלכתי ; as is observed of them by the author of Chronicles in this chapter, at the 10th verse.

It is probable then, that this name should have been expressed in Samuel, as we find it in Chronicles. And that it was originally writ in Chronicles with a double yod, as at present, seems evident from the Vatican copy of the LXX, which renders it Αιυ instead of Αιυι ; and in the Complutensian copy it is Ιθαυ. But the copies of the LXX in Samuel are evidently confused. In the Vatican the words are very improperly translated Εσθαι υιος Ριβα εκ Γαβαθ υιος Βενιαμιν του Εφραθαιου ; and in the Alexandrian the words have been lost ; but both these copies agree at present in making the place here unintelligible, by rendering the word בני, υιος : whereas the least reflection must have told them, that υιος there was applicable to no name preceding, and that Gibeah was a town, belonging to the sons of Benjamin. It has been already observed indeed (page 168) that this name should be Benaiah, and not Benaihu ; that being the proper name of the illustrious hero, who was the second general of the second ternary. The ו therefore, which is redundant at the end of the proper name here in Samuel, is certainly part of the ה, which is lost at the beginning of the local name, which name is defective for want of that emphatic article.

Several of the preceding names having been mistaken in Samuel, and their true readings preserved in Chronicles, we may be inclined from thence to think, that the defect continues to be in the same catalogue ; consequently that הדי Hiddai has been corrupted (as it easily might) from ודי, or (the vau omitted) הדי Hurai. The Syriac and Arabic versions would incline one to prefer Hiddai ; but the Greek versions uniformly declaring for Hurai in Chronicles ; and, though they are confused and broken in Samuel, yet the Ald. copy there also reading Ουρι, that name seems to deserve the preference.

Chron. Αβιηλ ο Σαραβεθθαι,

Sam. Αβιελβων ο Αρωσθαι

The true reading here seems to be that in Samuel, Abialbon ; since we can more easily conceive three original letters to have been carelessly dropped by a transcriber, than three letters to have been arbitrarily and rashly inserted, where there seems to have been no assignable reason. The particles א and ל appear to have been frequently mistaken in other places, on account of their nearly similar pronunciation; see pages 144 and 176. The last syllable of the proper name in Chronicles seems to have been formerly detached, as עלכ in some of our printed copies is from אמי; and therefore might easily be taken for בן, filius. And בן, filius might be omitted by some injudicious transcriber, as unnecessary before a local name; since the article ה, prefixed to such a name is found to be equivalent to, and supply the place of the word בן in other places: see two instances in these very chapters, page 82; and another, page 209.

That this really was the case seems greatly confirmed by the Syriac and Arabic versions, which have both rendered the word in Chronicles by Abiel filius. This they certainly would not have done, if the word had been only אביאל, Abiel, as it is at present; but it is extremely probable, their copies read the word בן, (which, with the vau omitted, will be bon;) and that this syllable was writ at some distance, as a distinct word: and lastly, that being a distinct word, it was afterwards injudiciously omitted for the reason before assigned. The local name is exactly the same in both copies.

Chron. Αζμωθ ο Βαρσαμι,

Sam. Ασμωθ ο Βαρωμιτης·

The proper name of this mighty man being exactly the same in both places, we need only remark here, that his local name is in Chronicles the Baharumite, and in Samuel the Barhumite; which difference is owing to a transposition of the two letters ח and ר: and, as the name of the place from whence this hero is denominated was probably בחרים, Bahurim (2 Sam. iii. 16) that in Chronicles seems to be the true local name. And indeed the Syriac and Arabic versions seem to have read these two letters right; the former rendering the local name here by ex Hurim, and the latter by filius Hurim.

This transposition of two letters will be admitted without the least difficulty by such, as have observed the much greater transpo-sitions of letters, that have been made elsewhere by the carelessness of the Jewish transcribers; and we cannot easily suppose a greater transposition, or inversion of the letters of a word, than what we find 2 Sam. xi. 3, and 1 Chron. iii. 5. In the former place we read of Bathsheba (בר שבע) Uriah's wife, that she was the daughter of אליעם, Eliam; and in the latter place, these four (Solomon, &c.) were born to David by Bathsheba (בר שבע, Bathshua) the daughter of אמיאל, Ammiel.

As there is nothing observable here on the names of this mighty man in the original text, we may just remark (on account of the different termination of his local name in the two Greek chapters) that the learned seem to have drawn an unanswerable argument against the Greek versions being the work of one man, or the work of many concurring in the same method of translating, from that great difference, which is found through the several books of the Old Testament, in the Greek expression of the very same proper names. For in this, and the adjoining verses, we see that the translator of Chronicles renders the local names by a literal expression of the Hebrew words; but the translator of Samuel gives them a Greek termination. Hence in the former we have verse 28, Θεκωι; in the latter, verse 26, Θεκωιτης, and afterwards Αναθωθι, Αναθωθιτης—Νετωφαθι, Νετωφαθιτης—Φαραθωνι, Φαραθωνιτης—Βαρσαμι, Βαρωμιτης—Σαλαβωνι, Σαλαβωνιτης, &c.

The Hebrew copies of this place are at present corrupted in Chronicles, and very imperfect in Samuel; and there is no ancient version, which has rightly preserved the original reading. We must therefore attend carefully to the words themselves; and the more care will be here necessary, as the Jews have rendered this corrupted place more perplexed by making the verse end in Samuel at the word Jonathan. That the verse could not end with this word originally, will be soon evident; and perhaps the best method of resettling and illustrating this very difficult passage may be to discover first, what connexion the name Jonathan has with the words preceding or following.

We read 2 Sam. xxi. 21, that יִדְנָה בֶן שָׁמְחָה (which the marginal Keri tells us should be שָׁמְחָה אֲדִיר Jonathan, the son of Shamha, the brother of David, slew the great giant, that had six fingers on each hand, &c., and in 1 Chron. xx. 7, we find the same exploit of the same warrior יִדְנָה בֶן שָׁמְחָה אֲדִיר Jonathan the son of Shamha, the brother of David. Jonathan being then so deservedly celebrated in both these places; and being celebrated in Chronicles in company with Sibbecai, who slew the giant Saph (or Sippai) and in Samuel not only with Sibbecai but Abishai also, both of whom are found in the honourable catalogue of David's mighty men, we might reasonably expect to find Jonathan also in the same catalogue, especially as he was David's brother's son. And there seems to be now no room for doubting of his being so recorded in the words of the two chapters at present under consideration.

For the proper name Jonathan is preserved in Samuel exactly the same as in the two other passages just referred to; and in Chronicles, with the omission only of a single letter. The name of Jonathan's father is expressed a little differently; but yet so, that we can easily see it was the same patronymic as in the two preceding passages. In Chronicles here it is שָׁמַי, and in Samuel שָׁמְחָה; and in the two other passages it is שָׁמְחָה. Not that this name of David's brother is always expressed שָׁמְחָה; but he is twice elsewhere called שָׁמַי. And from hence it is evident, that the catalogue in Samuel expresses the name exactly according to this latter form; and the catalogue in Chronicles according to the former, שָׁמַי corruptly written for שָׁמְחָה, as it occurs in a third place, 1 Chron. ii. 13.

The authorities therefore of the printed copies being nearly equal (from the number of places) where this name occurs; we cannot determine absolutely, which was the true original name שָׁמַי or שָׁמְחָה: and perhaps it may be proper to prefer the latter, as it will the more effectually distinguish this mighty man from שָׁמַי, Shammah, the son of אָגֵי Agee, the Hararite, recorded in this catalogue as the third general of the first series of three. The name Jonathan then being certainly connected with the words which follow it, we see how absurdly the termination of this verse has been fixed; and we shall soon see (what is much more material to our purpose) how to understand the words preceding Jonathan, as they are to make complete sense by themselves.

The three words to be now considered are, in Chronicles, בְּנֵי הָשֵׁם דְּנֹחִי, which in Samuel are strangely reduced to two, בְּנֵי שֵׁן. It scarce needs observation, that the words *fili Jase*n cannot contain the name of any man; and that the words fili hashem Gizonita do not much mend the matter. The first word then must have been originally בֶּן, filius, as it is at present rendered uos in the Vatican copy of the LXX in Chronicles; or the preposition mem must be understood at the beginning, or have been originally prefixed (but dropped in transcribing, as the same letter mem is before בִּז in the 24th verse of this chapter of Samuel; see page 197) and then the word will signify ex filiis.

The word immediately following must be the name of the father, Of the sons of—Jashen, in Samuel; but Hashem in Chronicles. And of these two words, we may prefer the last, as more likely to be genuine, because no Greek version acknowledges the yod at the beginning, because it is likely that the yod in Samuel is part of the he in Chronicles, as it is in other places; (Isaiah liii. 10, הָיָה, morbo affecit instead of הָיָה; Hosea vi. 9, חָכִי, exspectare instead of חָכִי, &c.), and because there is so great a mistake in Samuel as the omission of the next long word in Chronicles, 'tis more probable that the mistake in the preceding letter has been made also in Samuel; especially as the num is more likely to be a corruption of the mem, than the contrary.

The two first words being בְּנֵי הָשֵׁם, of the sons of Hashem, the only remaining difficulty is to ascertain the signification of the third word דַּשֵׁן. If this word be supposed to signify (what it usually is supposed to signify) the Gizonite, it must then be applied to the patronymic Hashem; the consequence of which will be, that we shall have no proper name of this mighty man at all. This word therefore, which occurs nowhere else as a Gizonite, must have been a proper name; and accordingly the LXX in the Alex. and Ald. copies give us ο Γουσι, and the Complutensian edition ο Γουσι: and, though this name is entirely omitted in the present Hebrew text of Samuel, yet the Ald. Copy of the LXX there also reads ο Γουσι, as in Chronicles.

There can be then but little room for doubting, whether this be the proper name of our hero; especially, as this is a literal version of the word דַּשֵׁן; excepting the change of a י into a ו, two letters so similar, that it is frequently very difficult to distinguish them. And that this is a biblical name appears from 1 Chron. v. 15, where we have the proper name דַּשֵׁן; which may be the same name, with one vau omitted as an holem (so very frequently the case elsewhere) and indeed we find this word exactly so rendered by the LXX, Vatican edition, Γουσι, Alexandrian, Γουσι. That the article ה is sometimes prefixed to a proper name, is evident from Josh. i. 12; where we read דַּשֵׁן, Manasseh.

The English version is, Gouni, of the sons of Hashem; Jonathan, the son of Shamha, the Hararite.

As there is a mistake in the name of this hero's father, occasioned by the likeness of a כ and a ר, it is probable, that שָׁכַר in Chronicles is right; as we find a person of that name in 1 Chron. xxvi. 4; whereas the name שָׁרַר never, perhaps, occurs elsewhere. That the corruption has been in Samuel, we may farther presume from the Bomberg edition having there in the margin שָׁרַר. The local title has also the wrong letter in Samuel; as we may infer from the hero immediately preceding being also an Hararite; and because the name there, both in Samuel and

Chron. Μεχουραβί,

Sam. Μαχαταιου*

We have here a very remarkable difference in the two catalogues, and the difference is evidently owing to a corruption of the original names in Chronicles. For according to Samuel there is given us only one mighty man, but in Chronicles we have two; but two cannot possibly be included in these words, because the catalogue will be then made to contain more worthies than thirty-seven, which is the number expressly said to be contained in it. And it must be observed, that the long words in Samuel are exactly preserved, and expressed here just as they occur in other places, Eliphelet, which frequently occurs; but Eliphah, I believe, never; and so the local name Maacathite, which we find expressed the same in 2 Kings xxv. 23.

The variation of the several copies of the LXX here in Chronicles is very observable, Alexandrian, Ἐλιφάαλ; Vatican, Ἐλφάρ; Ald., Ζιφάαλ; Complutensian, Ἐλιφάλ;—Alexandrian, Ὠραφὲρ; Vatican, Θυροφάρ; Ald., Ὠρ, Ἀφὲρ; Complutensian Ὠρ, Ἀφάρ;—Alexand., Μεχουραβί; Vatican, Μεχωραβρι. We may take notice, that the Syriac and Arabic versions seem to have read the last name without the article prefixed π מַעַצְרִי, by rendering it qui de Maacath, and ex Maacath; and it has been already observed in pages 82 and 192, that the noun בן prefixed to a name does not always imply, that the name following expresses the father of the person preceding; but that it sometimes expresses the place or division of the country, in which the person before mentioned was born or dwelt. Wherefore it seems more likely, that this last name was here intended to express Eliphelet's or his father's local name, than the name of his grandfather; the mention of whom does not seem to be particularly necessary in this place. As to the present corruption of the letters here in Chronicles from their correspondent letters in Samuel; if we compare them, we may easily trace the manner of the several alterations, the מ at the end of the first word in Chronicles, is in Samuel omitted—the ו and ר in מַעַצְרִי are parts of the two letters מ and צ in מַעַצְרִי, the word מַעַצְרִי is corrupted from מַעַצְרִי, and in the last word the ר is mistaken for ז and transposed. That the corruption here has been properly attributed to Chronicles, will be farther evident; when we consider the next words, and find the corruption continue to be in the same copy.

The English version is, Eliphelet, the son of Ahasbai, the Maacathite.

The three long words here in Samuel occurring regularly, and being expressed in other places with the very same letters; we may presume them to be properly preserved in this place. Chronicles also, having here less in its copy, is probably, on that account also, corrupted; since it is a confessed maxim with all good critics, that a sentence, or a word, or a letter, may much more easily be omitted than added; and especially, where there can be no particular reason to influence the transcriber. It need only be added, that the proper name here, which has been changed in the Alexandrian edition to Ελιαβ, is in the Complutensian edition Ελιαμ; as it is in the Hebrew text, and in all the other ancient versions.

Sam. Ασαραι ο Καρμηλιος.

The proper name is חצרו, Hetzro, in both the Hebrew copies at present; but probably was originally חצרי, Hetzrai. For it is at present חצרי in the text of the Complutensian edition; it is חצרי in the margin of the Bomberg, and the other editions of the Hebrew Bible; it is not only חצרי in the Targum on Samuel, but also חצרי in the Chaldee Paraphrase on Chronicles, published by Dr. Wilkins; it is rendered Hetzri or Hetzrai, in all the ancient versions, except the Vulgate, which reads Hezro; and we find it Asra among the various readings of the Latin translation by St. Jerome, lately published by Blanchini, in his Vindiciæ Canon Scripturarum Vulg., &c., Romæ, 1740.

We may observe here, that the Alexandrian and Vatican editions of the LXX agree in reading the local name here with a λ in Samuel (which is right) and with a δ in Chronicles; and it may be proper to remark the cause of this mistake, as it will frequently lead us to discover the cause of mistakes in the present copies of the LXX in other places. Montfaucon, in his preface to Origen's Hexapla, tells us, page 44, that in Origen's time and for some ages after, the Greek Bibles were writ in capital letters without accents; and in that large character there being many letters very similar, they were frequently mistaken for each other; and hence arose a great number of various readings. The letters, which he mentions as most similar, and consequently most frequently mistaken, are, Α Δ Λ—Ε Θ C—and M N. Thus as to the three first, in Judg. i. 31, אַלֶּב, Ααλαβ was writ in some copies, Δαλαφ; Psalm xxxi. 16, וַיִּשָּׂא, οι Κληροι μου, was by some transcribers writ οι Καυροι μου; and hence Καρμηλι has been changed into Καρμηδι in our present text of Chronicles.

The English version is, Hetzrai, the Carmelite.

Chron. Νοορα υιος Αἰβι,

Sam. Φαραει Αραχειυις.

The proper name of this mighty man is probably corrupted also in Samuel; principally because the Syriac and Arabic versions of Samuel call him Gari, which is a strong presumption that the copies, which they were translated from, read גרי; and the נ and the פ are so much alike, that it is difficult to distinguish them, unless they are very accurately expressed. Besides, the corruption will be the more easily admitted in the first word in Samuel, because the second word seems to be corrupted there also. For if the family or local name of this worthy was really Arbite, it would then have been writ, not נארי, but נאריב, as we find the place Arba writ ארבע, Joshua xxi. 11.

The copies of the LXX are very confused in Samuel. The Alexandrian translates נארי, Αραχειυις; and the Vatican renders the two names by a very strange conjunction of letters in one word του Ουπαιοερχει; from both which versions we may learn, that the authors of them read another letter different from what it is at present, and that is a כ for a נ. נאריב. But that the present reading with a beth is right, we may infer from its being a beth in the word in Chronicles; and from its being rendered Αρβι in the Ald. copy of the LXX we may infer also, that the resh in Samuel was originally a Zain; which makes the two words the very same, excepting, that here again we have the word בן, filius in one copy answering to the article ה prefixed in the other; as has been frequently before observed.

The preceding extraordinary version of the words נאריב נארי by one barbarous term Ουπαιοερχει makes one apply to many of the proper names here and elsewhere that severe censure, which St. Jerome (in his epistle to Domnio and Rogatian) has passed upon the transcribers of the Book of Chronicles, Liberè enim vobis loquor: ita in Græcis et Latinis codicibus hic nomen liber vitiosus est, ut non tam Hebræa quam barbara quædam et Sarmatica nomina conjecta arbi-trandum sit. Hoc scriptorum culpæ adscribendum, dum de emendatis inemendata scriptitant; et sæpe hic tria nomina, sub- tractis e medio syllabis, in unum vocabulum cogunt; vel e regione unum nomen, propter latitudinem suam, in duo vel tria vocabula dividunt. And if this should not be the genuine epistle of St. Jerome, as there are some who question it; yet, in that undoubted epistle of his to Chromatius, by way of preface to the same Book of Chronicles, he begins with asserting the great corruption of the several copies of the LXX, Si Septuaginta interpretum pura, et ut ab eis in Græcum versa est, editio permaneret; sepeflus me, Chromatius, impelleres, ut Hebræa volumina Latino sermone transferrem. But let us return from this hint, or rather from this unanswerable authority, as to the corruptions in the Greek translation of the LXX; which it may have been the more proper to observe, on account of the confidence with which some would securely depend upon it, as truly expressing at present the sense of the divine original.

The English version is, Naarai, the son of Azbai.

Sam. μωω, υιος Γαδδι.

In these words are evidently included the names of two mighty men, concerning whom it is difficult to know what to determine; since not only the two original copies, but the versions also vary considerably. The safest rule, when two copies disagree in a case of so obscure a nature (as the bare mention of a warrior's name in the days of David must be to us at this distance of time) seems to be, to determine in favour of that copy, which has the agreement of a greater number of the ancient versions. This seems to be the safest rule in all cases, where the names are not elsewhere repeated in the Hebrew text; and where we are not contradicted by the nature of the original language, or by some accidental circumstances in the history.

The proper name of the first mighty man in Chronicles יואל, Joel, is in Samuel יגאל, Igal; two words, which differ only in one letter; the vau being mistaken for the similar letter gimel, or the contrary. Joel is a common scriptural name; one, the prince of the half tribe of Manasseh, Joel, the son of Pedaiiah, 1 Chron. xxvii. 20; and another, Joel, the son of Jehieli, one of David's lords of the treasury, 1 Chron. xxvi. 22. Joel then being the name of some considerable men in David's time; and Igal occurring (perhaps) but once, as the name of a contemporary with Joshua, Numb. xiii. 7; it is probable from hence, that the former was the true name of the hero here celebrated. And another circumstance in favour of Joel is, that all the ancient versions agree in reading Joel in Chronicles; but they vary very much as to Igal in Samuel, the Alexandrian and Vatican copies of the LXX Γααλ, both omitting what is now the first letter, the Ald. Γαλλα, and the Complutensian Iγααλ, the Vulgate Igaal, and the Chaldean Igal, but the Syriac and Arabic versions read it widely different Neael.

The next point is, whether Joel was the brother of Nathan, or his son; and it is probable, that the former was true. First, because it was very easy for a careless transcriber to write son instead of brother, Joel the son of Nathan; the son of being the common connexion of two proper names; but the brother of, being a relation very seldom expressed, can hardly be imagined to have been set down by a transcriber, unless it had been so expressed in the copy from whence he was transcribing. Besides, Joel being no where recorded as the son of Nathan, but in the place under consideration; and one of the name in David's time being expressly mentioned, as the son of Pedaiiah, and another of Jehieli: it is probable on this account, that Nathan was not Joel's father, but his brother: and so the second error in Samuel accompanies the first.

As to the next word, the sense of that will depend upon the two words that follow it. For if the two last words completely express the proper and local (or family) name of another mighty man, as in Samuel, then the word מצבה in Samuel must belong to two words preceding: consequently, if the two last words were originally incomplete, as at present in Chronicles, the son of Haggeri; the word מצור in Chronicles must be then the proper name, and precede the two words following.

Let us begin with the last word; which in Samuel is דגירי, the Gadite, but in Chronicles דגרי, Haggeri, which perhaps occurs no where else in the Bible as a proper name. The ancient versions unanimously (except the Ald. copy of the LXX) declare for the present reading in Samuel. But in Chronicles the versions are very disagreeing; and (which seems sufficient to determine in favour of Samuel) the Syr. and the Arab. versions of Chronicles evidently read the last word as in Samuel: for the Syriac version of these three words is מלכס מכד ומן נר, and the Arabic, ومكعد الذي من غدو.

These two versions of Chronicles agreeing with the several versions of Samuel, in the present reading of the last word in Samuel דגירי, the Gadite; we may conclude that to have been the originally true word.

But if this last word be the Gadite, the two preceding words cannot be supposed to have been מברך בן, Mibhar the son of; for what propriety is there in saying, Mibhar the son of the Gadite? And it may be remarked, as a farther proof that the word מברך, Mibhar, has been corrupted; that the Syriac and Arabic versions read it מכד, Michad; the Complutensian edition of the LXX Μααβap, and the Vatican, Μεβααλ. It is probable then, that the true reading was Bani the Gadite, as we have it at present in Samuel; as a consequence of which concession, we must allow מברך in Chron. (which we see has been corrupted, and read different ways) to have been originally מצבה ex Tzobd, as at present in Chronicles.

The famous Lud. Cappellus, in his Critica Sacra, page 20, observes on this passage, 1 Chron. xi. 38; 2 Sam. xxiii. 36: Qui duo loci paralleli medicâ manu egere videntur. He then mentions the disagreements of the verses, without attempting to correct the words that are corrupted, until he comes to מברך בן דגירי in Samuel, which words should be (he says) מצבה בן דגירי as at present in Chronicles.

The English version is, Joel, the brother of Nathan, of Tzobah; Bani, the Gadite.

Sam. Ιωαβ υιου Σαρουας

The proper name of this worthy is regularly the same in both Samuel and Chronicles; and is distinguished from another worthy already mentioned (page 209) by a difference in the second letter of his name. The local name being properly expressed in Samuel, an α is omitted in it in Chronicles. The participle נשא has a yod very improperly added at the end of it in Samuel; and as this is the least of all the Hebrew letters, so there are many instances of its being improperly inserted elsewhere, the transcribers of the ancient manuscripts having probably taken for a yod what was only part of some adjoining letter.

I shall mention two very remarkable places, where this yod has been inserted improperly; though in these the insertion of it may possibly have been made, not from chance, but by design. The Jewish transcribers have added the yod improperly, at the end of the noun דרר in that famous prophecy of the Psalmist, Psalm cx. 4; Thou art a priest for ever, על דרר after the order of Melchizedek: which place has been excellently illustrated by Mr. Langford in his late Objections to a Pamphlet intitled Critical Notes on Scripture. But according to the present reading, the sense and force of this text (on which the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews expatiates so much) sinks into just nothing; for the literal version of the words now is, Tu es sacerdos in æternum, secundum ordinem μεμ Melchizedek.

There is also another text of equal consequence, where the strong reasoning of the apostles St. Peter and St. Paul is invalidated by the improper insertion of this same letter, in Psalm xvi. 10; Thou shalt not leave my soul in hell, neither shalt thou suffer (thy holy one, according to all the versions; but, if we adhere literally to the printed Hebrew copies, which have this yod inserted, it will be) thy saints to see corruption: as the same word חסיד is rendered in Psalm lii. 9; lxxix. 2; cxxxii. 9; cxlv. 10. But, not to multiply instances of the improper insertion of this letter, these may be sufficient to show the reasonableness and necessity of expunging it in some other places, as it ought to be in the verse now under consideration. And these instances may perhaps put all serious Christians upon deliberating, whether they should any longer maintain the absolute integrity of the present Hebrew text.

The English version is, Naharai, the Beerothite, the armour-bearer of Joab the son of Zeruiah.

Ged.—39 In all thirty-seven.] Josephus says they were thirty-eight: but as he names only the first five, we can draw no help from him as to the rest. In Chronicles the number is still greater, amounting to fifty-three at least. See the notes on 1 Chron. xi. 10, &c. It may be wondered that Joab is not here mentioned: but, as Michaëlis well remarks, it is only personal strength and superior bravery, not rank and subordination, that are here attended to. Joab was general in chief; but might be much inferior to those worthies in personal valour. Some interpreters, however, think he is to be understood as at the head of the list. See Kennicott's "Second Dissertation on the State of the Hebrew text."

Au. Ver.—1 And again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he [Satan, see 1 Chron. xxi. 1] moved David against them to say, Go, number Israel and Judah.

Pool.—He moved David. He: who? Either, 1. Satan, as is expressed, 1 Chron.

xxi. 1. Or, 2. God; who is said, in like manner, to stir up Saul against David, 1 Sam. xxvi. 19, and to turn the hearts of the Egyptians to hate his people, Psalm cv. 25, and to make men to err from his ways, Isaiah lxiii. 17, and to send strong delusions, &c., and to harden their hearts. All which expressions are not so to be understood, as if God did work these sinful dispositions; which neither was necessary, because they are naturally in every man's heart, nor possible for the holy God to do; but because he permits them, and withdraws his grace and all restraints and hindrances from them, and giveth occasions and advantages to them; and directs their thoughts to such objects as may indeed be innocently thought of, which yet he knows they will wickedly abuse; and give them up to Satan, who he knows will deceive and entice them to such and such sins; which being tempted to do by Satan, and being effected by their own wicked hearts, he so orders and overrules, that they shall be punishments for their former sins. Against them, i. e., for Israel's punishment. To say, or, saying. For this may be referred, either, 1. To God, of whom the same expression is used 2 Sam. xvi. 10, The Lord said to Shimei, Curse David; which in both places is not to be understood of any command or impulse of God, but of his secret providence disposing things in manner here above expressed. Or, 2. To David; he moved David to say, to wit, to Joab, as he did, ver. 2.

Bp. Patrick.—He moved David against them.] Or, "David was moved;" that is, by Satan, as it is expounded in the first book of the Chronicles xxi. 1. But Abarbinel thinks it is as if he had said, The anger of the Lord, which was kindled against Israel, moved David, &c. That is, the same sin which made God angry with Israel, was the cause that David was seduced in this thing, that they might be punished.

Dr. A. Clarke.—He moved David against them.] God could not be angry with David for numbering the people if he moved him to do it; but in the parallel place (1 Chron. xxi. 1) it is expressly said, Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David to number Israel. David, in all probability, slackening in his piety and confidence toward God, and meditating some extension of his dominions without the divine counsel or command, was naturally curious to know whether the number of fighting men in his empire was sufficient for the work which he had projected. See more on ver. 10. He therefore orders Joab and the captains to take an exact account of all the effective men in Israel and Judah. God is justly displeased with this conduct, and determines that the props of his vain ambition shall be taken away, either by famine, war, or pestilence.

Ged.—He set David against them, &c. In Chronicles, it is Satan (the adversary) who suggests this idea to David. It comes, however, to the same thing. In the Hebrew theology, God is immediately, or mediately, the author of every event good or bad. The writer of Chronicles seems only to have softened the expression by making Satan the immediate agent. For the rest, it is not easy to see in what David's guilt consisted. It is plain, however, from the context, that the measure was unpopular, and disagreeable even to the courtiers themselves. Perhaps David wished to wage new wars, and make new conquests, at the expense of the people's tranquillity; and may be to impose a capitation tax.

Booth.—1 And the anger of Jehovah was again kindled against Israel, because an adversary stood up against Israel, and moved David against them to say, Go number Israel and Judah.

Because an adversary.] It is not usual to mention the anger of God, without stating the cause of it; but as the text now stands, God is angry, and his anger leads him to move David to number the people. The words preserved in the parallel place give us this cause. "Because an adversary," perhaps one of David's wicked counsellors, moved him, and he complied with the suggestion, so as to say, "Go, &c."

Prof. Lee's Gram., Art. 230, 13.—It ought to be remembered, that the Orientals of this family generally enounce their propositions vaguely, and then add the restricting or defining terms (Art. 216, 4.). When, therefore, the leading term happens to be a verb, its qualifying term or nominative will immediately follow; as, אֱלֹהִים בָּרָא, he created, i. e., God. If, however, it be intended to leave the passage indefinite, as in English, some one said, or in French on dit; no such nominative will be added: and the greatest care ought to be taken in supplying it: e. g. Isaiah ix. 5, וְיִשְׁעוּ וְיִשְׁעוּ, and he, (i. e., some one, any one, or every one) calls his name, Ps. cx. 7; מְצֹאֵי מַיִם יְצִיאוּךָ, from the torrent (i. e., the abundance of spiritual waters which shall then abound) in the way, shall one (any one, every one) drink: 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, מְצֹאֵי מַיִם, so (one, some one) tempts David; which is supplied, 1 Chron. xxi. 1, by יָצָא, an adversary. We must not, therefore, take the name of God found in the preceding context, in order to supply this ellipsis, as some have imprudently done, nor charge the text with the inconsistencies which have arisen purely out of our own ignorance. This sort of construction frequently occurs. So also in the objective voice, הָאֵלֹהִים, it hath been called to thee, i. e., thou hast been named, Isaiah xlviii. 8, equivalent to the Arabic يُقَالُ. See also v. 11, הָאֵלֹהִים, how would it be profaned?

καὶ ἔδωκεν Ἰωάβ τὸν ἀριθμὸν τῆς ἐπισκέψεως τοῦ λαοῦ πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα· καὶ ἐγένετο Ἰσραὴλ, ὀκτακόσκιαι χιλιάδες ἀνδρῶν δυνάμει σπωμένων ῥομφαίαν· καὶ ἀνὴρ Ἰούδα, πεντακόσκιαι χιλιάδες ἀνδρῶν μαχητῶν.

Au. Ver.—9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Israel eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

Pool.—Eight hundred thousand. Object. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5, they are numbered 1,100,000. Answ. The sum here expressed is only of such as were not in the ordinary and settled militia waiting upon the king, which being 24,000 for every month, as is largely related, 1 Chron. xxvii., amounts to 288,000, which either with their several commanders, or with the soldiers placed in several garrisons, might very well make up 300,000. Or 288,000 may pass in such accounts for 300,000; it being frequent in such great sums to neglect a smaller number. But in the Book of the Chronicles, which was to gather up the fragments omitted in the former books, both sorts are put together, and so they amount to 1,100,000. Five hundred thousand. In 1 Chron. xxi. 5, but 470,000. Ans. Either, 1. They were exactly no more, but are called 500,000 in a round sum, as is usual in Scripture and other authors. Or, 2. The garrison soldiers, and such as were employed in other services about the king, are here included, which are there excluded. Or, 3. They were 500,000 when Joab gave up the number to the king, though presently after that they were but 470,000; 30,000 being slain by the plague in the tribe of Judah; which being David's own tribe, it was but just and fit it should suffer more than the rest for this sin. And though it be true that Joab gave up the sum before the plague begun, yet the sacred penman of the Book of Chronicles thought fit to make a defalcation of them who had been swept away by the plague, that the judgment of God therein might be observed. Or, 4. There are included here the 30,000 which belonged to the thirty colonels mentioned chap. xxiii., who are excluded 1 Chron. xxi., although it be questionable whether those were all of the tribe of Judah.

Bp. Patrick.—The men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.] There is a great difference between this account and that in the Chronicles. For there (1 Chron. xxi. 5), the men of Israel are said to be three hundred thousand more than are here mentioned; and, on the contrary, the men of Judah are said to be thirty thousand less. Of the former of which there is a plain account, that in this book the standing legions are not numbered: which were very well known, they serving under twelve commanders so many months (1 Chron. xxvii. 1, &c.); but in the book of the Chronicles all these are taken into the number there mentioned. For the Jews observe in Halicoth Olam, that there being twenty-four thousand who waited every month (which makes in all two hundred eighty-eight thousand), allowing a thousand officers (as we cannot well allow less) to every twenty-four thousand, there will be twelve thousand wanting; which added to the eight hundred eighty-eight thousand, make just three hundred thousand: which, added to the eight hundred thousand here mentioned, make up the eleven hundred thousand mentioned in the Chronicles. The like account Bochartus gives of the next difficulty, that if twenty-four thousand legionary soldiers be added of the tribe of Judah to the four hundred and seventy thousand, it comes near to five hundred thousand (Hieroz., par. i., lib. ii., cap. 38). But others think there is no need of this; it being usual in Scripture to mention a round sum: either of men or of years, when some were wanting. So that though there were no more than four hundred and seventy thousand, yet they might be said to be five hundred thousand. Or, as they say in Halicoth Olam., the tribe of Benjamin (who were neighbours to Judah) are reckoned here in this book, who were omitted in the Chronicles (1 Chron. xxi. 6).

Bp. Horsley.—The numbers in 1 Chron. xxi. 5, are more probable, viz., "Israel, eleven hundred thousand—Judah, four hundred and seventy thousand."

Dr. A. Clarke.—In Israel eight hundred thousand—the men of Judah were five hundred thousand.] In the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 5, the sums are widely different: in Israel one million one hundred thousand, in Judah four hundred and seventy thousand. Neither of these sums is too great, but they cannot be both correct; and which is the true number is difficult to say. The former seems the most likely; but more corruptions have taken place in the numbers of the historical books of the Old Testament, than in any other part of the sacred records. To attempt to reconcile them in every part is lost labour; better at once acknowledge what cannot be successfully denied, that although the original writers of the Old Testament wrote under the influence of the Divine Spirit, yet we are not told that the same influence descended on all copiers of their words, so as absolutely to prevent them from making mistakes. They might mistake, and they did mistake; but a careful collation of the different historical books serves to correct all essential errors of the scribes. See the Dissertations of Dr. Kennicott.

Houb.—9 שמה מאות, Octingenta (millia). 1 Par. xxi. 5 legitur undecies centena millia, quæ duæ scripturæ simul stare non possunt, de qua re vide quæ dicimus ad locum supra-but Bochartus also here read three years, following the LXX. who have ἐτη τρία, whom most of the ancients follow, as Bochartus observes in his Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 38. Yet Josephus here hath seven years: and many think that Gad at first propounded seven years: but afterward, at David's prayer, shortened them to three. Other solutions are in every interpreter, who adheres to this reading of seven years (see Buxtorf's Vindic. Verit. Hebr. par. ii., cap. 2 and cap. 8, p. 523).

Ken.—We have here, delivered by the prophet Gad, a most solemn message; David is commanded to choose one of the three following judgments, seven years' famine, three months' flight before the enemy, or three days' pestilence. But in 1 Chron. xxi. 12, the proposal runs more regularly, (not seven but) three years, three months, or three days. Can there be any doubt of a mistake here? Did the prophet Gad deliver this message twice? If only once, did he propose both seven and three years of famine? If three years, the number seven is wrong; and if seven years, the number three is wrong: common sense seems fully sufficient to determine such a point as this is. And yet we find some men, and even Archbishop Usher in his Annals, pleading for the truth of these different readings! And this, notwithstanding that great man has expressed himself so strongly as to the fallibility of Jewish transcribers, Ad me quod attinet, sententia mea hæc perpetua fuit, Hebræum Vel. Testamenti codicem scribarum erroribus non minus esse obnoxium, quam novi codicem et libros omnes alios. De LXX Versione Syntag., p. 219. If then one of the numbers be corrupted, the uniformity of the number three, still observed in two instances in Samuel and in all three in Chronicles, will induce us to presume the three corrupted into seven; especially as the Greek version has τρία ἐτη also in Samuel.

The advocates for the integrity of the Hebrew text may perhaps say with their champion Buxtorf, as to the differences of Bible numbers, Satiüs est ignorantiam nostram agnoscere, et utrumque rectum esse pie credere. Historiæ enim illæ non sunt ita accurate secundum omnes circumstantias conscriptæ, sed breves tantum epitomæ. (Anticrit. page 401.) But, when the same circumstances are mentioned in two places, could there be originally a contradiction? Or, can we, with any appearance of sense, assert that three is an historical epitome of seven? But yet we shall be told perhaps, that we had better adopt Buxtorf's maxim, Utrumque bonum, quia utrumque scriptum; (page 420) especially, as there is great weight in one of his canons of criticism, (page 414), Rei veritas non in verbis consistit, sed in sententiâ. A canon! the most wisely established because of its universal influence! A canon, that will excuse every blundering assertion, not only of its author but of all the fraternity of writers, provided it be but true; which, I confess, if a sentence be composed of words, I shrewdly suspect it is not. I shall only add, that the contradiction here again seems to have been occasioned by the mistake of a numeral letter, γ, three, for ζ, seven. So Dr. A. Clarke.

Au. Ver.—14 And David said unto Gad, I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD; for his mercies are great [or, many]: and let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 So the LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people from Dan even to Beersheba seventy thousand men.

14, 15, Man, &c.

Ged., Booth.—14 — But let me not fall into the hand of man. Thus David chose the pestilence.

15 It was now the time of wheat harvest [LXX]; and Jehovah sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning until mid-day; and there died of the people, from Dan to Beersheba, seventy thousand men.

Until mid-day.] I have followed Syr. and Arab. who have both until the sixth hour. So equivalently Sep., until dinner-time. And so Josephus. Others render: until the appointed time.—Ged.

Pool.—15 To the time appointed; either, 1 From morning to evening, which is here called the time appointed; or, the time of the convention, or, public meeting, as this Hebrew word oft signifies, i. e., till the time of the evening prayer and sacrifice, when the people used more solemnly to meet together. See Psalm cxli. 2; Acts iii. 1. Thus God mitigated his sentence, and turned three days into one; it being a thing not unusual with God to qualify his threatenings, and to take off the evil threatened sometimes wholly, as in Nineveh's case, and sometimes in part. And this God might do here upon the speedy and serious repentance of David, and of his people. Or rather, 2. From the morning, (or rather, from that morning; for the article seems to be emphatical, and to denote that very morning in which Gad came to David, ver. 11, and that the plague did immediately ensue after Gad's offer, and David's choice,) even to the time appointed, to wit, by God, i. e., for three days, as God had set the time, ver. 13. Object. If it continued three days, how is it said that God repented him of the evil, and stopped the angel in his course? ver. 16.

Ans. This he did in the beginning of the third day, whereas otherwise it should have gone on to the end of the day. Or it may signify no more but this, At the end of the third day God gave over smiting; for then is God said (after the manner of men) to repent, when he ceaseth to proceed as before he had done.

Bp. Patrick.—From the morning.] From that time when Gad delivered the message, and David made his choice; which was in the morning, as we read before (ver. 11).

Even to the time appointed.] There are those who by "the time appointed," understand to the end of three days, mentioned by Gad, as the time appointed by the Lord for the continuance of this plague. But this is quite contrary to what follows, that God repented him of the evil; and commanded the angel that smote the people to stay his hand. Therefore the LXX translate it better, ἕως ὥρας ἀρίστου, "until dinner-time:" and so Procopius Gazæus. Certain it is, that moed signifies some part of that day when the plague began: and that must be either noon, or the evening. But, as Bochartus hath observed, the morning and evening are the parts of the day most opposite in Scripture (of which he gives many instances), and therefore so he here understands it, that it continued from morning to the evening. For moed properly signifies an assembly: and therefore the time moed he thinks is the time when the people met for evening prayer; about the ninth hour of the day. Which prayer, before the building of the temple, was made at the tabernacle, or in their synagogues. And therefore the tabernacle is frequently called ohel moed: and the synagogues are called in Psalm lxxiv. 18, moade el. So that he makes account this pestilence lasted no more than nine hours: which was the eighth part of three days.

It is likely he had both names, Araunah and Ornan: but the varieties of spelling in 2 Samuel must arise from the blunders of transcribers.

τὰ πάντα ἔδωκεν Ὀρνὰ τῷ βασιλεῖ. καὶ εἶπεν Ὀρνὰ πρὸς τὸν βασιλέα. κύριος ὁ θεός σου εὐλογῆσαι σε.

Au. Ver.—23 All these things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king. And Araunah said unto the king, The Lord thy God accept thee.

Bishop Patrick.—All these things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king.] The words in the Hebrew are, “these things gave Araunah the king unto the king.” From whence some infer, that before the taking of Jerusalem he was the king of the Jebusites; or, a man of the greatest authority among them, like a king; or was descended from the blood royal of the Jebusites, as Dr. Lightfoot expresses it. But neither the Greek, nor the Syriac, nor the Arabic copies have the word king: nor was it in many of the Vulgar till Sixtus's correction; nor in the Chaldee paraphrast in the time of Kimchi [so Bp. Horsley], who cites it thus; “Araunah gave to the king what the king asked of him.” And, as Bochartus observes, Araunah (or Ornan) being mentioned fourteen times in the holy books, it is a wonder he should not be styled a king, but only here (Hieroz., par. i., lib. i., cap. 38). But it is likely he was a very rich man, as Josephus reports: whom the king spared when he took the fort of Zion; either because he was a lover of the Israelites, or had done some good office unto David.

Dr. A. Clarke.—23 As a king, give unto the king.] Literally, all these did king Araunah give unto the king. That there could not be a king of the Jebusites on Mount Moriah, is sufficiently evident; and that there was no other king than David in the land, is equally so; the word מֶלֶךְ, hamelech, “the king,” given here to Araunah, is wanting in the Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic; in three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and in the parallel place in Chronicles; and, it is very probable, never made a part of the text. Perhaps it should be read, All these did Araunah give unto the king.

There is, however, a difficulty here. David had taken the fortress of the Jebusites many years before; yet it is evident that Araunah was proprietor of the soil at this time. It is not clear that he was a subject of David; but he paid him respect as a neighbour and a king. This is merely possible.

Au. Ver.—24 And the king said unto Araunah, Nay; but I will surely buy it of thee at a price: neither will I offer burnt offerings unto the Lord my God of that which doth cost me nothing. So David bought the threshingfloor and the oxen for fifty shekels of silver.

Pool.—For fifty shekels of silver. Object. In 1 Chron. xxi. 25, he is said to give for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight. Ans. These two places may be fairly reconciled divers ways. First, Here he speaks of the price paid for the threshing-floor, and oxen, and instruments; and there for the whole place adjoining, on which the temple and its courts were built, which certainly was very much larger than this threshing-floor, and probably had Araunah's house, if not some others, now built upon it. Secondly, The shekels here may be of gold, and in 1 Chron. xxi. of silver; and so the proportion of gold to silver being that of twelve to one, fifty shekels of gold make six hundred shekels of silver. And whereas it may be objected, that on the contrary these fifty shekels are said to be of silver, and the six hundred of gold, this they answer by another translation of the words. For they render this place thus, agreeably enough to the words and the order of the Hebrew text, he bought them for silver (or, for money, as the Hebrew word cheseeph oft signifies, and particularly in this very history in the parallel place, 1 Chron. xxi. 24, where David desires to buy it for the full price, or for full money, where in the Hebrew it is for full silver), even for fifty shekels, to wit of gold, as it is expressed 1 Chron. xxi. 25; which place they render thus, and that consonantly to the Hebrew, he gave shekels of gold of the value (for the Hebrew word mishkal signifies value as well as weight, as was before noted on 2 Sam. xii. 30) of six hundred shekels, to wit, of silver. And this may seem added in the Book of the Chronicles, lest it should be thought that the fifty shekels here mentioned were but common and silver shekels. Thirdly, There is a considerable difference in the phrase in these two places: here he mentions for what David bought it, or what he was obliged to give for it; and in Chronicles what he actually gave for it, to wit, of his royal bounty, over and besides the full price of it; which was decent and convenient for so great a king, and especially upon so great an occasion, and to him who had given him such a noble example.

Bp. Patrick.—For fifty shekels of silver.] In the Chronicles we read, according to our translation, that he gave him "six hundred shekels of gold by weight," which Bochartus thus reconciles; that in one place he speaks of shekels of gold, and in the other of shekels of silver. Whose proportion is twelvefold, so that fifty shekels of gold are in value as much as six hundred shekels of silver. He quotes a place out of Plato in his Hipparchus, which proves that gold and silver held this proportion. And then he thus translates this place in Samuel, He bought the floor and the oxen beceseeph, for money; viz., for "fifty golden shekels." So the word ceseeph often signifies money in general, of whatsoever metal it be: as appears from this very history, wherein David tells Ornan that he will buy the field of him, beceseeph malo, which we translate, "at its full price," 1 Chron. xxi. 24. And then it follows, he gave Ornan shikle zabav, "shekels of gold," mishkall shesh mooth, "in value six hundred vulgar, or silver, shekels." See Hierozoic, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 38, where the word mishkall he acknowledges commonly signifies weight; yet here denotes value: as in 2 Sam. xii. 30. The design of Ezra being to show, that the fifty shekels he gave for the floor and oxen were not silver (which were most common), but shekels of gold: every one of which was worth twelve of silver: so that those fifty shekels were equivalent to six hundred silver ones.

But there is a shorter way of solving this difficulty by supposing, that for the thrashing-floor and the oxen he gave only fifty shekels of silver: but all the ground about it (out of which the court of God's house were afterward made) cost him six hundred shekels of gold.

And testimonies were such laws as preserved the remembrance of some great things; and testified to them the loving-kindness of the Lord; as the Sabbath, the passover, and all the rest of the feasts.

Au. Ver.—8 And, behold, thou hast with thee Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a grievous [Heb., strong] curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I swore to him by the LORD, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

9 Now therefore hold him not guiltless: for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood.

Pool.—With thee, i.e., in thy power, as that phrase is oft used. Cursed me with a grievous curse; or, reproached me with bitter reproaches [Ged., Booth., grievously reviled me]. I will not put thee to death with the sword. Quest. How then could David lawfully engage Solomon to punish him for it? And did David upon his death-bed bear malice against Shimei? Ans. First, David was not a private person, which might remit such offences without any inconvenience; but a public magistrate, who for the honour and maintenance of government was obliged to punish such insolent and opprobrious speeches, if the necessity of his affairs had not then engaged him to pass it by. Otherwise it appears from divers passages of the Psalms, and of this history, how free David was from a rancorous and revengeful spirit, even towards his enemies. Secondly, The following advice is not contrary to David's oath, both because that was only personal, that David would not kill him either at that time, as Abishai desired him, or whilst he lived, and did not oblige his successors; and especially, because it was not David's mind that Shimei should be put to death for that fault, (as is evident; for then there was no need of Solomon's wisdom, to find out an occasion, but only of his justice to punish him for the old crime,) but for some other competent crime, which Solomon's wisdom, narrowly prying into all his actions, would easily find out. And if the condition which Solomon imposed upon Shimei, ver. 36, 37, seem hard, it must be remembered that David only swore that he would pardon him as to life, but not that he would exempt him from all punishment or confinement.

Ken.—David is here represented in our English version as finishing his life with giving a command to Solomon to kill Shimei, and to kill him on account of that very crime for which, as David here says, he had sworn to him by the LORD he would not put him to death. The behaviour thus imputed to the king and prophet, and which would be justly censurable if true, should be examined very carefully as to the ground it stands upon; and when the passage is duly considered, I presume it will appear highly probable that an injury has been here done to this illustrious character. The point to which I now beg the reader's attention is this: That it is not uncommon in the Hebrew language to omit the negative in a second part of the sentence, and to consider it as repeated, when it has been once expressed, and is followed by the connecting particle. And thus on Isaiah xliii. 22 the late learned annotator says: "The negative is repeated or referred to by the conjunction vau, as in many other places." So also Isaiah xxiii. 4. The necessity of so very considerable an alteration as inserting the particle not, may be here confirmed by some other instances. Psalm i. 5: The ungodly shall not stand in the judgment, nor (the Hebrew is AND, signifying and not) sinners in the congregation of the righteous. Psalm ix. 18: The needy shall not alway be forgotten (and then the negative, understood as repeated by the conjunction now dropped), the expectation of the poor shall (not) perish for ever. Psalm xxxviii. 1: O Lord, rebuke me not in thy wrath; NEITHER (AND, for and not) chasten me in thy hot displeasure. Psalm lxxv. 5: Lift not up your horn on high (and then the negative, understood as repeated by the conjunction, now dropped): speak (not) with a stiff neck. Proverbs xxiv. 12 (our version is this): Doth not he, that pondereth the heart, consider it? and he that keepeth the soul, doth (not) he know it? and shall (not) he render to every man according to his works? And Prov. xxx. 3: I neither learned wisdom, nor (AND for and not) have the knowledge of the holy. If then there are in fact many such instances, the question is, Whether the negative here, expressed in the former part of David's command, may not be understood as to be repeated in the latter part: and if this may be, a strong reason will be added why it should be, so interpreted. The passage will run thus: "Behold, thou hast with thee Shimei, who cursed me—but I swore to him by the Lord, saying, I will not put thee to death by the sword. Now, therefore, hold him not guiltless (for thou art a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him), but bring not down his hoar head to the grave with blood." Now if the language itself will admit of this construction, the sense thus given to the sentence derives a very strong support from the context. For how did Solomon understand this charge? Did he kill Shimei in consequence of it? Certainly he did not; for after he had immediately commanded Joab to be slain, in obedience to his father, he sends for Shimei, and knowing that Shimei ought to be well watched, confines him to a particular spot in Jerusalem for the remainder of his life; chap. ii. 36—42. See also Job xxiii. 17; xxx. 20; xxxi. 20.

Houb.—בָּרַם שָׂאֵל... (descendere facies senectutem ejus) cum sanguine ad inferos. Intelligitur ex ipso facto Salomonis, quale fuerit Davidis mandatum; atque id mandatum tale est. Etsi ego Semei reo peperci, tu tamen eidem, si adhuc reus erit, non parces. Expectavit Salomon, donec Semei reus esset, ut eum morte plecteret; quo significatur, servasse Davidem juramenti sui religionem, neque Salomoni filio imperasse, ut in Semei animadverteret pro sceleribus iisdem, quæ David Semei condonarat.

Au. Ver.—22 And king Solomon answered and said unto his mother, And why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

Even for him, &c. So Houb., Pool, Ged., Booth.

Bp. Patrick.—Even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.] Who were all in this plot. So the Hebrew words, in the opinion of Lud. De Dieu, are better rendered by the Chaldee paraphrast, than by any other interpreter, “Was not he, and Abiathar, and Joab, in this counsel?” The LXX more plainly, “With him are Abiathar the priest, and Joab the chief commander of the army:” that is, they are his accomplices, and have laid their heads together to give him this counsel.

Ken.—Ask for him the kingdom also; (for he is mine elder brother) even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah. In these words of Solomon to Bath-sheba, it is by no means easy to understand how the kingdom could be asked for Abiathar and for Joab; though it might for Adonijah. All the ancient versions agree and are supported by the Targum, in a different sense; namely, he (Adonijah) is my elder brother; and he has for him (already declared on his side) both Abiathar and Joab. This sense arises from the present two words; omitting in each the preposition, which seems inserted in conformity to the word preceding. Josephus understands this passage in the same manner, that Solomon wondered at the request thus made for Adonijah, amicos potentes habenti Joabum et Abiatharem. Lastly; this construction (nam ei, or, pro eo sunt et Abiathar et Joabus) has been supported already, page 59; to which may be added, Job xxxiv. 29: where the words נָשִׂי רַע אִישׁ, are in the Greek version, καὶ κατὰ ἐθνους καὶ κατὰ ἀνθρώπων; and in the Vulg., et super gentes, et super homines. Add also 1 Sam. xxv. 6. Though the preceding correction has considerable merit: I can assume nothing more to myself here, than the pleasure of publicly expressing my thanks for it; as it has been most obligingly communicated, with many other learned observations, by the Rev. Dr. Roberts, Provost of Eton College.

Bp. Horsley.—Even for him, and for Abiathar, &c. The LXX express a different and much better reading: thus, וְלוֹ אֲבִיחָר הַכֹּהֵן לֹא יָיָא בֶן צְרוּיָה הָשָׁר צָבָא רַעֲדָה, “And he has Abiathar the priest, and he has Joab the captain-general of the army, his friend.” The sense will be the same if, without the addition of the words הָשָׁר צָבָא רַעֲדָה (which, however, upon the authority of the LXX, I prefer), Dr. Roberts’s emendation be adopted, which is, instead of וְלוֹ אֲבִיחָר, to read, וְלוֹ אֲבִיחָר, and instead of וְלוֹ יָיָא, to read וְלוֹ יָיָא. (See Kennicott’s Posth.) —“and Abiathar the priest is on his side, and Joab the son of Zeruiah is on his side.”

Au. Ver.—2 Only the people sacrificed in high places, because there was no house built unto the name of the Lord, until those days.

3 And Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father: only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places.

Pool.—2 Only: this particle is used here and ver. 3, as an exception to Solomon's integrity and glory, and as his infirmity, and a blemish to his government, that he himself both permitted and practised this which was expressly forbidden, Lev. xvii. 3, 4; Deut. xii. 13, 14, except in some extraordinary cases. Possibly he permitted it because he thought it better to allow an error in a circumstance, than to occasion a neglect of the substance of God's worship, which he apprehended would follow upon a severe prohibition of that practice, because the people's hearts were generally and constantly set upon these high places, as appears from all the following history; and they were not willing to submit to so much trouble and charge as the bringing of all their sacrifices to one place would cause; nor would yield to it until the temple was built, which he knew would easily incline and oblige them to it; and that being speedily to be done, he might think it more advisable rather to delay the execution of that law of God for an approaching season, wherein he doubted not they would be sweetly and freely drawn to it, than at present to drive them to it by force; although these and all other prudential considerations should have given place to the will and wisdom of God. In high places; which were groves, or other convenient places upon hills, in which the patriarchs used to offer up their worship and sacrifices to God; and from them this custom was derived both to the Gentiles and the Jews; and in them the Gentiles sacrificed to idols, Jer. vii. 31; Ezek. vi. 3, 4; Hos. x. 8, the Hebrews to the true God. Because there was no house; which reason was not sufficient, for there was a tabernacle, to which they were as much confined as to the temple, Deut. xii., &c. Unto the name of the Lord; either, 1. To the Lord; the name of the Lord being oft put for the Lord himself, as Deut. xxviii. 58; Job i. 21; Ps. vii. 17; cxvi. 13; cxxxv. 1. Or, 2. To the honour, and praise, and service of God; to the glory of his name, i. e., of his majesty, and all his perfections, which shall be adored and manifested there.

3 And, or, yet, although he mistook and miscarried himself in the matter of high places, yet in the general his heart was right with God, and he both loved him with inward affection, and walked with him in outward conversation and worship. In the statutes of David, i. e., according to the statutes or commands of God, which are here called the statutes of David, not only because they were loved and practised by David, but also because the observation of them was so earnestly pressed upon Solomon, and fortified with David's authority and command: see 1 Kings ii. 2—4; 1 Chron. xxviii. 8, 9.

Bp. Horsley.—2 Only the people, &c.; rather, The people sacrificed in high places only.

3 Only he sacrificed, &c.; rather, he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places only.

This is not mentioned as a circumstance of blame either in the people or the king. For had they not sacrificed and burnt incense in high places, they could not have sacrificed or burnt incense at all. And it appears by the sequel that the sacrifice at Gibeon was acceptable.

Ged.—2 The people still sacrificed on hillock-altars: for, until those days, no house had been builded to the name of the Lord. 3 And, although Solomon loved the Lord, walking according to the statutes of his father David, yet he sacrificed, and burned incense on high places.

2 The people still sacrificed on hillock-altars. These were either natural or artificial eminences, on which the ancient inhabitants of the land were wont to sacrifice to their gods. Moses had ordered them to be destroyed; but the injunction was never strictly complied with. The object of worship was only changed: and even after the building of the temple, hillock-altar worship was tolerated under good and pious kings. Comp. chap. xv. 14; xxii. 42; 2 Kings xii. 3; xiv. 4; xv. 4.

Booth.—2 Still the people sacrificed on high-places, because, until those days, there was no house built to the name of Jehovah. 3 And though Solomon loved Jehovah, walking in the statutes of David his father, yet he sacrificed and burnt incense on high places.

Gesen.—[בָּמֹת.] 3 The Hebrews, like most other ancient nations, supposed that sacred rites performed on high places were particularly acceptable to the Deity; see Comment. on Isaiah lxxv. 7, and vol. ii., p. 316. Hence they were accustomed to offer sacrifices upon mountains and hills, both to idols and to God himself, 1 Sam. ix. 12 sq., 1 Chron. xiii. 29 sq.; 1 Kings iii. 4; 2 Kings xii. 2, 4; Isaiah lvi. 7; and also to build there chapels, fanes, tabernacles, מִבְּרָאִים, 1 Kings xiii. 32; 2 Kings xvii. 29; with their priests and other ministers of the sacred rites, כֹּהֲנֵי מִבְּרָאִים, 1 Kings xii. 32; 2 Kings xvii. 32. And so tenacious of this ancient custom were not only the ten tribes, (see the passages above cited,) but also all the Jews, that even after the building of Solomon's temple, notwithstanding the express law in Deut. xii., they continued to erect such chapels on the mountains around Jerusalem, and to offer sacrifices in them; and even those kings who in other respects strictly observed the law of Moses, until Josiah, did not abolish these unlawful sacrifices among the people, nor themselves desist from them; 2 Kings xii. 4; xiv. 4; xv. 4, 35; comp. 2 Chron. xx. 33; xv. 17; 2 Kings xxiii. 8, 9, 19; Ezra vi. 3; xx. 29; Lev. xxvi. 30. Even Solomon himself sacrificed in chapels of this sort, 1 Kings iii. 2, 3, comp. xi. 7. See the author's discussion respecting these high places in Pref. to Gramberg's Religionsideen des a T. I. p. xiv., etc.

4. Very often מִבְּרָאִים is i. q., מִבְּרָאִים, house of the high-place, i. e., a chapel erected to God or to idols upon a mountain or hill, see in No. 3, 1 Kings xi. 7; xiv. 23; 2 Kings xvii. 9; xxi. 3; xxiii. 15. Transferred also to any chapel or fane, e. g., in the valley of Hinnom, Jer. vii. 31; compare Ethiop. ቅርንጫፍ : mountain, also cloister.—Probably these chapels or fanes were tents or tabernacles, decked with curtains, Ezra xvi. 16; comp. 2 Kings xxiii. 7; Am. v. 26. Such tabernacles were in use among the Carthaginians, and also among the ancient Slavi; Diod. xx. 25; Mone in Creuzer's Symbol. v. 176.

5. Rarely a sepulchral mound, tumulus, Gr. βωμός, Ezra xliii. 7; comp. v. 8, and the commentators on Isaiah liii. 9, where also this signification is applicable.

Professor Lee.—[בָּמֹת.] Pers. بَام, supremum cujusque rei. Cogn. Syr. ܒܡܐ. Gr. βῆμα, suggestum, et βωμός, ara idolis consecrata; tumulus. Hence the first (•) is immutable. Gesenius tells us that, in the ancient religion of the Jews, as well as among other nations, HIGH PLACES going under this name were much frequented. I remark, the true ancient religion of the Jews, as well as that of the patriarchs, recognized no such places, except as idolatrous: among the Jews the mention of them is rare: the tabernacle of Moses was evidently in one of them, 1 Chron. xvi. 39. Among the ancient idolaters, as their own best writers allow, the heavenly bodies first, and secondly, dead kings and heroes, were considered as gods, and worshipped as such. See Diodor. Sic. lib. i. passim. Marsham Chron. Can. Ægypt., p. 54, &c. After this, the sepulchres of these men, raised in great heaps, tumuli, pyramids, &c., afforded places which seemed the best suited to the worship of such beings. See Clemens Alexandrinus, as cited by Eusebius, Prep. Evangel., lib. ii., on this subject. According to Mr. Rich, in his work entitled "A Residence in Koordestan," &c., very many such places are still to be seen in that country, particularly in the neighbourhood of ancient Nineveh, some of which are of enormous dimensions and height, and are still frequented as places of worship. Gesenius, too, has no doubt that mention of such sepulchral tumuli is to be found in the Bible: e.g., Ezech. xliii. 7. "Non profanabunt" (is his reading of the passage), "in posterum filii Israël nomen meum sanctum, ipsi et reges eorum, scortatione et cadaveribus regum בְּמִיתָם (pro בְּמִיתָם) in tumulis s. sepulchris eorum," &c. Hence perhaps hills, as dedicated to some deity, also became objects of veneration, and were considered as well suited to the service of such gods. Solomon, we are told, set up idols on some of the mounts about Jerusalem, 2 Kings xxiii. 13, 15; and, in these, Josiah spied certain sepulchres (ib. ver. 16), which he destroyed. See my note on Job xxi. 33. The word has two significations. I. High places, as idolatrous Places of worship, Is. xv. 2; xvi. 12; Jer. xlviii. 35. Also of the true God, before the building of the temple, 1 Sam. ix. 12, et seq. 1 Kings iii. 4. But these, in 2 Kings xii. 4, are condemned as error. Is. xxxvi. 7, &c. The priests of these idolatrous places were styled בְּמִיתָם, 1 Kings xii. 32; xiii. 2; 2 Kings xvii. 32. The chapel was termed בְּמִיתָם; pl.—בְּמִיתָם, 2 Kings xvii. 29, 32; 1 Kings xiii. 32. On this heathen usage among the Persians, see Herod. i. 131, Xenoph. Cyrop., lib. viii.:—the Greeks, Xenoph. Memorab., iii. 8, § 10. II. Heights, in a military sense, as places of strength, 2 Sam. i. 19, 25, &c.

Houb.—2 חָסֵם בְּמִיתָם, caterum populus sacra faciebat in locis excelsis. Vulgatus חָסֵם, attamen: nos maluimus caterum et nisi quod, hoc versu et sequenti, ubi Vulgatus חָסֵם convertit, excepto quod. Nam particula חָסֵם Hebraica non semper excipit, aut adversatur, sed habet aliquando in rebus, vel dictis, vel dicendis, nudam animadversionem. Non vituperatur a scriptore sacro, nec populus, nec Salomon, quod in locis excelsis sacra facerent; imo id excusatur, ex eo quod templum nondum esset absolutum.

Houb.—4 בַּנְּעָה, in Gabaon: Lege בַּנְּעָה, ut circulo indicatur et ut alibi passim.

Ver. 6.

Au. Ver.—6 And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father great mercy [or, bounty], according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; &c.

Pool.—In truth; either, first, Sincerely, and without dissimulation. But that is more fully expressed in the following words, in uprightness of heart. Or, rather, secondly, In the true worship and service of God, in the profession, belief, practice, and defence of the truth, or of the true religion, or of God's will or word, which is called truth, Prov. xxiii. 23; John xvii. 17; Gal. iii. 1. So truth here contains all his duties to God, as righteousness doth his duties to men, and uprightness the right manner of performing both sorts of duties.

Au. Ver.—12 Behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honour: so that there shall not be [or, hath not been] any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

Pool.—I have also given; either, first, I have granted and decreed to give; for words signifying action are oft put only for the purpose of the action. Or rather, secondly, I will give, as it is expressed in the parallel place, 2 Chron. i. 12; I will as certainly give them, as if I had actually done it; for future certain things are oft expressed in Scripture in the past time, as is well known to all. There shall not be; so it is true of all the succeeding kings of Israel, of whom he speaks. Or, hath not been, as it is in the Hebrew; and so it may be true of all the kings that then were or had been in the world.

Ged.—15 And he arose [LXX] and came to Jerusalem; where, standing beside the altar that was [LXX] before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, he offered up holocausts and eucharistic sacrifices; and made a feast for himself and [LXX] for all his servants.

Au. Ver.—16 Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and stood before him.

Harlots. See notes on Josh. ii. 1., p. 5—7.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Then came there two women—harlots.] The word זָנוֹת, zonoth, which we here, and in some other places, improperly translate harlots, is by the Chaldee (the best judge in this case) rendered פּוֹדֵקָאן, pundekayan, tavern-keepers. (See on Josh. ii. 1.) If these had been harlots, it is not likely they would have dared to appear before Solomon; and if they had been common women, it is not likely they would have had children; nor is it likely that such persons would have been permitted under the reign of David. Though there is no mention of their husbands, it is probable they might have been at this time in other parts, following their necessary occupations; and the settling the present business could not have been delayed till their return; the appeal to justice must be made immediately.

Bp. Patrick.—2 And these were the princes which he had.] The principal officers employed under him.

Azariah the son of Zadok the priest.] He was the son of Ahimaaz, the son of Zadok; and therefore was Zadok's grandson (1 Chron. vi. 8, 9). But such are usually called sons in Scripture, as Rasi observes upon Gen. xx. 12. And Zadok, it is probable, in his old age, bred him up in his house as his child. It is not said here what office he had, unless we translate the word priest, as we do in the margin, chief officer, or prime minister of state. But this Abarbanel thinks is a mistake; and he takes him to have been one of the scribes, together with those two that follow in the next words, Elihoreph and Ahiah. For thus he thinks the words should be translated, "Azariah the son of Zadok the priest, and Elihoreph, and Ahiah the sons of Shisha, were scribes;" there wanting a vau before Elihoreph, as is frequent in Scripture (Exod. i. 1, 2). And these three secretaries had each their several employments. One, he thinks, was in matters of judgment; the other in the revenue; and the third was concerned in writing annals, keeping the records, and was a public registrar.

3 The recorder.] Or master of requests. So Rasi understands the word hammaskir; one that heard all men's causes, and brought them before the king.

the son of Nathan was principal officer, and the king's friend.

Principal officer. See notes on 2 Sam. viii. 18, p. 562—566.

Pool.—Over the officers, or overseers, or surveyors, to wit, over those twelve officers named ver. 7, &c. Principal officer; possibly president of the king's council. The Hebrew word is cohen, which, ver. 2, is rendered priest; whence some read this place thus: Zabud the son of Nathan the priest, or the minister, (as the word properly signifies, and that title well enough agrees to a prophet; or, the prince, for the prophet Nathan was a man considerable both for his quality, and for his honour and esteem with the king,) was the king's friend. The king's friend; either his special favourite, both for his father's sake and for his own, having, it seems, been brought up with him; or his confidant, with whom he used to communicate his most secret counsels.

Bp. Patrick.—Principal officer.] The word cohen signifies here, as it doth 2 Sam. viii. 18, minister of state, among whom Zabud was the chief: one whom the king entrusted with the management of all affairs, and with his most secret counsels, he being always with him, as Abarbanel observes. Dr. Hammond notes upon St. Matt. ix., Annot. 2, that the king's friend was an officer of nearness to the king; as Mr. Selden observed before him, in his Uxor. Hebr., lib. ii., cap. 16, p. 201, 202. For Nathan having bred up Solomon (see 2 Sam. xii. 25), it was easy for him to get his sons preferred by him to the highest dignities under him, when he came to be king; especially since he was very instrumental in placing him upon the throne.

ZABUD BEN-NATHAN was the king's own priest:

A king might have his own priest as well as his own prophet. Zadok and Abiathar were national priests: but we find also provincial and family priests: why not then a king's priest? But I decide nothing. Those who dislike my rendering may choose among the following: a priest, the king's friend—a

But this seems too narrow a compass for one of these great officers, and unequal to the rest; although these portions seem not to be distributed into equal portions of land, but into larger or lesser parts, according to their fertility or barrenness. And this seems to have been a very fruitful place. See 2 Sam. xvii. 27. Or, to Mahanaim. So he may understand all the space from the parts last mentioned to Mahanaim, which was in the tribe of Gad.

Au. Ver.—19 Geber the son of Uri was in the country of Gilead, in the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Bashan; and he was the only officer which was in the land.

20 Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, eating and drinking, and making merry.

Pool.—In the country of Gilead, i. e., in the remaining part of that land of Gilead, which was mentioned above, ver. 13. In the land, or rather, in that land; for the Hebrew points intimate that the emphatical article is there understood, to wit, in all Gilead, excepting the parcels mentioned before, in all the territories of Sihon and Og; which because they were of large extent, and yet all committed to this one man, it is here noted concerning him as his privilege above the rest whose jurisdictions were of a narrower extent.

Bp. Patrick.—He was the only officer which was in the land.] There is nothing in the Hebrew answering to those words, he was: therefore this doth not relate to the officer before mentioned; but the meaning is, as Abarbinel expounds it, that besides all those officers before named, there was another who took care of strangers, who were going to court, or coming from it; as the other twelve took care of his family, and all belonging to it. This officer made provision in that country where the king then dwelt; and therefore is not named, because he was not fixed and settled in his office, as the others were; but chosen by the citizens of that city where the king resided.

Bp. Horsley.—19 He was the only officer which was in the land. This seems inconsistent with ver. 13. I would read יָשַׁר מֶרֶץ, "and each governor ruled his district." See Houbigant. To this verse Houbigant annexes the 27th and 28th.

This verse, which is wanting in Sept., has so much the air of an interpolation, that I have rejected it from the text. Houbigant places it after ver. 28. Were it at all admissible, I would place it after ver. 25. At any rate it comes in here most awkwardly. Houbigant transposeth hither vers. 27 and 28, which indeed makes a better connexion; but seems not necessary.

Bishop Patrick.—Fatted fowl. Many restrain the word barburim to birds, or fowl, as we do: and some think they were capons: Kimchi and others say, fatted fowl out of Barbary; from whence they had the name of barburim. But the name of Barbary was not known in Solomon's time: and therefore Bochart thinks the word should be translated, “the choicest of all fatted things” (Hieroz. par. ii., lib. i., cap. 19), and so Gousset, in his late Commentaries on the Hebrew tongue.

Bp. Horsley.—Fat oxen; rather stalled oxen.

Fatted fowl.] בְּרִיטִים אֲנִיטִים, I suppose, means all the wild fowls in season during each month. Michaëlis derives בְּרִיטִים from בָּרָא, which in Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, signifies a field, a desert; all that is without the cities and habitations of men: hence דִּוְחָ, wild beasts, Dan. ii. 38; בָּרָא, wild bull; and therefore barburim may signify creatures living in the fields, woods, and deserts, which are taken by hunting, and opposed to those which are domesticated; and, consequently, may include beasts as well as fowls. Many have translated the word capons; but, query, was any such thing known among the ancient Jews?

As to the etymology, אֵל is a sort of intensive of רָא, therefore pp. a large ram or buck, and אֵלֶּה a large she-goat or the like. Indeed the Hebrews would seem to have called all the various species of deer and antelopes, which in part are furnished with twisted horns like the ram, by the general name of large rams or wild rams; just as the Germans call the same animals Bergziegen, wilde ziegen, and the Latins capræ, from their general resemblance to a goat, capra. Sept. everywhere ἔλαφος.

בְּרִיטִים m. plur. fowls, which are said to be fatted for the table of Solomon, 1 Kings v. 3 [iv. 23]. Kimchi understands capons; but more probable with the Targum of Jerusalem, geese, so called from the pureness and whiteness of their plumage; from r.

בְּרִיטִים, m. pl. redup. r. בָּרָא. Most choice, select, i. e., fed beasts, 1 Kings v. 3. The Rabbins, and after them, Gesenius, &c., will have this word to signify birds, as geese, capons, &c. Gesenius prefers geese, from the whiteness, &c., of their feathers. Bochart has very ably shown, Hieroz. II., lib. i., cap. 19, that there is not the least necessity or ground for introducing any mention of birds here at all; that בְּרִיטִים אֲנִיטִים must, according to Biblical phraseology, signify fed beasts of some sort, the term אֲנִיטִים being applied to nothing else; and בְּרִיטִים, being a reduplication of בָּרָא, pure, choice, can hardly signify anything but most choice, or the like. Comp. Neh. v. 18; so one of the Greek versions ἐλεγκτῶν σιτευτά. It is marvellous indeed, that these stalled-birds of the Rabbins should have kept their ground so long!

וַיְהִי לְשָׁלֹמֹה אַרְבָּעִים אֲלֶלָה אֲרָלָה וְשָׁנִים עֶשְׂרִי אֲלֶלָה פָּרָשִׁים :

Au. Ver.—26 And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.

Forty thousand.

Houb., Datke, Ken., Horsley, Clarke, Ged., Booth.—Four thousand.

Pool.—Forty thousand stalls of horses. In 2 Chron. ix. 25, it is but four thousand. Ans. First, Some acknowledge an error of the transcriber, writing arbahim, forty, for arbah, four, which was an easy mistake. Secondly, It is not exactly the same Hebrew word which is here and there, though we translate both stalls; and therefore there may well be allowed some difference in the signification, the one signifying properly stables, of which there were 4,000, the other stalls or partitions for each horse, which were 40,000. Twelve thousand horsemen; appointed partly for the defence and preservation of his people in peace; and partly for attendance upon his person, and for the splendour of his government. Compare chap. x. 26. But the words may be otherwise rendered, and twelve thousand horses, for parash manifestly signifies both a horse and horsemen. And these might be a better sort of horses than most of those which were designed for the chariots. Or thus, and for (which particle is easily understood and borrowed from the foregoing clause) twelve thousand horsemen; and so he means that the 40,000 horses were in part appointed for his chariots, and in part for his 12,000 horsemen.

Bp. Patrick.—Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses.] In 2 Chron. ix. 25, it is said he had but four thousand. But there is no disagreement between these two places: for he speaks here of his horses, and there of their stalls or stables; there being ten in every stable, which make forty thousand, as Abarbinel observes. But this doth not satisfy Bochartus, who rather inclines to Jacobus Capellus's opinion, that the Hebrew word arbaum here signifies four not forty (Hiero-zicon, lib. ii., par. i., p. 155, &c.). But this is without example; therefore others think that in the Chronicles the author speaks of those stalls for horses which he had in Jerusalem for his constant guard, which were but four thousand; whereas here he speaks of those which were dispersed throughout his whole kingdom.

Twelve thousand horsemen.] Which were distributed, it is likely, in every tribe; to keep them in peace, and to be ready to oppose any enemy that might invade them: wherein Abarbinel thinks that Solomon did not offend against the law in Deuteronomy, which commanded them not to multiply horses (xvii. 16), because he did it not out of pride and vanity; but to preserve peace, by keeping all his neighbours in awe. And he professes not to trust in them, Proverbs xxi. 31.

Ken.—That the Hebrew text is corrupted in many of its numbers, has been (I presume) frequently proved already; and will be yet more fully proved hereafter. And that some of these numbers were corrupted very early, seems evident from the agreement of the Greek, Syriac, and Latin versions. Should it be demanded—How numbers, which (as they are expressed in words at length) are widely different from each other, could possibly be mistaken by any transcriber; I would endeavour to satisfy such demand, by one or other of the following solutions.

The learned Vignoles (as before observed) has conjectured, that, since many of the numbers are corrupted, in reading hundreds instead of tens, and tens instead of hundreds; therefore the Jewish transcribers might anciently express numbers by marks analogous to our common figures: as the Arabians have done for many hundred years. And if so; then the corruption of such numbers may easily be accounted for, from the transcribers carelessly adding or omitting a single cypher. For example: we read now (1 Sam. vi. 19) that the Lord smote 50,070 Philistines, for looking into the ark; which number, the Syr. and Arab. versions tells us, was in their copies only 5,070. Thus we read at present (1 Kings iv. 26) that Solomon had 40,000 stalls for horses; which number the parallel passage in the Heb. text itself (2 Chron. ix. 25) assures us was only 4,000. And thus the three numbers [see notes on 2 Chron. xiii. 3, 17] so frequently before mentioned, may have been corrupted by the addition of a cypher. And should any one doubt the possibility of a cypher being added by the same person in three numbers near together; I need only refer him back to page 196—where a cypher was at first added by my compositor to each of the three large numbers; which were therefore printed in the proof-sheet 4000,000 8000,000, and 5000,000.

The other conjecture is, that the Jews anciently expressed their sacred numbers by numeral letters. It is certain they do so at present in their own compositions; and it is certain also, that some of their ancient authors speak of single letters, as signifying numbers in the books of Scripture. Aben Ezra, 600 years ago, considered the yod in ויחשב (Exod. xxv. 31) as inserted to express ten. R. Eliezer (whose book, called מדרש רבי, was published by Vortius in 1644) is allowed by the Jews to have been a very ancient writer; and is said, in the preface, to have lived not long after the apostolic age. This rabbi (page 75) considers the word יצחק as consisting of four numeral letters; which he makes to signify their now customary numbers, ten, ninety, eight, and one hundred.

It is well known, that the twenty-two Hebrew letters express numbers as far as 400; and that the five remaining hundreds (under one thousand) are expressed by different forms of five of the letters, which seem invented on purpose to express them. Indeed it can scarce be doubted, but that as five, and only five, of the several hundreds wanted each a single letter; and as five, and only five, of these different forms were invented; so these new forms were invented to express those remaining hundreds. The different forms of these five letters have been used, at the end of words, perhaps, ever since their first invention. And it is therefore probable, that if we could fix the age of these final letters, we might then fix the time when the Bible numbers were expressed by single letters. These finals are not known to the Samaritans. And as they are not in the least wanted to express words, and yet are used in the Bible, so may we conclude, they were first introduced into the Bible for the purpose of numbers. This is the use made of them by the Jews in their own writings; and indeed they are admitted, even now, into the Jewish commentaries, as printed with the Hebrew text: see R. S. Jarchi, on Gen. xxv. 8.

As the age of these finals tends to fix the age of these numeral letters, it may be observed, that the final mem is mentioned in the Talmud of Babylon; and that the authors of both Talmuds speak of the five finals as of great antiquity, even in their time. To which I shall add, that St Jerome, in his preface to the Book of Kings, mentions the finals as equally in use with the twenty-two letters.* And as Jerome's Hebrew MSS. might easily be 200 years old, if the finals were in his MSS., it follows that they must have been used soon after the time of Christ. In page the 8th of a Dissertation on the Chronology of the Septuagint, printed 1741, I find Jerome's authority made use of (without any part of his works being referred to) in the manner following—We are assured by St. Jerome that the Hebrew computations were not expressed in words at length in the old Hebrew copies, but in small characters scarcely visible.

If we may infer from Jerome that the finals were used in the Hebrew MSS., at latest about 200 years after Christ, we may infer from the Greek version that they were not used in the Hebrew MSS. till about 100 years before Christ. Dr. Hody, who seems to have given the most rational account of the origin of the several parts of the Greek version, tells us (page 188) that Jeremiah was translated into Greek about 130 or 140 years before Christ. And from this version of Jeremiah xxxi. 8, (i. e. in, the Greek, chap. xxxviii. 8,) it seems clear that the finals were not then in the Hebrew text. For in that verse, the five letters נבטח (which are here two words, and properly signify en avrois τυφλος) are rendered in all the copies of the Greek version εν εορτη. But such a rendering, being the proper Greek of נבטח, which is one word only, shows that the ו was not then (ו) mem final; since the final would have divided the letters into two words, and prevented such a wrong translation, &c.—Kennicott's Second Dissertation, p. 212.

Dr. A. Clarke.—26 Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses and twelve thousand horsemen.] In 2 Chron. ix. 25, instead of forty thousand stalls, we read four thousand; and even this number might be quite sufficient to hold horses for twelve thousand horsemen; for stalls and stables may be here synonymous. In chap. x. 26 it is said he had one thousand four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; and this is the reading in 2 Chron. i. 14. In 2 Chron. ix. 25, already quoted, instead of forty thousand stalls for horses, the Septuagint has τεσσαρες χιλιαδες θηλειαι ιπποι, four thousand mares; and in this place the whole verse is omitted both by the Syriac and Arabic. In the Targum of Rabbi Joseph on this book, we have רבב, four hundred, instead of the four thousand in Chronicles, and the forty thousand in the text. From this collation of parallel places we may rest satisfied that there is a corruption in the numbers somewhere; and as a sort of medium, we may take from the whole four thousand stalls, one thousand four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen.

Ged.—27 I have already observed that this and the following verse are by Houbigant put after ver. 19. And that indeed seems to be their proper place. Perhaps a better arrangement of the whole two might be made.

Heb., v. 8; Au. Ver., iv. 28.

Au. Ver.—28 Barley also and straw for the horses and dromedaries [or, mules, or, swift beasts], brought they unto the place where the officers were, every man according to his charge.

Bp. Patrick.—For the horses and dromedaries.] The Hebrew word rechesh signifies swift horses, as Abarbinel thinks (see Esther viii. 14). But others take them for mules, as we translate it in the margin. Bochartus thinks it certain, that this word imports a kind of horse, Micah i. 13 (see Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 6, 21).

Where the officers were.] Or, rather, “where the beasts were.” For there is no word for officers in the Hebrew.

Dr. A. Clarke.—28 And dromedaries.] The word rechesh, which we translate thus, is rendered beasts, or beasts of burden by the Vulgate; mares by the Syriac and Arabic; chariots by the Septuagint; and race-horses by the Chaldee. The original word seems to signify a very swift kind of horse, and race-horse or post-horse is probably its true meaning. To communicate with so many distant provinces, Solomon had need of many animals of this kind.

Gesen.—וְהַרְכָּשׁ m. (r. רָכַשׁ) in pause רָכַשׁ, a horse of a noble and fleeter race, a steed, courser, Mic. i. 13; 1 Kings v. 8 [iv. 28]; distinguished from וְהַסּוּסִים, Esther viii. 10, 14.

Au. Ver.—31 For he was wiser than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol, &c.

Pool.—Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman; Israelites of eminent wisdom, probably the same mentioned 1 Chron. ii. 6; xv. 19; xxv. 4; Psalm lxxxviii. title; lxxxix. title. Chalcol and Darda; of whom see 1 Chron. ii. 6. The sons of Mahol. Object. All these four were the sons of Zerah, 1 Chron. ii. 6, or of Ezrah, as others call him. Ans. Either the same man had two names, Zerah and Mahol, which was common amongst the Jews; and he might be called Mahol from his office or employment; for that signifies a dance, or a pipe; and he was expert in musical instruments, and so were his sons, 1 Chron. xv. 17—19, who possibly may here be called, by a vulgar Hebraism, sons of the musical instrument, from their dexterity in handling it, as upon another account we read of the daughters of music, Eccles. xii. 4.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Ethan was probably the same as is mentioned in some of the Psalms, particularly Psalm lxxxix., title; and among the singers, in 1 Chron. vi. 42. There is a Heman mentioned in the title to Psalm lxxxviii. In 1 Chron. ii. 6 we have all the four names, but they are probably not the same persons, for they are there said to be the sons of Zerah, and he flourished long before Solomon's time.

Some suppose that בני מחול should be rendered masters of dancing or music, as מחול signifies not only a dance or choir, but also an instrument of music of the pipe kind. Perhaps a reference is here made to Solomon's skill in music and poetry, as he is compared to persons who appear to have been eminent poets and musicians.

Au. Ver.—33 And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall, &c.

Bp. Patrick.—He spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall. That is, of all sorts of plants, from the greatest to the smallest. For ezub (which we commonly translate hyssop) seems to be the same with the Ethiopian word azub, which signifies mint; and is more agreeable to this place, being more directly opposed to the cedar than hyssop; which hath a stalk, and sometimes of great strength, as De Dieu and Job Ludolphus have observed. And for this reason Hottinger (in his Smegma Oriental. p. 580), takes it for the wall-flower, which is less than hyssop. But Bochartus maintains hyssop to be here meant; of which the Jews reckoned four sorts; and one of them may well be thought to grow upon walls. Though there is no necessity, he thinks, to put that interpretation upon the word bekir, which we translate on the wall: which may signify, as the particle beth doth in many places, near or hard by the wall. Of Jerusalem, that is, which was encompassed with mountains: and the Arabians observe that hyssop grew in the mountains, especially about Jerusalem (see Hieroicozon, par. 1, lib. ii., cap. 50).

Gesen.—אֲזֹב (by Syriasm for אֲזֹב) m. ὑσσώπος, hyssop [so Prof. Lee], much used by the Hebrews in their sacred purifications and sprinklings, Exod. xii. 22; Lev. xiv. 4, 6, 21, 49; Psalm li. 9; 1 Kings v. 13. Like the names of many other oriental plants, so also that of hyssop seems to have come to the Greeks from the oriental languages. Under this name the Hebrews appear to have comprised not only the common hyssop of the shops, but also other aromatic plants, especially mint, wild marjoram, etc. Some derive it from אֲזֹב, which they regard as i. q., זָב, to be hairy, shaggy; but the plants above named hardly admit this epithet.

Professor J. F. Royle maintains that אֲזֹב is the caper plant: see a learned article in No. XV. of the "Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society," page 193 to 212, from which the following extract is taken.

"The caper plant is too well known to require a description, especially as so many details have already been given respecting its habit. We have seen in the first place, that it has a name, azuf, in Arabic, sufficiently similar to the Hebrew esof or esobh. It is found in Lower Egypt, in the deserts of Sinai, and in Palestine. Thus it is found in all the places where the esobh must have been indigenous, for the Israelites to have been able to obtain it for their religious ceremonies. Its habit is to grow upon the most barren soil, or rocky precipice, or the side of a wall, and this is also essential; for it is said, that Solomon, knew all the plants from the cedar of Lebanon to the hyssop that groweth on the wall. It has moreover always been supposed to be possessed of cleansing properties; hence, probably, its selection in the ceremonies of purification, or its employment in these may have led to the supposition of its possessing the power of curing diseases like leprosy. Finally, the caper plant is capable of yielding a stick to which the sponge might have been affixed, as we learn from St. John was done with the hyssop, when the sponge dipped in vinegar was raised to the lips of our Saviour. A combination of circumstances and some of them apparently too improbable to be united in one plant, I cannot believe to be accidental, and have therefore considered myself entitled to infer, what I hope I have now succeeded in proving to the satisfaction of others, that the caper plant is the hyssop of Scripture."

Au. Ver.—8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have considered [Heb., heard] the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

Pool.—Concerning timber of fir. Others render the Hebrew word, pitch trees, or ash trees, or pine trees. To others it was a particular sort of cedars, and therefore comes under the general name of cedars, in Solomon's message before related.

Bp. Patrick.—8 The word which we translate fir, others think signifies pine or cypress. For fir seems not so fit for this work, being a light wood, and not durable, and apt to take fire. Their conjecture is most reasonable, who think it was a kind of cedar: and therefore comprehended under that name, ver. 6, where Solomon desires of him only, that his servants might hew him cedar-trees.

Gesen.—^{רָצַח} a root not in use, Arab.

^{רָצַח}, plur. ^{רָצַח}, ^{רָצַח} m. a cedar, so called from the firmness of its roots, which is appropriate to all trees of the pine genus, Theoph. Hist. Plant. 2. 7. It is the cedrus conifera, a tree uncommonly tall, Is. ii. 13; xxxvii. 24; Am. ii. 9; and wide-spreading, Ez. xxxi. 3; formerly very frequent on Mount Lebanon, Psalm xxix. 5; xcii. 13; civ. 16, but now greatly reduced in number; Ritter Erdkunde ii. 446; Robinson Res. in Pal. iii. p. 440. The wood is odoriferous, without knots, and exceedingly durable; and was therefore much used in the temple and the king's palaces for ornamental work, and especially for the wainscot and ceiling. Hence for cedar-work, wainscoting, 1 Kings

vi. 18. Arab. ^{رَاح}, which is still in use among the inhabitants of Lebanon; Ethiop.

רָצַח: Aram. ^{רָצַח}, ^{רָצַח}.—There is therefore no ground for understanding ^{רָצַח} to be the pine, and not the cedar, according to Celsius in Hierob. I., 106, sq.

^{רָצַח} plur. ^{רָצַח} m. 1. a cypress, a tall and fruit or cone-bearing tree, Isaiah lv. 13; Hosea xiv. 9; constituting along with the cedar, with which it is often joined, the glory of Lebanon, Isaiah xiv. 8; xxxvii. 24; lx. 13; Zech. xi. 2; coll. v. 1. Its wood, like that of the cedar, was employed for the floors and ceilings of the temple, 1 Kings v. 22, 24; vi. 15, 34; 2 Chron. ii. 7; iii. 5; also for the decks and sheathing of ships, Ezra xxvii. 5; for spears, Nah. ii. 4; and for musical instruments, 2 Sam. vi. 5. Once by Syriasm called ^{רָצַח}, Cant. i. 17. That the cypress and not the fir-tree is to be understood, is apparent from the nature of the case, as well as from the authority of ancient interpreters; although this name may perhaps also have comprehended other trees of the pine genus. See more in Thesaur. p. 246. As to its etymology, the name seems to come from the idea of cutting up into boards, planks, etc., see r. ^{רָצַח} [obsol. root, prob. i. q., Arab. ^{رَاح} to cut, to cut in].

Professor Lee.—^{רָצַח}, m. Arab. ^{رَاح}, or ^{رَاح}, arbor conifera, cedrus. Syr. et Chald. ^{רָצַח}; Æth. ἈርΗ; pl. ^{רָצַח}; constr. ^{רָצַח}.

The cedar tree, or wood, pec. of Libanus. Celsius, Hierobot. 1, p. 106, supposes the pine must be meant, merely because the Arabic word signifies both cedar and pine. This is weak and futile, both because the trees on the Libanus are known still to be cedars, and because the authors of the ancient versions, who take the word to signify the cedar—could hardly have been ignorant as to what tree was meant. See Bochart's Canaan, p. 706; Jud. ix. 15; 2 Sam. v. 11, &c.

^{רָצַח}, m. pl. ^{רָצַח}. Arab. ^{رَاح}, abies.

Syr. id. I. One of the five species of the cedar, according to Celsius, I. p. 74, et seq. which he renders by abies, fir-tree. Gesen. on the other hand, argues largely for the Cypress.—Thes. and Heb. Lex. sub voce. I am inclined to think that the latter is right, Isaiah xiv. 8; xxxvii. 24; lv. 13; Hosea xiv. 9; Zech. xi. 2. The timber of which was applied to building, to musical instruments, &c., 1 Kings v. 22, 24; vi. 15, 34; 2 Sam. vi. 5; Ezek. xxvii. 5. Meton. II. Anything made of this wood, as the staff of a lance, Nah. ii. 4; a musical instrument, 2 Sam. vi. 5. It is perhaps worth remarking that, from the durability of the cypress, mummy-coffins were made of it by the Egyptians; and, on this account, perhaps, it was used in constructing the temple at Jerusalem. In 1 Kings vi. 34, we find the gates of this building were made of it. Those of St. Peter's at Rome were originally made of it; and they are said to have been sound and good after the space of 600 years, when they were removed by Pope Eugenius IV., and brazen ones substituted for them.

Au. Ver.—11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures [Heb., cors] of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

Pool.—Twenty measures of pure oil, Heb., twenty cors of pure oil; but in 2 Chron. ii. 10, it is twenty thousand baths of oil; to which is there added twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine. Either, therefore, first, He speaks of several things, as was now said on ver. 9. Or, secondly, He speaks there of what Solomon offered; for it runs thus, I will give; and here of what Hiram accepted; and accordingly Solomon gave, for it is here said Solomon gave Hiram. Or, thirdly, The barley, and wine, and twenty thousand baths of common oil, mentioned 2 Chron. ii., must be added to the twenty thousand measures of wheat, and the twenty measures of pure oil, here expressed, and the whole sum is to be made up from both places; that Book of Chronicles being written to supply and complete the histories of the Books of Samuel and of the Kings. Thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year; either, first, for sustenance to the workmen, during the years wherein they were employed in the cutting down and hewing of the timber. Or, secondly, For the yearly support of the king's house during the said time. And these words being left out in 2 Chron. ii., may seem to favour their opinion, that these places speak of divers passages, and several recompenses, the one given to the king's house, the other to the labourers, although the argument is not cogent; and this might be omitted there, either because it was sufficiently implied in the nature of the thing, or because it had been plainly expressed here.

Bp. Patrick.—11 Twenty measures of pure oil.] In 2 Chron. ii. 10, it is said, twenty thousand baths of oil. How corim and bathim differ I shall not examine; but that place in the Chronicles plainly speaks of what was given to the workmen, who had other things besides (there mentioned) to support them in their labours: but here the prophet speaks of what was given for the use of Hiram's family, as Kimchi and Ralbag solve this seeming contradiction. Abarbinel hath another solution (see Buxtorf's Vindiciæ Hebr. Veritatis, par. ii., cap. 2, p. 424).

set over these 3,000, each of these to have the oversight of ten of them, to take an account of the work from them. But in 2 Chron. ii. 11, these overseers are said to be 3,600. Ans. The 300 added in 2 Chron. ii. might be a reserve, to supply the places of the other 3,000; yea, or of the 3,300; as any of them should be taken off from the work by death, or sickness, or weakness, or necessary occasions; which was a prudent provision, and not unusual in such like cases.
And so there were 3,600 commissioned for the work, but only 3,300 employed at one time; and therefore both computations may fairly stand together. Some learned men add, that those 3,600 were strangers, which indeed is manifest from 2 Chron. ii. 17; and that those 3,300 were a distinct number of men, and Israelites, which were set over all the rest, both strangers and Israelites; who therefore are here called the chief of Solomon's officers, and are said to rule over the workmen; whereas all that is said of those 3,600, 2 Chron. ii. 18, is, that they were overseers to set the people a work; which may deserve further consideration. Others say, that the 300 added in 2 Chron. were overseers of the Tyrian workmen in Mount Lebanon, and the rest in all other places; or that they were set over some particular and more curious and considerable parts of the work.

Bp. Patrick.—In 2 Chron. ii. 18, they are said to have been three thousand and six hundred: for three hundred were overseers even of the three thousand three hundred, who were to oversee the rest. That is superior officers, who surveyed the whole as Kimchi observes. Or, as Abarbinel takes it, there were three hundred supernumeraries, who were employed in the more exquisite sort of work: or when any of the other failed, were ready to supply their places.

tioned by Pliny (see Psalm lxxxi. 7), who were the most excellent artists in those parts.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—18 And the stone- squarers.] Instead of stonesquarers the margin very properly reads Giblites, גִּבְלִיטִים; and refers to Ezek. xxvii. 9, where we find the inhabitants of Gebal celebrated for their knowledge in ship-building. Some suppose that these Giblites were the inhabitants of Biblos, at the foot of Mount Libanus, northward of Sidon, on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea; famous for its wines; and now called Gaeta. Both Ptolemy and Stephanus Byzantinus speak of a town called Gebala, to the east of Tyre: but this was different from Gebal, or Biblos. It seems more natural to understand this of a people than of stone-squarers, though most of the versions have adopted this idea which we follow in the text.

Au. Ver.—1 And it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build [Heb., built] the house of the Lord.

See notes on Judges iii. 11, pp. 174—176.

Pool.—This chronological difficulty is too vast and comprehensive to be fully discussed here, or to be determined by unlearned readers; and for the learned, I refer them to what is largely digested in my Latin Synopsis upon this place. It may suffice at present to suggest these particulars: 1. That Israel's coming out of Egypt is variously understood in Scripture, and with some latitude, so as not only to note the time when first they came out of Egypt, but the time of their being in or coming out of the wilderness; as is manifest from Deut. iv. 45, where the words in the Hebrew are not after, &c., as we translate it, but in their coming forth out of Egypt; and Psalm cxiv. 1—3, When Israel came forth, &c., Heb., in their coming forth, &c. And it is not impossible it may be so understood here, after they were come out, &c., to wit, completely, i. e., towards the end of their expedition out of Egypt into Canaan. Nor doth the difference between the Hebrew prepositions lamed and beth, which a learned man objects, hinder this sense; for as beth signifies (as he saith) after, so also doth lamed, Gen. vii. 4, 10; Numb. xxxiii. 38. 2. That whereas the times of the judges do chiefly cause this difficulty, there are many things which will relieve us therein; as, 1. That divers of the years there mentioned belong to one and the same time, as is evident from Jair's twenty-two years, within which fell out, as divers learned chronologers agree, the eighteen years of the oppression of the Ammonites, and several years of the Philistine tyranny, who oppressed Israel in the west, whilst the Ammonites vexed them in the east; and the like might be observed in other cases. 2. That the years of rest are not necessarily to be understood of so many distinct years, besides those of war and servitude; and those words which are generally rendered the land had rest forty or eighty years, or the like, may be thus rendered, and that very agreeable to the Hebrew, The land had rest, or began to rest, or recovered its rest, in the fortieth or in the eightieth (the cardinal numbers being frequently put for the ordinal, especially where the number exceeds ten) year, to be computed from some remarkable time; and so that phrase doth not note how long a time, or till what time, the rest continued, but at what time it began. As for instance, in Judg. iii. 11, the land had rest, not forty years, as it is in our translation, but in the fortieth year, to wit, from and after their first rest in, or quiet possession of the land of Canaan, which Joshua gave them; which time may very probably be made up of the days of Joshua, after he had settled them in a state of rest; and of the elders that outlived him, Judges ii. 7, and the time of their corruption after the death of those elders; and the eight years of servitude under the king of Mesopotamia. So Judg. iii. 30, The land had rest in the eightieth year, to wit, from and after that rest which Othniel obtained for them, ver. 11. And Judg. v. 31, It rested in the fortieth year, to wit, after that rest got by Ehud, Judg. iii. 30. And Judg. viii. 28, It rested in the fortieth year, to wit, from the last rest got by Deborah. And thus the computation of years is more plain and certain, being thus made from rest to rest, than theirs that proceed the other way. And this is the more considerable, because it was the opinion of that famously learned and pious bishop of Armagh. All which considered, it will be very easy to contain all the parts and passages of sacred story, from the coming out of Egypt to this time, within the compass of four hundred and eighty years; of the several parcels whereof, see my Latin Synopsis [see below p. 744]. And as for other scriptures, which some conceit to be contradictory to this, I shall by God's help vindicate them in their several places.

Jackson's Chronology, vol. i., p. 133.—There is no period in the Scripture history in which both the ancient and modern chronologers so much differ and mistake as in this, from the Exodus of the Israelites from Egypt to the foundation of Solomon's temple. Eusebius has given occasion to most of this confusion and difference by following a groundless tradition of the Jews, and including the times of their captivities in the times of their judges, and thereby shortening this period an hundred years. The modern chronologers, Archbishop Usher, Bishop Lloyd, and others have been led by his example into the greatest perplexity and confusion; and have made successive times contemporary and confounded years of rest and bondage together in an arbitrary manner; to suit a mistaken hypothesis, and a corrupt number in 1 Kings vi. 1, without regard either to the plain sense of Scripture, or the judgment of the most ancient writers, Jewish and Christian; nor have any been hitherto able to clear this era from the difficulties with which it is embarrassed, or to settle the true number of years which it contains. I shall therefore endeavour to set this period in a true and clear light by following the plain narration and sense of Scripture concerning the times of the judges and of the several captivities which intervened, and shall distinguish the years of the one from those of the other; and I shall also demonstrate that the number in 1 Kings vi. 1 which makes this period no more than 479 years, is a Jewish interpolation or corruption, and was not known to the ancient Jewish and Christian writers, &c., &c. [vol. 1., p. 133—145].

Therefore, the years from the exodus of the Israelites, or their going out of Egypt, to the foundation of Solomon's temple, are upon the foregoing evidence, to be reckoned as follows, viz.:—

Total		579

By the computation above, the temple was begun 579 years after the Exodus, and in the year of the world 4,412, and in the year before the Christian era 1,014. There were besides seven months more which I have mentioned, but have not reckoned, to keep the numbers in entire years, and this is sufficiently exact. It is certain from the Scripture account of the times of the judges, that the term from the exodus to the temple could not be fewer years than I have computed them; but yet we find in the present Hebrew copies of 1 Kings vi. 1, that it came to pass in the four hundred and fourscore year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he began to build the house of the Lord. This number has puzzled all our modern chronologers, and put them to make several absurd hypotheses, in order to reconcile the history of the Judges to it; but it gave no trouble to the most ancient Jewish and Christian chronologers, because they found no such number either in the Hebrew or Greek copies. And as they had no other rule to compute this famous era by, but only the years of the judges, in which calculation there was room for the difference of a few years, in the times of some of them, which are not expressly set down in Scripture, as I have observed; so accordingly we find that some writers made this term from the exodus to the temple more years than others did; but not one of them followed the number mentioned in the before-cited text, or made it 479 years, till Eusebius mentioned its being wrote in the first book of Kings; whereas had this number been originally there, it would undoubtedly have appeared in the version of the Septuagint; and the ancient Greek writers would have followed it unanimously and without variation. That this number is spurious, and a corruption of the text, where it is written, will be demonstrably shown in the following sheets. And that it was not originally either in the Hebrew or Greek text, may with great certainty be inferred from the computations of all the ancients, both Pagan, Jewish, and Christian writers, &c. [see Jackson's Chronol., vol. i., p. 147—162].

Josephus had no number in his Hebrew copy of the Book of Kings, because, as he never fails to mention his chronological numbers, he would undoubtedly have taken notice of this, had it been in his copy, and would also have made his computation by it. But in the place where he gives the account of the building of the temple, he says, "Solomon began to build the temple in the fourth year of his reign, in the second month, after 592 years from the Exodus of the Israelites out of Egypt." Could Josephus have said this if he had found in the text the number 480, as it is found at present? and that 592 is the genuine number of Josephus (though he has 612 years in two or three other places) is evident from several observations made before his chronology; and chiefly from the distinct particular numbers of the years of Joshua, and of every judge, set down in his fifth book of Antiquities, and which stand as follows, &c. [see Jackson's Chronol., vol. i., p. 148—150]; making in all 592 years.

Syncellus, p. 175, tells us that 600 years was the computation of Eusebius; and it appears to be so from the preface to his Chronicon, where he says, the Hebrew numbers of the Book of Judges amount to this sum; but this interval he says, was only 479 years, according to the lesser number of the Book of Kings, in which it is said to be in the 480th year after the exodus that Solomon began to build the temple, 1 Kings vi. 1, and this lesser number he follows in his Chronicon. If we deduct from the above-stated number of Eusebius, viz., 600, one year from Tola, and twenty years from Samson, which are a part of the preceding forty years, as hath been frequently observed, we have the true number as reckoned by the Book of Judges, which is, as before proved, 579 years if Tola has twenty-two years, or 580 if he has twenty-three years; but I have chosen the former number.

That which imposed upon Eusebius, and engaged him to follow and to put into his Chronicon the lesser number of 479 years, was a pretended ancient traditional interpretation (which he there speaks of) amongst the Jews of the numbers of the Book of Judges, by which they included all the years of servitude which they reckoned to be 120 (though they are but 111) in the years of the Judges, and so reduced the 600 years of the Book of Judges, as Eusebius reckoned them, to 480 or 479 years, in order to reconcile them to that number which was inserted into the Book of Kings; and which number it is very probable was there first inserted to support this absurd traditional interpretation. And this I take to be one of the contrivances of the Jews to shorten their chronology in opposition to the computations of the Christians from the plain sense and express numbers of both the Hebrew and Greek text in the Book of Judges. This fictitious number first added by the Jews to the Hebrew text of the Book of Kings they had very nearly got inserted before the time of Eusebius into some copies of the Septuagint, which have 440 instead of the Hebrew number 480; and which number is now retained in most, if not all the Greek copies, except the Complut.

But it is very evident from the computations of the most ancient Scripture historians, and particularly Demetrius, who lived many years before the Christian era, and also from the calculation of the oldest Christian writers, Theophilus, Bishop of Antioch, Clemens of Alexandria, and Africanus, that they had no such number as either 480 or 440 in the Septuagint version, or in the Hebrew text, and it is as evident from the reckoning of Josephus that he had no number in his Hebrew copy; and it will presently appear that St. Paul knew of no number either in the Hebrew or Greek text. Therefore this corruption of the Hebrew and Greek copies is not probably older than the middle of the third century. For Origen cites the text 1 Kings vi. 1 in his commentary on St. John's Gospel, where he mentions the year of Solomon's reign, and the month when he began to build his temple, but says nothing of the year from the exodus, or the Israelites going out of Egypt; nor is this year mentioned in the parallel place of the Book of Chronicles, where the building of the temple is related. And this is the more observable, because, wherever the years were added in the Books of Samuel and of the Kings, and the same transactions are related in the Chronicles; the years are always set down in the Chronicles as well as in the Books of Samuel and the Kings, and also exactly in the same manner; only, we may except that the years of the building of the temple, and of the king's own house, are set down in two distinct numbers, [the first seven years, the latter thirteen years,] 1 Kings vi. 38; vii. 1, but in 2 Chronicles viii. 1, the two sums are added together and called twenty years, as they are also called 1 Kings ix. 10, and the former distinct numbers are not mentioned at all in the Chronicles. So that this is no real exception to what is observed; and it is highly improbable, that so remarkable a number of years, as that from the exodus to the building of the temple, should be set down in the history of the kings, and yet not be mentioned in the chronicles of the same kings, where the time of the same building is mentioned, both the year of Solomon's reign, and the month of the year. And it is next to impossible to suppose, had the number been set down, as we now find it, in the Book of Kings, that no ancient writer, either Jewish or Christian, before Eusebius should have found or observed it, but should always reckon the years from the exodus to the temple by the times of the judges and kings to Solomon, whose computations are very different from the sum inserted in the Book of Kings, which sum is utterly irreconcilable to the numbers of the years of the judges.

Nothing is plainer than that the history of the judges always clearly and expressly distinguisheth the years of the several servitudes of the Jews, from the years of the government of their judges after each deliverance from servitude; and it is highly absurd to include the years of peace and rest in the years of war and bondage; and all the Christian writers (except Eusebius) unanimously distinguished them. And Eusebius himself distinguished them in his other writings; though in his Chronicon he has followed the lesser corrupted numbers of the Jews of his time, for which he is very justly found fault with by the learned chronologers and historians Anianus and Panodorus, who wrote in the latter end of the fourth century, and by Synceilus after them. But that the Jews had no ancient tradition for interpreting the history of the judges, so as to make the years of servitude a part of the years of the government of the judges, may from hence be certainly concluded, that Josephus all through the history of the judges reckons the years of servitude distinct from those of the government of the judges.

And it is observable, though neither Josephus nor any of the ancient Christian writers took notice of it, that the twenty years of Samson, in which he judged Israel, are expressly said to have been in the days of the Philistines, as being a part of the forty years in which the Israelites were subject to the Philistines; that we might not think these years distinct from, and subsequent to those of their servitude, as the years of all the other judges are related to be.

Our learned Archbishop Usher takes another method to make the history of the times of the judges agree to the supposed 480th year from the exodus to the temple; and would have the text, where it is said that upon the deliverance of the Israelites by Othniel (and so of the rest) that the land had rest forty years, to mean not that the Israelites enjoyed a peace of forty years under Othniel; but only that the land began to rest in the fortieth year after the rest which it had under Joshua. And thus by a different way of interpretation he leaves uncounted all the years of the several servitudes, or includes them in those of the judges. But this interpretation is forced and unnatural; and is, as before shown, contrary to the unanimous sense of the ancients, both Jews and Christians; and is to be esteemed a mere hypothesis of this great man, void of all foundation. Many of the most learned modern chronologers, as Joseph Scaliger, and others, have followed the scheme of Eusebius, not suspecting an error in the number of the book of Kings. The learned Petavius also follows this scheme with respect to some of the last judges, though he rejects it as absurd, with regard to most of them. He reckons the 480 years of the Book of Kings to commence, not from the Israelites going out of Egypt, as the text expressly says, but from their entering into the land of Canaan forty years after their coming out of Egypt. But had this been the meaning of the text, it would, no doubt, have been said, After the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt into the land of Canaan. Farther this learned chronologer, to reconcile his hypothesis both to the number of the Book of Kings, and to St. Paul's reckoning of 450 years from the division of the land by Joshua unto Samuel, is forced to suppose St. Paul to reckon not from the division of the land, though his words immediately refer to it, but to reckon from the exodus spoken of three verses before; than which there cannot be a more absurd interpretation. For as he admits the present position of the text, Acts xiii. 19, 20, it is evident that the words of the twentieth verse, after that he gave them judges, &c., must mean, after the completion of the forty years in the wilderness, ver. 18, and also, after the division of the land, ver. 19, nor will his interpretation answer his purpose; for after all he is again forced to make St. Paul mean, not precisely 450 years, but only 437 years. To such difficulties the most learned men are put to support a corruption of Scripture which they do not suspect. Having shewn from the calculations of the most ancient Jewish and Christian writers that the interval between the exodus and the temple exceeded 480 years by an hundred years at least; and that it is highly probable that the foundation of the temple was laid in the 580th year after the exodus; to put this important part of Scripture chronology out of all reasonable doubt, I shall produce at large the testimony of St. Paul, who says, The God of this people of Israel chose our fathers and exalted the people, when they dwelt as strangers in the land of Egypt, and with an high arm brought he them out of it. And about the time of forty years suffered he their manners in the wilderness. And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan he divided their land to them by lot: and after that he gave them judges, by the space of 450 years, unto Samuel the prophet: and afterward they desired a king; and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years.—Acts xiii. 17—21. This is the plain natural construction of the apostle's words, and the present order and reading of them is supported by the Syriac version, and most of the ancient MSS., especially by all the MSS. of Robert Stephen, with the Complutense and all the old editions. And in the words the apostle in plain and express terms reckons 450 years unto Samuel from the time of the division of the land of Canaan by Joshua amongst the tribes of Israel in the seventh year after they came into it; and thence forty years more to the death of Saul; in all 490 years. If we add forty years from the exodus to the death of Moses; and six years from thence to the division of the land in the seventh year; and forty years for the reign of David: and three years of Solomon's reign; the whole sum from the exodus to the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of the reign of Solomon is exactly 579 years; and so the temple was begun to be builded in the five hundred and eightieth year after the Israelites came out of Egypt.

This reckoning of the apostle was the received computation of the Jews in his time, and was deduced from the history of the Judges, and as it is irreconcilable to the present number of 480th year in the Book of Kings, we may be assured that the apostle knew of no such number there. It farther appears from the above cited words of St. Paul, that the whole term of the government of Samuel as judge, and of Saul as king, was exactly forty years. Eusebius understands the 450 years of St. Paul to refer to the times of the judges, though he himself differs from the computation of the apostle, which he supposes to have been the then received reckoning only, but not the true one. Eusebius took his lesser computation from later traditions of the Jews, after they had altered the chronology of the Scriptures, as I have before proved at large; and St. Paul followed the Scripture history itself, and the years set down in the Book of Judges: and knew nothing of the lesser number, which was long after his time inserted into the Book of Kings. Synceilus also understands the 450 years of the apostle to refer to the time of the judges; nor does any other interpretation of them appear ever to have been thought of by the ancients; nor would any other probably have been thought of by the moderns, but only for the sake of the interpolated number of the Book of Kings, which is inconsistent with the reckoning of the apostle, as well as with the history of the Book of Judges.

Our great chronologer Archbishop Usher, puts another sense upon the apostle's words, and would have them mean; And after these things which were done in the space of 450 years, [viz., from the time God chose their fathers, ver. 17, to which remote verse he refers them] He gave them judges, and so on. The various reading or order of some manuscripts in this passage of Scripture, which favours Archbishop Usher's sense, Dr. Mill rightly judges to have been made on purpose to avoid the difficulty of the apostle's calculation, and to make it consistent with the four hundred and eightieth year of the Book of Kings. But he thinks the learned prelate's sense, above given, may be admitted without altering the common or received reading and position of the words of the text. But in this Dr. Mill is mistaken; for this sense is neither so natural or grammatical, nor will the calculation agree with it neither. The apostle had spoken before of the time which the Israelites spent in the wilderness, after their coming out of Egypt; then he proceeds to mention their wars with, and conquest of, the seven nations, and the division of their land amongst the tribes by lot; the term of this also is related in Scripture: then he goes on in the history, as was natural, to speak of the years of the judges, after this division, unto Samuel, who was the last of them, and their years also are set down in their history: and from Samuel he proceeds to mention the kingly government of the Jews, and tells us the years of Samuel's and Saul's administration, which are not recorded in Scripture, but which, from the received tradition of the Jews, were, he says, the space of forty years; and concludes his narration with David, from whose family Christ descended, ver. 23. It is therefore a very unnatural and forced interpretation to refer the words of the apostle, which are immediately, and in natural construction applied to the times of the judges of the Israelites, to what is said three verses before of God's choosing their fathers. And if we should without reason allow them to be connected with what is said so remotely as ver. 17, yet the 450 years brings us no higher than the birth of Isaac. But God had chosen Abraham the first of their fathers twenty-five years before, when he called him out of Haran, into the land of Canaan, Gen. xii. 1—5. So wholly unsupported is Usher's sense of the apostle's words. And as the apostle's computation of 450 years from the division of the land of Canaan amongst the Jews to the time of Samuel's judging Israel, agrees exactly to the beginning of the building of the temple, in the five hundred and eightieth year after the exodus; so the message of judge Jephthah to the king of the Ammonites, Jud. xi. 13—26, agrees to this calculation. The king of the Ammonites, as a pretence for making war upon the Israelites, tells the messenger of Jephthah that the people of Israel had unlawfully seized upon his country after they came out of Egypt: to this charge Jephthah replies by his messengers, that Israel's title to this country could not be called in question, who at first conquered it in a lawful war, in which the king of the Amorites, to whom it belonged, was the aggressor; and had been in possession of it three hundred years, ver. 26. Josephus reads it, more than three hundred years. And it was more; for Sihon king of the Amorites was conquered in the end of the fortieth year after the exodus, Numb. xxi. 24, 25, and from thence to the time of Jephthah's undertaking the war against the Ammonites was 346 years, which Jephthah might well call 300 years, or more; and from Jephthah to the temple was 194 years; and thirty-nine more from the exodus to the conquest of the Amorites being added, the whole from the exodus to the temple was 579 years. Sulpitius Severus in his Sacred History, reckons the interval from the exodus to the temple 588 years; and observes that the Greek number 440 in the Book of Kings must be a corruption of the text, and this corruption both in the Hebrew text and in the Greek version has been fully proved in the foregoing observations. Melchior Canus, a learned Popish writer and commentator, suspected the number 480 in the Book of Kings, though authorized by the Latin Vulgate, to be a corrupt reading both in that copy and in the Hebrew text; and that the Greek text was corrupted also. And the more learned Jesuit Petavius owns that many great men among the Papists have been of opinion, either that this text of the Book of Kings has been corrupted, or however that the number of it is not the true and whole number of years from the exodus to the foundation of the temple. And he himself computes it to be 520 years as observed above.

One considerable objection to the term of 580, or more exactly 579 years, between the exodus and the temple remains to be cleared; and it is this; the Scripture mentions no more than five generations between Naashon, prince of the children of Judah, Num. i. 7; ii. 3, and Solomon, viz., Salmon or Salma, Booz, Obed, Jesse, and David. Matt. i. 5, 6; Luke iii. 31, 32; Ruth iv. 21, 22; 1 Chron. ii. 11, 12. This objection, I confess, is stronger against the term of 580 or 579 years, than against the sum of 480 or 479 years. But the learned Usher found it insuperable even against his lesser number of 480 years, as appears by his way of reconciling these generations to it.

Taking it for granted that Salmon married Rahab the harlot or inkeeper, mentioned in the Book of Joshua to have concealed the spies whom Joshua sent into Jericho, chap. ii. 1, he supposes that Salmon married her forty-two years after the Israelites came into the land of Canaan, and that she was twenty years of age when they first came thither, and so bare Booz when she was sixty-two or sixty-three years of age. This though not impossible, is yet very highly improbable. Then he supposes Booz to be 102 years old, at the birth of his son Obed; and Obed to be 111 years old at the birth of his son Jesse; and Jesse as many at the birth of David. The supposition of three such generations together is altogether incredible; and is not to be found in Scripture since the days of Serug, the great grandfather of Abraham; and it is observable, that from the birth of Abraham to only 470 years years after, there were nine generations, viz., Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Judas, Phares, Esrom, Aram, Aminadab, Naashon: for Eusebius makes Naashon thirty-five years old at the exodus, which was 505 years after the birth of Abraham; whereas six generations from Naashon to Solomon made, as was supposed, 600 years at least. Syncellus takes notice of this difficulty of reconciling the account of six generations from Naashon to Solomon to the great number of years in that interval, which he observes were no less than 600: and asks the question how this number of years was to be accounted for, making, according to this reckoning, 100 years, one generation with another? Syncellus offers no solution to the difficulty, not knowing what to say to it. But Eusebius endeavours to solve it by throwing all the years of servitude out of the number, and reckoning no more than 479 years from the exodus to Solomon's temple. But this lesser number we have seen is by no means reconcileable to so few intervening generations. There is but one way, I think, to solve the difficulty, and that is by supposing some generations to have been omitted in recording this genealogy. This was the opinion of the ancient Jews. The Chaldee paraphrase on Ruth i., and iv. 21 says, that Booz was Ibzan, who judged Israel at the time of the famine, mentioned chap. i. 1. Josephus brings him lower, and says, that the famine happened after the death of Samson, when Eli was the high priest; so that Booz was contemporary with Eli; and this may probably be the truth, and makes the succeeding generations from Booz to David to be agreeable to the common course of nature in those days. If this is admitted, since Salmon lived at least 400 years before Eli was high priest, he could not be the father of Booz, who was contemporary with Eli; and there must have been some generations either between Naashon and Salmon, or between Salmon and Booz, not mentioned in Scripture. These generations could not be between Naashon and Salmon if the Rahab he married, as mentioned by St. Matthew was Rahab the harlot, or innkeeper, mentioned in the Book of Joshua at the taking of Jericho. But as she is never mentioned in the Old Testament to have married Salmon, nor does St. Matthew style her Rahab the harlot, as she is called where she is mentioned in the Epistle to the Hebrews xi. 31, we cannot be certain who she was. However, I am most inclined to think that four or five generations are omitted between Salmon and Booz the father of Obed, and for the following reasons:—

In the interval of these five generations after Naashon to the death of David, there are recorded no less than nine or ten generations of high priests, from or after Eleazar the son of Aaron, though he outlived Naashon who was his uncle, Exod. vi. 23, many years. 1. Phineas; 2. Abishua; 3. Bukki; 4. Uzzi; 5. Zerahiah; 6. Meraioth; 7. Amariah; 8. Ahitub; 9. Zadok, 1 Chron. vi. 4—8, and ver. 50, 53. Ezra makes ten successions in this interval: for he says, that Amariah was the son of Azariah or Ezias, as he is called 1 Esd. viii. 2, and that Azariah was the son of Meraioth, Ez. vii. 2—5. Or if instead of those after Uzzi of the line of Eleazar we reckon those who succeeded him in the high priesthood of the line of Ithamar, there were eight generations or rather nine, viz., after Uzzi the fourth high priest above, the fifth was Eli. 6. Ahiab the son of Ahitub, the son of Phineas, the son of Eli, 1 Sam. xiv. 3, 18. Joseph. Antiq. Jud., lib. vi., c. 6. And his father Ahitub might be high priest before him, as Reland thinks [Antiq. Sac. Vet., Heb., p. 161]. 7. Achimelech; 8. Abiathar; 1 Sam. xxii. 20. Here are eight generations besides the vacancy between the death of Eli and Ahiah his great grandson, unless his father Ahitub was high priest before him, and succeeded Eli; and therefore we may reckon nine generations in this genealogy also.

Now it is no way probable that there should be more years by thirty or forty in five generations only recorded from Naashon to David, than in nine or ten successive descents in the families of the high priests, from Eleazar and his brother Ithamar to David. There is no doubt therefore to be made, but that several generations from Naashon to David, either have not been recorded in the Scriptures of the Old Testament, or have been left out in the present copies by some very ancient error. Such an omission has happened in the descent of Ezra the scribe, who is reckoned the fifth in descent from Zadok, who was high priest in the reign of Solomon. For he is said to be the son of Seraiah, the son of Azariah, the son of Hilkiah, the son of Shallum, the son of Zadok, the son of Ahitub, the son of Amariah, the son of Azariah, the son of Meraioth, &c., Ezra vii. 1, 2, 3; 1 Esd. viii. 1, 2. But the number of years from the death of Zadok to the birth of Ezra being four hundred, in four intervening generations, would justly incline us to think, if there was no other evidence, that some generations are wanting in this interval. And this is fact, and these generations are supplied in the Book of Chronicles; otherwise we should have been puzzled as much in the genealogy of Ezra as in that from Naashon to David. There were in the genealogy of Ezra two Zadoks, and all the generations between one and the other, are omitted in the Books of Ezra and Esdras or in both the parts of Ezra, but are recorded in the Book of Chronicles, and are no less than seven generations. 1. Ahitub; 2. Amariah; 3. Azariah; 4. Johanan; 5. Azariah; 6. Ahimaaz; 7. Zadok, 1 Chron. vi. 4—15, where we read the whole genealogy entire. Josephus also has it at large, and reckons more descents. Therefore, if Salmon was the immediate son of Naashon then Booz, the father of Obed, was a remote offspring; and if there were two of that name, one the son of Salmon, and the other the father of Obed, the intermediate generations might be omitted by the negligence of an ancient copier passing from one name to the other. And as this was the cause of the omission of several generations in the genealogy of Ezra, there is no reason why we may not conclude it to have been the same in that from Naashon to David. If to these observations we add, as taken notice of before, that in the fourteen generations from Abraham to David, there are more years in the last five from Naashon to David, than in the preceding nine from Abraham to Naashon; this is sufficient to clear the difficulty, and to put it out of all doubt that some generations between Naashon and David have been omitted.

chambers, for the laying the priests' garments and other utensils belonging to the temple, or to the worship of God, therein: see 2 Kings xi. 2; 1 Chron. xxviii. 12; Ezek. xlii. 13, 14. Round about; not simply, for there were none on the east side: and it may seem that there were some spaces left for the windows, which being narrow outwardly, little spaces would suffice; but in a manner, i. e., on all the sides except the east, where the porch was, and except some very small passages for the light. And yet these lights might be in the five uppermost cubits of the wall, which were above all these chambers; for these were only fifteen cubits high, and the wall was twenty cubits high. He made chambers, Heb., ribs, i. e., either other chambers above and besides the former; or rather, long galleries, which encompassed all the chambers, as the ribs do man's body; and which were necessary for passage to all the several chambers.

Bp. Patrick.—Against the wall of the house.] Or, "joining to it," as it is in the margin: for the beams were not fastened in the walls of the house, as we read in the next verse; but a wooden wall, some think, went round the house, unto which these chambers were fastened.

He made chambers round about.] In the Hebrew, he made ribs: by which some understand galleries. Which encompassed all the forenamed chambers, as our ribs do the entrails of our bodies. Without which there could not have been a convenient passage to the several chambers: which were made to serve the priests to lay their garments in, and wherein they rested, and ate of the sacrifices, and other uses.

Bp. Horsley.—He built chambers; rather, with Queen Elizabeth's translators, he built galleries. He made chambers: בָּלֵטִים, rather, joists. The word, I think, expresses the principal timbers of any part of a building, joists in a floor, uprights in the walls, rafters in the roof.

Ged.—5 And, contiguous to the wall of the house, he builded galleries, round about. Round about, contiguous to the wall, of both the temple and the oracle, he builded side-cells.

Booth.—5 And adjoining the wall of the house he built galleries round about; round about, adjoining the wall, both of the temple and of the oracle. He built also round about, side-cells.

In Solomon's temple this name is given (l. c.) to the three stories of side-chambers (בָּלֵטִים) which were built around the temple on three sides, five cubits in height, one above another. In v. 6, בָּלֵטִים fem. is spoken of the single stories: in v. 5, 10, where it is joined with the masc. it is put collect. for this whole part of the building. See A. Hirt der Tempel Salomo's, p. 24, 25; who however makes these stories to have risen to the height of the temple itself, following indeed the testimony of Josephus, but contrary to the express words of the Hebrew text in v. 10, בָּלֵטִים אֵלֶּיךָ הָיָה הַבְּנוֹת הַזֵּה וְהַזֵּה וְהַזֵּה וְהַזֵּה וְהַזֵּה.

דָּבָר, m. The oracle, i. e., that part of the temple, and of the most holy place, in which responses were given from above the Cherubim, and in which the ark of the covenant was placed: so called, as it has been usually thought, because the word of Jehovah, דְּבַר יְהוָה, was thence received by the chief priest. So Jerome, and, after him, divines generally. Gesenius, after Simonis and Ikenius, thinks it is derived from דָּבַר or ^{SCF}דָּבַר, postica pars rei; meaning the western part: because in this part of the temple the דָּבַר was; which is perhaps more ingenious than sound.

Chamber. See notes on ver. 5.

Bp. Patrick.—For without—he made narrowed rests round about.] In the margin we translate it, narrowings or rebatements. By which seems to be meant, that the wall to which they were adjoined was thicker below and above narrower: so that there was more space to make the upper chambers wider.

That the beams should not be fastened in the walls.] But in that outward wall which I mentioned before, made of wood: for he would have no holes made in the wall of the temple (see L'Empereur upon Codex Middoth, p. 147, 148, and Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, p. 40).

Au. Ver.—7 And the house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was building.

8 The door for the middle chamber was in the right side [Heb., shoulder] of the house: and they went up with winding stairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

9 So he built the house, and finished it: and covered the house with beams and boards of cedar [or, the vault-beams and the ceilings with cedar].

10 And then he built chambers against all the house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.

8 Chamber. See notes on ver. 5.

Pool.—8 In the right side, i.e., in the south side; whereby it is implied that there was another door on the left, or the north side, leading to the chambers on that side, though for brevity sake it be not mentioned here. With winding stairs; which were either, 1. Within the thickness of the temple wall, as many think; which is not probable as tending to the great weakening of the wall. And if such care was taken to preserve the walls entire and unbroken, that there might not be small holes made into it for the fastening of the beams of the chambers, ver. 6, it seems very absurd and incredible that there should be made such great breaches within them, as the stairs would require. Or rather, 2. Without the wall, and without the chambers too, as leading up to the gallery out of which they went into the several chambers. Into the middle chamber, or rather, into the middle story, or row of chambers, and so in the following words, out of the middle story; for these stairs could not lead up into each of the chambers, nor was it needful or convenient it should do so, but only into the story, which was sufficient for the use of all the chambers.

9 Covered the house, or the house, i.e., the top of the house, for the like is said of the sides and bottom, ver. 15, even the beams and boards, (or, the vault-beams and the ceilings; the arched beams and boards wherewith the top of the house was covered, which was made of other wood, which was more pliable than cedar, and would better endure bowing and bending,) with cedars.

10 Against all the house; which interpreters understand of those chambers described ver. 5, 6. But why should that be repeated again, and that so darkly and confusedly, after he had particularly and exactly treated of them (unless to give an account of the height of each chamber or story, which before was not done)? And the Hebrew words may be truly and properly rendered thus, He built a roof (to wit, a flat and plain roof, called yatziah, because of the exact resemblance it hath with the floor of a house) over all the house, according to the manner of all the Israelitish buildings, which were flat at the top; of which see Deut. xxii. 8; Josh. ii. 6; 2 Sam. xi. 2. The inner roof was arched, ver. 9, that it might be more beautiful and glorious to behold; but the outward roof was flat. Five cubits high, above the walls of the temple; which was necessary, that it might be a little higher than the arched roof, which it was designed to cover and secure. They rested, Heb., it rested, to wit, the roof; for the Hebrew verb is of the singular number. With timber of cedar: which rested upon the top of the wall, as the chambers, ver. 5, rested upon the sides of the wall. But all this I submit to the learned and judicious.

Bp. Patrick.—8 The door for the middle chamber.] By which they were to go into the middle row of chambers.

Was in the right side of the house.] On the south side, which in the Hebrew is called the right side, because when men look towards the east, the south is on their right hand. Some think there was the like door in the north [so Houb., Pool]: but it is more likely, that one door served to carry them round to all the chambers.

Out of the middle into the third.] There was the like pair of stairs into the third story.

9 So he built the house.] That is, the walls of the house. He also covered the top of it.

With beams and boards of cedar.] In the margin, the “vaultings and the ceilings” of cedar. That is, the roof was an arch within, which made it look more noble, though without it was flat.

10 Then he built chambers.] The word then is not in the Hebrew; and being omitted the sense is plain, that he gives an account of the height of these chambers, as before (ver. 6), of the breadth. But it is very briefly: and we are to understand that those below, and those in the middle, and those above, were every one of an equal height; viz., five cubits. So they were fifteen cubits in all; which was five less than the height of the house, for that was twenty cubits. Otherwise there would have been no room for the windows; which, I suppose, were above all these chambers, in the top of the house.

Bp. Horsley.—7—9. These three verses seem to be out of the proper order, which I take to be this, 8, 9, 7.

8 For the middle chamber. For הַחֲזָקָה read הַחֲזָקָה, of the nethermost gallery.

9 And covered the house with beams and boards of cedar.—And covered the house. The rafters and the uprights were of cedar.

Thus far the sacred writer describes the building of the הֵיכָל, though he names it הֵבִיחַ, except in the 3d verse. But in the next following verse, the 10th, כל הֵבִיחַ is to be understood in the proper sense of the words, of the whole space within the outmost wall, the building with the courts belonging to it.

10 Chambers: rather, with Queen Elizabeth's translators, galleries. These were galleries built upon the outer wall on the inside, as I conceive. The outer wall of stone might well support these galleries, though the weight of those mentioned in verses 5 and 6, had it rested on the wooden wall of the temple, might have endangered the building.

Ged.—7 For, when the house was building, it was builded of stones prepared before they were brought thither; so that neither hammer, nor pick, nor any other iron tool, was heard in the house, while it was building. 8 On the south side of the house there was an entrance to the middle gallery; and by a winding stair they went up to the middle, and thence to the third gallery. 9 Thus he builded the house, and finished it; and covered it with beams and boards of cedar. 10 And round the whole house he builded the galleries, each five cubits high; these rested on the house by beams of cedar.

Booth.—7 For, when the house was building, it was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor axe, nor any other iron tool heard in the house, while it was building. 8 In the lowest [so Houb., LXX., Chald., see also ver. 6] gallery there was an entrance on the right side of the house: and they went up with winding stairs to the middlemost gallery, and from the middlemost to the third gallery. 9 Thus he built the house, and finished it, and covered the house with beams and boards of cedar. 10 And the galleries he built about the whole house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house by beams of cedar.

Au. Ver.—15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, both the floor of the house, and the walls [or, from the floor of the house unto the walls, &c., and so ver. 16,] of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

17 And the house, that is, the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with knops [or, gourds] and open flowers [Heb., openings of flowers]: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

15, 16 Boards, planks. Oracle, see notes on ver. 5.

18 Knops. See below, and also notes on vii. 24.

Pool.—15 Both the floor, or rather, from the floor, as it is in the Hebrew; for the floor itself was not covered with cedar, but with fir, as it here follows. And the walls of the ceiling, or rather, as it is in the Hebrew, unto the walls of the ceiling, or of the roof, i. e., unto the top of the wall, which was even with the roof; for the roof itself was not of stone, but wood. Or, unto the walls of the ceiling, i. e., unto the ceiling itself; which performing the office of a wall, may well be called by that name. For the name of a wall is not appropriated to stone or brick, because we read of a brazen wall, Jer xv. 20, and a wall of iron, Ezek. iv. 3. And that wall into which Saul smote his javelin, 1 Sam. xix. 10, seems more probably to be understood of wood than of stone; especially, considering that it was the room where the king used to dine. So by this periphrasis, from the floor of the house unto the walls of the ceiling, he designs all the side walls of the house. He covered them, to wit, the side walls of the house now mentioned. With wood, i. e., with other kind of wood, even with fir, as appears from 2 Chron. iii. 5, wherewith the floor is here said to be covered. The floor of the house; this is here spoken only concerning the floor, because there was nothing but planks of fir; whereas there was both cedar and fir in the sides of the house, the fir being either put above or upon the cedar, or intermixed with or put between the boards or ribs of cedar, as may be gathered from the said parallel place, 2 Chron. iii. 5.

16 Twenty cubits on the sides of the house, i. e., the most holy place, which contained in the length of the house twenty cubits, by comparing this with ver. 2, and ver 17, which may be said to be on the sides of the house, because this part took off twenty cubits in length from each side of the house, and was also twenty cubits from side to side; so it was twenty cubits every way. Or, on the sides (i. e., on all the sides, as indeed it was) of the house, or, of that house, to wit, the most holy place, as it here follows. Or, from the sides of the house, i. e., from one side to the other. And so this is meant only of the partition-wall, which was between the holy and the most holy place. Both the floor and the walls, or rather, as ver 15, from the floor to the wall, or ceiling, or roof. So it is not necessary, at least by virtue of these words, to understand this, as they generally do, that the floor itself was built with cedar; but only all the sides of it from the bottom twenty cubits upward. If it be said that the whole house, and consequently the most holy place was thirty cubits high, ver. 2, it may be replied, either that that is true only of the greater house, or the holy place, which is called the house, ver. 17, and that the lesser or the most holy place, was but twenty cubits high, as divers think; or that the ten cubits at the top were covered with some other wood or thing, or were left open, that it might thereby receive both light from the candlesticks, and smoke from the altar of incense. For the oracle, even for the most holy place, i. e., that it might be the oracle, or, the most holy place. Or, on the inner side (whereby he might imply that the outside of the partition-wall which looked towards the holy place was not so covered) of (for the Hebrew lamed is very oft a note of the genitive case) the oracle, even of the most holy place: which last words are added to explain what he means by the word oracle, which he had not used before.

17 The house, i. e., the holy place. That is, the temple: this is added to restrain the signification of the word house, which otherwise notes the whole building. Before it, i. e., before the oracle. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, before my face, i. e., before the place of my presence. Or it may be said to be before God, because he being pleased to describe himself as sitting upon the cherubim, hath his face towards this house, where he beholds the services of his people.

18 All was cedar, i. e., all the house was covered with cedar. Quest. How was this true, when it was covered with fir, 2 Chron. iii. 5? Ans. 1. It was done with cedar and fir; of which see on ver. 15. 2. It may be said to be all cedar, because the greatest part was so, universal particles being oft so used. 3. Cedar is here named, not to exclude all other wood, but stone only, as the following words show. 4. Or, all was of cedar; that is, all the carving was of cedar.

Bp. Patrick.—15 He built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar.] He wainscotted, as we now speak, the whole house with cedar.

Both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling.] Or, as we translate it in the margin, from the floor of the house, unto the walls of the ceiling. That is, from the bottom to the top.

He covered them on the inside with wood.] The word them is not in the Hebrew. Which, if we retain, it relates to the walls of the ceiling: that is, to the top of the house, which in the inside was covered with wood (ver. 9).

Covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.] Or, with another sort of cedar, which was a great deal firmer and more lasting than fir (see ch. v. 8).

16 Sides of the house.] The house here meant is the most holy place: for he had spoken of the other part of the house, called the sanctuary, in the foregoing words.

Both the floor and the walls.] Or, as the foregoing verse, from the floor to the walls of the ceiling.

Even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.] Here he explains what he meant by the house in the beginning of the verse. And this was most properly the house of all the parts of the temple, because here the Divine Glory inhabited, and from hence God gave answer, when he was consulted. It is called debir as the outward house is called hechal.

17 The house.] That is, the holy place, as the next words explain it.

The temple before it.] The part of the house which was before the most holy place. In the Hebrew the words are before my face: that is, before the place where the Divine Glory appeared.

18 And the cedar of the house within was covered with knops.] Of an oblong figure, like an egg, as Forsterus thinks, comparing this place with 2 Kings iv., where there is the like word, and there translated gourds.

All was cedar.] This relates, I suppose to the knops and flowers, which were all of cedar: and so doth not contradict 2 Chron. iii. 5.

Bp. Horsley.—15, 16 In these two verses the sacred writer gives a more particular description of the inside of the building, which he had described in general terms in the latter part of the 9th verse. This resumed description of the inside of the building in general, makes a proper introduction to the description of the holy of holies in particular, which is the subject of the narrative from verses 16 to 32.

15 "And he built the walls of the house on the inside with uprights of cedar, from the floor of the house to the beams; lining with a flat surface [פָּנִים] of wood on the inside; and he laid the floor over the joists with deal."

The beams. For קִרְיָה, I would read קִרְיָה. כִּר (plural כִּרִּים) is a wall. But קִרְיָה (plural קִרְיָה) is a beam of a wall. The beams meant here I take to be beams at the upper part of the wooden wall receiving the tops of the uprights in mortices, and running parallel to the ground-plinths.

Lining. הִסָּסָן, participle Hiphil.

16 For הִקְרִיתָ, I would read, אֶת הַיִּסְדָּה וְהַקִּיר, and for יִסְדָּה וְהַקִּיר, I would read יִסְדָּה וְהַקִּיר.

"So he built twenty cubits (i. e., to the height of twenty cubits) of the sides of the house with uprights of cedar from the floor to the beams. And he fitted up in the innermost part [לְמִבְתֵּי] for an oracle, for a holy of holies."

This verse informs us of the height to which the wainscoting described in the preceding verse was carried, namely, to twenty cubits only. Comparing this with verses 2 and 9, it appears that the outer roof was formed of boards fastened to rafters meeting in a ridge, at the height of thirty cubits from the ground. But in the inside there was a flat ceiling of boards, at the height of twenty cubits only from the ground. So that a loft was left in the roof between the rafters and the flat ceiling, of the height of ten cubits.

Vertical section.

Ged.—14 When Solomon had finished the building of the house, 15 its walls, within, he lined with boards of cedar: from the floor up to the ceiling, he lined with cedar wood the inside of the walls: and the floor of the house he covered with planks of fir. 16 At the further end of the house he lined twenty cubits, both floor and walls, with boards of cedar: this he constructed to be the inner oracle, the most holy place: thus forty cubits were left for the outer house or temple. 17 The cedar of the inner house was carved into gourds with opening flowers: all was cedar; no stones were seen.

Booth.—14 And Solomon built the house and finished it. 15 And having built the walls of the house he covered the inside with wood, with boards of cedar up to the ceiling; but the floor of the house he covered with planks of fir. 16 And at the further end of the house, he lined twenty cubits, both floor and walls, with boards of cedar: this he constructed for the inner oracle. 17 Thus forty cubits were left for the outer house or temple. 18 And the cedar of the inner house was carved with knops and open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

Au. Ver.—20 And the oracle in the forefront was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure [Heb., shut up] gold; and so covered the altar which was of cedar.

In the forefront, or rather, which was in the inner part, to wit, of the house; called here in Hebrew, the forefront, not because a man first enters there, but because when a man is entering, or newly entered, into the house, it is still before him [so Bp. Patrick]. Thus the same, or the like word proceeding from the same root, is oft used, as Lev. x. 18; 1 Kings vi. 19, 29, 30, 36; 1 Chron. xxviii. 11. Twenty cubits in the height thereof. Object. The great house was thirty cubits high, above, ver. 2. Ans. It is probably affirmed by divers, that the most holy place was not so high as the holy place by ten cubits. And as the second part of the building was far lower than the first, which was the porch; so the third part might be considerably lower than the second. And it might be lower either, 1. Outwardly, or in respect of the walls of it, which might be only twenty cubits high, and at that height covered with a flat roof. Or, 2. Inwardly, or within the walls of that part. For although this part might be vaulted at the top, as the holy place was, which vaulted roof some think was ten cubits high; yet here might be the difference, that the vaulted roof of the holy place lay open to view, whereas that of the most holy was covered with a flat roof from wall to wall, at the height of twenty cubits. So covered, i. e., with gold, chap. vii. 48; 1 Chron. xxviii. 18. The altar, to wit, the altar of incense, which was put next to the most high place, ver. 22. Which was of cedar. Object. This altar was made of shittim wood, Exod. xxx. 1. Ans. Either that was covered with cedar, that it might be agreeable to the rest; all being cedar, as was said, ver. 18. Or this was a new altar which Solomon made by Divine command and direction, delivered to him, either immediately, or by his father; of which see 1 Chron. xxviii. 12, &c. But this place may seem to be better translated thus, and he covered the altar with cedar [so Houb., Bp. Patrick, Horsley]; either to make it like the rest; or because this was a new altar made of stone, and therefore fit to be covered with cedar, that it might better receive and retain the gold wherewith this cedar was overlaid [so Bp. Patrick] ver. 22.

Bp. Horsley.—In the forefront; חֲצִי. The Vulgate omits this word, which seems only to confuse the description.

And so covered the altar which was of cedar; rather, with Queen Elizabeth's translators, and covered the altar with cedar.

Houb.—20 Erat adytum viginti cubitos latum, et viginti cubitos altum, quod quidem auro optimo vestivit; allare autem vestivit cedro.

Pool.—The house, or, that house, to wit, the oracle. He made a partition by the chains of gold, i. e., he made a veil, which was upon or before the partition; or which was a further partition between the holy and most holy: which veil did hang upon these golden chains. Others render it thus, he closed or shut (as the word signifies in the Chaldee dialect, from which divers Hebrew words borrow their signification) it (i. e., the house now mentioned, to wit, the door of it) with chains or bars of gold. Before the oracle, i. e., in the outward part of the wall, or partition, which was erected between the oracle and the holy place; which is properly said to be before the oracle, which was the space within, and beyond that partition; for there the veil was hung, and there the chains or bars, or whatsoever it was which fastened the doors of the oracle, were placed. He overlaid it, to wit, the partition.

Bp. Patrick.—He made a partition by the chains of gold.] The most holy place was separated from the sanctuary by a partition: before which there was a veil also, which hung upon golden chains. Thus this passage is to be understood, for the partition itself did not depend upon chains.

Ged.—21 Before the oracle he made a partition-beam, with golden chains; which beam he overlaid with gold.

Booth.—21 Thus Solomon overlaid the inner house with pure gold: and he made chains of gold along the front of the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold.

Ver. 22.

Au. Ver.—22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

Bp. Patrick.—The whole house he overlaid with gold.] This is meant of the sanctuary, which was overlaid with gold, as well as the oracle.

Until he had finished all the house.] Some think the very chambers, which were without the house, were likewise made thus splendid. But I see no ground to affirm it.

Ver. 23.

וַיַּעַשׂ שְׁנֵי כְרוּבִים עֲצֵי זַיְתוֹן
עֶקֶר אֲמֹת קוֹמָתוֹ :

καὶ ἐποίησεν ἐν τῷ θαβῆρ δύο Χερουβὶμ δάκα πήχεων μέγεθος ἐστραβωμένον.

Au. Ver.—23 And within the oracle he made two cherubims of olive [or, oily] tree [Heb., trees of oil], each ten cubits high.

Oracle. See notes on ver. 5.

Cherubims. See notes on Exod. xxv. 18, vol. i., page 325.

Bp. Patrick.—Olive tree; or, as it is in the Hebrew, of tree of oil. For many such sorts of wood there were beside olive; as pine, cedar, &c. And these two are plainly distinguished; olive and oily wood, in Neh. viii. 15.

Gesen.—עֲצֵי זַיְתוֹן, oil-tree, i. e., oleaster, wild olive, (different from זַיִת the olive,) Neh. viii. 15; 1 Kings vi. 23.

Prof. Lee.—עֲצֵי זַיְתוֹן, variously rendered, the wild olive tree, the fir, the citron-tree; but, according to Celsius, a generic term for any tree of an oily or resinous nature, 1 Kings vi. 23, 31, 32; Neh. viii. 15; Is. xli. 19.

Houb.—23 עֲצֵי זַיְתוֹן, altitudo ejus; deest איש, quisque, ante עֲצֵי זַיְתוֹן; cujus scriptionis superest vestigium in Codice Alex. in quo legitur τὸ ἐν, unum. Non conveniebat affixum ἰ singulare, ubi antecessit כְּרוּבִים, Cherubim, numero plurali.

Ver. 27.

Au. Ver.—27 And he set the cherubims within the inner house: and they stretched forth the wings of the cherubims [or, the cherubims stretched forth their wings], so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

Bp. Patrick.—They stretched forth the wings of the cherubim.] Or rather (as in the margin) “the cherubims stretched forth their wings.”

Ged., Booth.—The wings of the cherubs were expanded so that the wing of the one cherub touched, &c.

Ver. 29, 30.

Au. Ver.—29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of cherubims and palm trees and open flowers [Heb., openings of flowers], within and without.

30 And the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

Within and without.

Ged., Booth.—Within and without the oracle [so Pool, Patrick].

Au. Ver.—31 And for the entering of the oracle he made doors of olive tree: the lintel and side posts were a fifth part of the wall [or, five-square].

Olive tree. See notes on ver. 23.

A fifth part of the wall.

Pool.—i.e., Four cubits in height or breadth, whereas the wall was twenty cubits. Or, a fifth part of the door now mentioned. Or rather, five-square, having five sides and five angles, which is not incongruous nor unusual in buildings.

Bp. Patrick.—The lintel and side posts were a fifth part of the wall.] These words are very obscure; for the words “of the wall” are not in the Hebrew, but only a fifth. Which may be understood to signify, that they held the proportion of a fifth part of the doors. But there are those who think the meaning is, that this gate was the fifth in number belonging to the house. The first they make account was that which led into the court of the people; the second, into the court of the priests; the third, was the door of the porch; the fourth, of the holy place; and this fifth of the oracle. And accordingly they interpret these words, ver. 33, the fourth.

Ged.—For the entrance of the oracle he made doors of resinous wood. The lintel of the door-posts was a fifth part of the breadth of the house.

Booth.—31 And for the entrance of the oracle he made doors of wild olive wood: the lintel of the side posts was a fifth part of the breadth of the house.

Olive tree. See notes on ver. 23.

Pool.—A fourth part of the wall. Or, rather, four-square. See on ver. 31.

Ged.—33 For the doors of the temple he also made door-posts of resinous wood, which occupied the space of a fourth part of the breadth of the house.

Booth.—33 Thus also he made for the door of the temple posts of wild olive wood, a fourth part of the breadth of the temple.

Au. Ver.—34 And the two doors were of fir-tree: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

Ged.—Turned on two circular hinges.

Booth.—Turned on two hinges.

Gesen.—3. In 1 Kings vi. 34, for עֲצֵי, we ought prob. to read חֲלָצִים, [so LXX, Houb., Dathe] leaves of the door, which stands in the first clause and in cod. Kennic., No. 150.

καὶ ᾠκοδόμησε τὴν αὐλὴν τὴν ἐσωτάτην· τρεῖς στίχους ἀπελεκήτων, καὶ στίχος κατεργασμένης κέδρου κυκλῶθεν· καὶ ᾠκοδόμησε τὸ καταπέτασμα τῆς αὐλῆς τοῦ αἰλᾶμ τοῦ οἴκου τοῦ κατὰ πρόσωπον τοῦ ναοῦ.

Au. Ver.—36 And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar-beams.

Pool.—The inner court, i. e., the priests' court, 2 Chron. iv. 9; so called, because it was next to the temple, which it did encompass. With three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams; which is understood either, 1. Of the thickness of the wall, the three rows of stones being one within another, and the cedar innermost, as a lining to the wall. Or, 2. Of the height of the wall, which was only three cubits high, that the people might see the priests sacrificing upon the altar, which was in their court; each row of stones being about a cubit, and possibly of a differing colour from the rest, and all covered with cedar. Or rather, 3. Of so many galleries, one on each side of the temple, whereof the three first were of stone, and the fourth of cedar, all supported with rows of pillars; upon which there were many chambers for the uses of the temple, and of the priests; for it is hard to think that only the making of a low wall about the court would be called a building of the court. And that a great number of buildings and rooms were necessary for the various offices and works which were to be done, and the treasures of all sorts which were to be laid up in the temple, largely so called, is sufficiently evident from the nature of the things, and divers passages in Scripture: see, among others, 1 Chronicles xxviii. 11, 12.

Bp. Patrick.—With three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams. That the people who were in the outward court might see what the priests did: the wall which separated the priests from the court of the people being but three cubits high (as most understand these words); for the cedar was not laid upon the top of the wall, but was the facing of it within side. The priests likewise from hence might speak and deliver any message from God to the people.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams. Does not this intimate that there were three courses of stone, and then one course of timber all through this wall? Three strata of stone and one stratum of timber, and so on. If so, could such a building be very durable? This is also referred to in the succeeding chapter, ver. 11; and as both the temple and Solomon's house were built in the same manner, we may suppose that this was the ordinary way in which the better sort of buildings were constructed. Calmet thinks that to this mode of building the prophet alludes, Hab. ii. 11: The stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it. But it should be observed that this was in the inner court, and therefore the timber was not exposed to the weather. The outer court does not appear to have been built stratum super stratum of stone and wood.

CHAP. VII. 1.

וַתִּבְנֶה יְהוֹשָׁפָט בֵּית־יְהוָה וְגו'

καὶ τὸν οἶκον ἐαυτῷ ᾠκοδόμησεν Σαλωμών κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—1 But Solomon was building his own house thirteen years, and he finished all his house.

Pool.—His own house; the royal palace for himself, and for his successors. Or, his houses [so Ged.], the singular number being put for the plural.

Ged.—The first twelve verses of this chapter are in the Greek placed at the end of it: and that by some is thought to be their proper place. I would rather place them, with Josephus, at the end of chap. viii.

Ver. 2.

וַיִּבְנוּ אֶת־בֵּית יְהוָה וַיַּעַר הֶלְבָּנוֹן מֵאֶחָ אָרְבּוֹ וְחֲמִשִּׁים אַמָּה רָחְבּוֹ וּשְׁלֹשִׁים אַמָּה קוֹמָתוֹ עַל אַרְבָּעָה מִנִּי עַמּוּדָי אֲרָזִים וּבִרְתֻּלֹת אֲרָזִים עַל־הָעַמּוּדָיִם :

Au. Ver.—9 He built also the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was an hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars with cedar beams upon the pillars.

Pool.—The house of the forest of Lebanon; a house so called, either, first, because it was built in the mountain and forest of Lebanon, for his recreation there in summer time. But it is generally and more probably held, that it was in or near Jerusalem, both because there was the throne of Judgment, ver. 7, which was fittest to be in the place of his constant and usual residence; and because there was the chief magazine of arms, Isaiah xxii. 8, and Solomon's golden shields were put there, as is manifest from 1 Kings x. 17; xiv. 25, 26, 28, which no wise prince would do in a place so remote from his royal city, and in the utmost borders of his kingdom, as this was. Or rather, secondly, From some resemblance it might have with that place [so Patrick], for the pleasant shades and groves which were about it; nothing being more frequent, both in sacred and other writers, than to transfer the names of Carmel, or Tempe, or the like, to other places of the same nature and quality with them.

Gesen.—House of the forest of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 2; x. 17, i. e., the armoury or arsenal of King Solomon, called also פֶּסֶךְ, Neh. iii. 19, and having its name from the cedar of Lebanon with which it was built [so Clarke, Ged.].

Four rows.

Horsley.—Read “three rows” [so Houb.]. See verse 3.

Houb.—Græci Intt. τριῶν στίχων, trium ordinum. Legunt, non ἑνδεκά, sed τρεῖς, quod sic legendum monet versus inferior, in quo numerantur columnæ quadraginta quinque, et ordine in unoquoque columnæ quindecim.

Au. Ver.—3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the beams [Heb., ribs], that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.

Forty-five pillars. See notes on ver. 2.

Bp. Patrick.—So there were but three rows of pillars in the second story [so Pool], which were sufficient for the support of the roof. And we may guess from hence that there were threescore pillars below.

Ged., Booth.—Upon sixty pillars. So Arab. which from ver. 2 appears to be the true reading; unless, with Sep. we read three rows in ver. 2. The rest have forty-five.—Ged.

Maurer.—אֲרָבָעִים וְחֲמֵשָׁה חֲמֵשָׁה עָשָׂר הָיוּ Sed si 15, per 4., (vs. 2) multiplicaveris, habebis summam 60. 4 And there were windows in three rows, and light was against light [Heb., sight against sight] in three ranks.

Bp. Patrick.—Light was against light.] Directly opposite one against the other, which we call thorough lights.

In three ranks.] Or, on three sides of the house, the south, the north, and the east; that it might have the freer air. On the west side was the porch, and so no windows were there. Others interpret it, the windows were exactly one under another [so Pool] in three rows.

Ged., Booth.—And there were three rows of windows, and in those three rows, light was opposite to light.

Houb.—4 Tres ordines erant fenestrarum, lumine earum triplici uno alteri respondente.

מַחֲזָה אֶל מַחֲזָה, (ordines tres fenestrarum) lumine contra lumen. Intelligendum fenestras fuisse unam alteri adversam, ita ut lumina fenestrarum rectâ lineâ permearent ab uno latere domûs ad alterum latus, per fenestras medias, quæ erant media inter domûs intercolumnia. Quidam hæc ita explicant, quasi diceretur fuisse in palatio Salomonis tria tabulata, unum super aliud, quorum fenestræ aliæ supra alias essent rectâ in lineâ, eaque perpendiculari. Verum nihil habet Contextus de tribus tabulatis; quæ si extitissent, non omitteretur, fuisse gradum, per quem ascenderetur è tabulato inferiori ad superius, neque enim id omissum fuit in tribus templi tabulatis. Videtur potius, non fuisse in eo Palatio tabulatum superius, et spatium inter columnarium fuisse deambulacrum, in cuius extremo uno esset aula solii Salomonis, in altero extremo cubicula, in quibus Salomon habitaret.

Ver. 5.

Au. Ver.—5 And all the doors and posts were square with the windows [or, spaces and pillars were square in prospect]; and light was against light in three ranks.

Bp. Patrick.—All the doors and posts were square, with the windows.] The figures of the doors and of the windows were one and the same; viz. square.

Light was against light.] This is meant of the smaller windows that were over the doors [so Pool]; which, it is likely, were also square.

Ged., Booth.—And all the apertures and posts of the windows were square: and light was opposite to light in three rows.

Gesen.—פָּשֶׁ מ. a layer of beams or joists, etc., 1 Kings vii. 5, all the doors and the posts were פָּשֶׁ מַעֲשֵׂה made square with layers of beams, i. e., were not arched but covered above with beams, and therefore square.

כַּל, 2. over against, opposite. The force of a subst. seems to be retained in 1 Kings vii. 5, כַּל חֲצוֹת אֶל־חֲצוֹת the face of a window to a window, i. e., window over against window.

Prof Lee.—פָּשֶׁ, m. once, 1 Kings vii. 5. Arab. سَقْف, tectum domus. Covering; a coping.

Houb.—5 Januæ omnes et intercolumnia quadrata erant, et terno ordine se se invicem prospiciebant. וְסָח וְסָח. Forsan וְסָח, prospiciebant, vel prospectum dabant, ne discordia sit numeri cum רבצים, plurali.

Au. Ver.—6 And he made a porch of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was before them [or, according to them]: and the other pillars and the thick beam were before them [or, according to them].

Pool.—The porch, now mentioned, which is said to be before them, i. e., before the pillars on which the house of Lebanon stood, or before the doors and posts mentioned ver. 5; or, a porch, i. e., another and a lesser porch, which was before them, i. e., before the pillars of the greater porch now mentioned. And the other pillars, or, and pillars, i. e., fewer and lesser pillars for the support of the lesser porch. The thick beam; which was laid upon these pillars, as the others were, ver. 2.

Bishop Patrick.—The porch was before them.] That is, before the pillars of the great house, before spoken of.

The other pillars and the thick beam were before them.] That is, they were directly opposite one to the other. Or, if we follow the marginal translation "according to them," the sense is, that it had its pillars and beams just like the great house; and, it is likely, rooms built upon those beams for his servants.

Ged.—6 He then builded the porch, with pillars: its length was fifty cubits, and its breadth thirty cubits. The porch was before the pillars, and over these were thick planks.

The porch was before the pillars, &c. The present Hebrew text is to me unintelligible; and so are all the versions of it, that I have seen. By a small alteration, which I trust will appear to be reasonable, I have made sense of it. The porch was probably in the form of a piazza. The pillars were placed at some distance from the wall, either on one side only, or all around; and that space was covered with a thick flooring, to keep out the rain and afford a shady walk. Before those pillars was the open part of the porch.

Booth.—6 He then made a porch with pillars; its length was fifty cubits, and its breadth thirty cubits: and the area of the porch was before those pillars, and over them were thick planks.

Gesen.—פָּ m. (r. פָּ) a term of architecture, a threshold, step, i. e., a projection or offset, perhaps collective, forming the ascent into a portico, 1 Kings vii. 6; Ezek. xli. 25. Plur. פָּ v. 26, as if from a sing. פָּ. Targ. well in both passages אֶפְדָּה thresholds. Vulg., epistylum, architrave, against the context in both places; although such is the poverty of the Hebrew in terms of this sort, that the Heb. פָּ may perhaps have comprehended the epistyle. This is also favoured by the etymology from פָּ, to cover, q. v.

Prof. Lee.—פָּ. Probably, A covering of planks, 1 Kings vii. 6; Ezek. xli. 25, 26. Vulg. epistylia; grossiora ligna; latitudinem parietum. From the places, as well as the etymology, "freeze," or "fascia"—as used in architecture—is probably the thing meant.

Au. Ver.—7 Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar from one side of the floor to the other [Heb., from floor to floor].

Gesen.—עַד הַיָּמִין עַד הַיָּמִין, from floor to floor, from the floor to the ceiling, i. e., the walls or sides of the room from bottom to top; not, as De Wette, 'over the whole floor.'

Au. Ver.—8 And his house where he dwelt had another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made also an house for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like unto this porch.

Bp. Patrick.—8 His house where he dwelt had another court within the porch. There was a court between the porch and the house, which may be called the inner court; and then another beyond the porch, which may be called the outward. So that it stood between two courts, which were both alike.

Like unto this porch.] Not for figure, or bigness; but for the materials of which it was built.

Ged.—And his own apartment, in which he there sat, was a court-hall behind the porch, and of similar workmanship. Solomon also made for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had married, an apartment, similar to this porch.

Booth.—8 And his own apartment, where he sat, was a court-hall, behind the porch, of like workmanship. Solomon made also a house for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like to this porch.

Au. Ver.—9 All these were of costly stones, according to the measures of hewed stones, sawed with saws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and so on the outside toward the great court.

Pool.—All these buildings described here and in the former chapter. According to the measures of hewed stones; either, first, which were hewed in such measure and proportion, as exact workmen used to hew ordinary stones; or, secondly, as large as common hewed stones, which are oft very great.

Bp. Patrick.—All these were of costly stones,—within and without.] All the fore-mentioned buildings were polished on both sides: so that they appeared both within and without; that is, both on the inside which was towards the palace of Solomon, and on the outside which was towards the great court.

So on the outside towards the great court.] Not only on the front of the house, but on the backside of it towards the great court.

Ged.—9 “All those buildings, from the foundation unto the coping, were of costly stones, cut after a model, inside and outside sawed with saws: [and outwardly, unto the great court.]”

The words within brackets appear to me an interpolation [so Booth.].

Booth—9 All these were built of costly stones, squared to a measure, and cut with saws, within and without, even from the foundation to the coping.

Au. Ver.—10 And the foundation was of costly stones, even great stones, stones of ten cubits, and stones of eight cubits.

Pool.—Stones of ten cubits; not square, which would have been both unnecessary, and unportable, and unmanageable; but of solid measure, by which stones and timber are usually measured; and so they were only two cubits square, but there were twenty solid cubits contained in them. And so also the following eight cubits are to be understood.

Bp. Patrick.—“The roof was finished after the same manner; with stones and cedar-beams.

Au. Ver.—12 And the great court round about was with three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the house of the Lord, and for the porch of the house.

Three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams. See notes on vi. 36.

Pool.—The great court, to wit, of Solomon's dwelling-house, mentioned ver. 8. Both for the inner court of the house of the Lord, or, as (Heb., and, which is oft used in that sense for a particle of comparison or similitude, as Prov. xi. 25; xvii. 3; xxv. 23,) for the inner court, &c., i. e., as it was in that inner court, of which the very same thing is said 1 Kings vi. 36. Otherwise it might seem very improper and impertinent to speak of the court of the Lord's house here, where he is treating only of Solomon's house. For the porch of the house, or, of this house, to wit, of which I am here speaking, i. e., of the king's house, the porch whereof had pillars, ver. 6, and these both and this of each, or one pillar, as it is in the Hebrew. Object. But then it should have been thirty-six cubits. Ans. Either the odd half cubit is swallowed up either in the top of the chapter, or in the bottom of the basis of each pillar; or it is neglected in the account, as commonly small measures or numbers are. Line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about: so the diameter was four cubits.

Bp. Patrick.—For he cast two pillars of brass, of eighteen cubits high apiece. In 2 Chron. iii. 15 it is said, he made two pillars of thirty-five cubits high: which doth not contradict these words, it being evident that there he speaks of both the pillars (as Abarbanel observes), which were thirty-five cubits. But here he speaks of them singly, which were each but eighteen cubits. Both of them, indeed, make thirty-six cubits; but one cubit must be allowed for the basis of each, which is not considered in the book of Chronicles. This seems a better solution of this small difficulty than that of L'Empereur, in his preface to Codex Middoth, where he saith, one of these writers speaks of the common cubit, and the other of the sacred, which was double to the common. Each pillar, therefore, he thinks was eighteen sacred cubits, but thirty-five common; to which one common cubit must be added for the basis. But this distinction of common and sacred cubits is not allowed by everybody.

Bp. Horsley.—Eighteen cubits high. In 2 Chron. iii. 15, we read "thirty and five cubits high." If the number there were twenty-five, the two accounts might easily be reconciled, by the supposition that the writer of the Book of Kings gives the height of the cylindrical column by itself, without the lily above the cylinder, and the chapter upon the lily, and that the writer of the Book of Chronicles gives the whole height from the ground to the summit of the ball.

Ged.—15 He cast two pillars of brass [for the porch of the house, LXX] each pillar eighteen cubits high; and a line of twelve cubits was the circumference of each pillar.

Their thickness, from the hollow part, was four inches. Most copies of Sept.; and from Jer. lii. 51, we learn that this was the real thickness.

Au. Ver.—16 And he made two chapters of molten brass, to set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapter was five cubits.

Pool.—The height of the one chapter was five cubits. Object. It is but three cubits in 2 Kings xxv. 17. Ans. The word chapter is taken diversely, as hundreds of other words are; either more largely for the whole, so it is five cubits; or more strictly, either for the pommels, as they are called, 2 Chron. iv. 12, or for the cornice or crown; and so it was but three cubits, to which the pomegranates being added make it four cubits, as it is below, ver. 19; and the other work upon it took up one cubit more, which in all made five cubits.

Bishop Patrick.—This account of them Ezra also gives, 2 Chron. iii. 15. Yet in 2 Kings xxv. 17 they are said to be but three cubits. But it is to be observed, that it immediately follows in that place, that there was a wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapiters; which in all made five cubits; and are all here comprehended in the word chapiter.

A net work. So Sept., which alone has preserved the right reading. The rest have the word seven, which is unintelligible. It has been justly observed by Michaëlis and others, that although the ornaments of those pillars are minutely described, yet it is not easy to find equivalent terms in modern languages; and it is difficult to render them properly.

Au. Ver.—18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one network, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapiter.

Pool.—And he made; or, so he made, or framed, or perfected. Two rows: either of pomegranates, by comparing this with ver. 20, or of some other curious work.

Bp. Patrick.—18 He made the pillars. That is, he finished them in this manner.

Two rows round about, &c.] There were two rows of pomegranates; which took up one of the five cubits, whereof the chapiter consisted.

Bp. Horsley.—In this verse the words הַמַּעֲמֹדִים and הַמַּעֲמֹדִים, pillars and pomegranates have certainly changed places [so Calmet, Houb., Ged., Booth.].

“And he made the pomegranates, even two rows all round upon one network, to cover the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars.”

Ged.—18 Then, to cover the capitals that were on the tops of the pillars, he made two rows of pomegranates, round about the net work of each capital.

The Hebrew words in this verse that correspond to pillars and pomegranates, have, by changing places, turned the text into nonsense. Indeed the whole of this and the next verse is strangely misarranged and mutilated. I have endeavoured to render it intelligibly.

Booth.—18 And he made to cover the capitals, which are on the tops of the pillars, two rows of pomegranates, round about the net-work of one capital; and so he did for the other capital.

Au. Ver.—19 And the chapters that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily work in the porch, four cubits.

Pool.—In the porch; or, as in the porch, i. e., such work as there was in the porch of the temple, in which these pillars were set, ver. 21, that so the work of the tops of these pillars might agree with that in the top of the porch. So there is only an ellipsis or defect of the particle as, which is frequent, as Gen. xlix. 9; Deut. xxxiii. 22; Psalm xi. 1; Isa. xxi. 8. Four cubits; of which see on ver. 16.

Bp. Patrick.—In the porch.] Such as were in the porch of the temple.

Bp. Horsley.—19 Dr. Lightfoot's conjecture that this lilywork was not on the chapter, but was the finishing of the top of the column itself, is indisputably confirmed by verse 22. But the words of this verse are out of the proper order, and should be thus arranged:

וְכִתְרֹת אֲשֶׁר עַל רִאשׁ הָעַמּוּדִים
בְּאֵמָלָם מַעֲשֶׂה שְׁשֹׁן אַרְבַּע אַמּוֹת :

"And the chapters [that were] upon the top of the pillars [were] in a socket [באֵמָלָם] of the shape of a lily, of four cubits."

These four cubits are to be understood, I think, of the general breadth of the lily below the expansion of the leaf.

Vertical section of a lily.

Ged.—19 The capitals, that were on the top of the pillars [in the porch], had four cubits of lily work.

19 Four cubits. This was the lower part of the capital. The net-work then was but of one cubit. The words in brackets appear to be an interpolation. So Booth.

Houb.—19 Hæc autem capitella, quæ columnis incumbant, fabrefacta erant quasi lilium [in porticu quatuor cubitorum].

[In some editions of the LXX this forms the latter end of ver. 19; and ver. 20 is wanting.]

Au. Ver.—20 And the chapters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the network: and the pomegranates were two hundred in rows round about upon the other chapter.

Bp. Patrick.—The chapters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the network:] This is very obscure, because shortly delivered. But the meaning seems to be, that the lily-work being above and below, at the top and the bottom of the chapters, the middle cubit (called the belly) was all covered with pomegranates.

And the pomegranates were two hundred—round about upon the other chapter.] In the book of Jeremiah, lii. 23, it is said that there were ninety-six on a side; but all of them, upon the net-work, were a hundred in all; which Abarbinel thus explains: The pomegranates on the net-work were towards the four quarters of the world, being twenty-four towards each quarter; which in all made ninety-six. And in each angle there being one great pomegranate, they made up the number a hundred.

Bp. Horsley.—20 “And the chapters upon the two pillars were still above (i. e., above the lily) from the region of the bulge, which was over against [or even with] the network, and the pomegranates, being two hundred, were set in rows round either chapter.”

“The bulge,” דבנן. This I take to be the place of the utmost swell of the leaf of the lily; the circle in which lie the apsides of all the curves (a a) formed by the vertical section of the flower of the lily.

I imagine that the network upon the spherical chapters covered the zone that lies between the tropics. That when the chapter was placed upon the socket, it went just so far in, that the lower edge of this zone was in contact with the bulge of the lily all round, and so much of the globe was visible above the lily as lay above this circle.

I find by computation that the whole diameter of the sphere being five cubits, the portion of the axis which, upon this supposition, would rise above the bulge of the lily, and belong to the visible segment of the sphere, would be three and a-half cubits. Now if the depth of the lily-form socket below the bulge was likewise three and a-half cubits, this socket, with the visible segment of the sphere, would make a height of seven cubits, which added to eighteen, the length of the cylinder below the lily, would make the whole height twenty-five cubits. See note on verse 15.

The pomegranates. It appears by 2 Chron. iii. 16, that the pomegranates were strung upon chains. There must have been two chains for each chapter, and 100 pomegranates upon each chain. Thus there would be 200 pomegranates upon each chapter, as is said here, and 400 in all. See verse 42.

Did these chains form the edges or terminations of the network zones, or were they drawn obliquely across the zone in either chapter, marking the track of the ecliptic?

Ged.—20 And, above that, about the swelling which was by the net-work, the capitals had also rows of pomegranates, round about: two hundred on each capital.

Booth.—And above this, on the swelling which was by the network of the capitals, on the two pillars, were rows of pomegranates; two hundred on the one capital, and two hundred on the other capital.

Houb.—20 Capitella autem, super columnas duas supereminabant, ita ut essent juxta umbilicum, in quo rete transducebatur, malogranata ducenta, bino ordine alterum capitellum ambiente.

Dathe.—20 Atque habebant in partibus suis eminentibus, quæ nempe opus reticulatum excedebant, ducentorum malogranatorum ordines. Sic erat in utroque capitello.

Unde apparet, coronamenta illa non fuisse rotunda, quemadmodum nec lilium rotundum est. Porro quia in duobus malogranatorum ordinibus fuerunt ducenta malogranata, et rete fuit ex funibus sive catenis contortis, ita ut septem fila unumquodque coronamentum ambirent, efficitur, in uno ordine fuisse malogranata majora, in altero minora, et ea fuisse distributa in tres series

Au. Ver.—And he set up the pillars in the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name thereof Jachin [that is, He shall establish]: and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof Boaz [that is, In it is strength].

Pool.—Jachin signifies he, i.e., God, shall establish, to wit, his temple, and church, and people: and Boaz signifies in it, or rather, in him, (to answer the he in the former name,) is strength. So these pillars being eminently strong and stable, were in a manner types or documents of that strength which was in God, and would be put forth by God for the defending and establishing of his temple and people, if they were careful to keep the conditions required by God on their parts.

Bp. Patrick.—21 It is generally thought, that these pillars were made and erected only for ornament; because they supported no building. But Abarbinel's conjecture is not improbable, that Solomon had respect to the pillar of the cloud, and the pillar of fire, that went before them and conducted them in the wilderness, and was the token of the Divine providence over them. These he set at the porch or entrance of the temple (Jachin representing the pillar of the cloud, and Boaz the pillar of fire), praying and hoping that the Divine Light, and the cloud of his glory would vouchsafe to enter in there; and by them God and his providence would dwell among them in this house.

Ged.—Jachin...Boaz.—I believe the right name of the former is Jachan, which is that of the Greek version; the English of which is, it shall stand. The other signifies in strength, or strongly. Perhaps the artist meant the latter a continuation of the former: it shall stand, firmly.

Au. Ver.—24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows, when it was cast.

Knops. See notes on vi. 18.

Pool.—Knops; or, carved or molten figures; for learned Hebraicians note, that this word signifies the figures or pictures of all sorts, as flowers, beasts, &c. This general word is particularly explained of oxen, 2 Chron. iv. 3, unless there were so many figures or sculptures of gourds, or other flowers, and in each of these a little ox's head. Ten in a cubit; so there were three hundred in all. The knops were cast together with the sea, not carved. In two rows; it seems doubtful whether the second row had ten in each cubit, and so there were three hundred more; or whether the ten were distributed into five in each row.

Bp. Patrick.—Under the brim—round about there were knops compassing it.] They were in the shape of an egg; on the top of every one of which was an ox head; from whose mouth water gushed out; so Abarbinel gathers from 2 Chron. ii. 3, where they are called oxen, from the figure of their head.

Ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about.] So there were three hundred of these knops in all; the sea being thirty cubits round.

The knops were cast in two rows.] They were not carved afterward, but cast at first, when the sea was molten. And there being two rows of them, Abarbinel thence concludes there were six hundred in all, one under another. From whence water might flow out of the sea, to wash a great number at a time.

[Alex.] — δισχύλους χοεῖς χωροῦντας.

Au. Ver.—26 And it was an hand breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies: it contained two thousand baths.

Pool.—Object. This sea is said to contain three thousand baths, 2 Chron. iv. v. Answ. Either there were two sorts of baths, as of cubits, the one common, the other sacred, and the sacred held half as much more as the common; or rather, he here speaks of what it did actually and usually contain, to wit, two thousand baths, which was sufficient for use; and in 2 Chron. iv. 5, he speaks of what it could contain if it were filled to the brim, as it is implied in the Hebrew words, which differ from these, and properly sound thus, strengthening itself, (to wit, to receive and hold as much as it could, or being filled to its utmost capacity,) it contained, or could contain, three thousand baths.

Bp. Patrick.—Two thousand baths.] A bath being of the same bigness with an ephah (Ezek. xlv. 11), is thought to contain eight gallons: so that this sea contained five hundred barrels; that is, it had thus much water constantly in it. But if it had been filled up to the brim, it would have held three thousand baths, as we read 2 Chron. iv. 5, which quantity they were not wont to put into it, lest with the wind it should run over. Or, as the most learned of the Jews reconcile these two places, these words in the Book of the Kings are to be understood of moist things; but those in the Chronicles of dry; which being heaped up, it would contain a third part more than of things liquid. With which some compare those words of our Saviour, (Luke vi. 38), "Good measure heaped up, shaken together, and running over."

Houb. — אַלְפִים, duo millia bathorum. Legitur 2 Par. iv. 5, שְׁשָׁה אֲלָפִים; tria millia; quam scriptionem anteferimus. Nec vero difficile fuit, ut omitteretur שְׁשָׁה prope שֵׁשׁ, satis simile verbum.

Au. Ver.—28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders, and the borders were between the ledges.

Bp. Patrick.—They had borders.] To keep up the lavers from falling.

Between the ledges.] It is not easy to apprehend what he means by ledges; because, as P. Martyr observes, we have no such work in these days.

Ged., Booth.—28 The workmanship of the stands was this: they had frame-bands; and those frame-bands were between the legs [Booth., supporters].

Au. Ver.—29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a base above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

Ledges. See notes on ver. 28.

Cherubims. See notes on Exod. xxv. 18, vol. i., p. 325.

Bp. Patrick.—Upon the ledges there was a base above.] This is so darkly expressed, that I do not apprehend the meaning; unless it be this, that the upper ledge was over the heads of these animals; and the under ledge was that upon which their feet rested, as the next words signify.

Beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions—of thin work.] Under these figures there was some other work added (which was not cast together with them) and drawn very thin.

Bp. Horsley.—And upon the ledges, &c.; rather, “and so it was upon the ledges: above and below the lions and the bulls were compound figures of sunk work.” Of sunk work, i. e., intaglia.

Ged.—On the frame-bands, between the legs, were lions, oxen, and cherubs; and on the legs of the stand, both above and below the lions and the oxen, were joints of wonderful workmanship.

Joints of wonderful workmanship. If I were allowed to conjecture, from the Arabic, I would render it firm workmanship. The whole description, indeed, is in some measure conjectural: nor can I assure the reader that I have always conjectured rightly. Let him who thinks he can give a more intelligible version.

Au. Ver.—30 And every base had four brazen wheels, and plates of brass: and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it within the chapter and above was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round after the work of the base, a cubit and a half: and also upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, foursquare, not round.

Pool.—The mouth of it. So he calls that part in the top of the base which was left hollow, that the foot of the laver might be let into it and fastened in it. Within the chapter, i. e., within the little base, which he calls the chapter, because it rose up from and stood above the great base, as the head doth above the rest of the body. And above; above the chapter; for the mouth went up, and grew wider, like a funnel. Was a cubit; either in breadth; or rather in height, ver. 35; whereof half a cubit was above the chapter or little base, as is said, ver. 35, and the other half is here implied to be within it, and below it. A cubit and a half, to wit, in compass. Four square, not round; so the innermost part, called the mouth, was round, but the outward part was square, as when a circle is made within a quadrangle.

Bp. Patrick.—Plates of brass. Between the wheels and the bases (see Dr. Lightfoot in the same book, p. 226).

Had undersetters. In the Heb., shoulders. Which were fitly so called, because, as burdens are borne upon men's shoulders, so were the lavers upon these; which supported them, when set upon the bases, and kept them from falling when they run upon the wheels.

Under the laver were undersetters molten. These were molten with the bases, when they were cast.

31 The mouth of it. The bases seem to have been hollow at the top; that the feet of the lavers might enter in, and be fastened there: and this he calls the mouth of it.

Within the chapter. Nothing of a chapter is mentioned until now: therefore it is hard to know what is meant by it. Many take it for a smaller basis, rising out of the greater; in which was the mouth, or hollow place before spoken of.

Was a cubit. In height. See ver. 35, where it is said, "on the top of the base was a round compass half a cubit high."

Which seems to be meant of this chapter, which rose but half a cubit above the base, the other half being below it.

A cubit and a half. This was the width of it.

Upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders. Though this hollow place, called the mouth, was round within; yet on the outside it was square, and had borders which were engraved.

Bp. Horsley.—30 Plates, perhaps axle-trees [so Gesen., Lee].

Undersetters, rather shoulder-pieces. These I imagine were rectangular prisms, placed within the corners, to bear the weight of the laver, lest the angles of the base should give way under it.

At the side of every addition; rather, each over against a compound figure. These shoulder-pieces went just so far down within the base as to be upon a level with the compound figures on the out-side.

31 ^{אזל}. And the cavity of it [i. e., of the laver, which held the water] was within a chapter [i. e., a hollow on the top of the base made to receive it], and rose above it by a cubit. And the cavity was round, of exact workmanship (or shape), a cubit and half a cubit [in the whole depth]. And also upon the cavity were sculptures. And the borders of it (I read ^{אזלים}) were not round, but four-square. The round bowl was set in a square frame; which square frame rested upon the shoulder-pieces, while the bowl itself went into the circular chapter of the base, rising only a cubit above it.

Ged.—30 Every stand had four brassen wheels, with brassen axles. At its four corners were undersetters, molten undersetters, under the laver, by each of the joints. 31 Its mouth, within its capital, was one cubit high: this mouth was round: but its mouth, without, was a cubit and an half high; not round but square, with engravings on its frame-bands.

Booth.—30 And every stand had four brazen wheels, and brazen axle-trees. And at its four corners were undersetters; molten undersetters beneath the laver, by each of the joints. 31 And its mouth was within the capital, and was a cubit high: but its mouth, without, was a cubit and a half, corresponding to the workmanship of the stand: and also near to its mouth were engravings, square, not round, with their frame-bands.

Houb.—30 Et quatuor rotæ æneæ per bases singulas, tabulæque æneæ; quatuor latera ejus humerulos suppositos habebant; qui humeruli conchæ collocati erant juxta unumquodque additamentum. 31 Os ejus, intra coronam et supra, erat cubiti unius, (os ejus rotundum... cubiti unius cum dimidio) in quo ore erant sculpturæ et cælaturæ quadratæ, non autem rotundæ.

30, 31, וְהָיָה אוֹרָהּ, et quatuor rotæ... Hos duos versus 30 et 31 ita ut sunt, exhibemus; quia quid mendi lateat, divinare non potuimus. Hæc explicabunt, qui omnia se intelligere putant posse, quanquam ne menda quidem sentiunt.

Ver. 32.

Au. Ver.—32 And under the borders were four wheels; and the axle-trees of the wheels were joined to the base [Heb., in the base]: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

Ged., Booth.—32 And under the frame-bands were the four wheels; and the axle-trees of the wheels were fixed to the stand: and the height of a wheel was a cubit and a half.

Ver. 38.

Au Ver.—38 Then made he ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits; and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

Bp. Patrick.—One laver contained forty baths.] See ver. 26. From whence it will appear that each of these lavers contained ten barrels of water.

Every laver was four cubits.] Some think that they were of this height. But these words rather relate to the diameter of them, which was four cubits: and then their compass was twelve cubits.

Upon every one of the ten bases one laver.] The bases being exactly fitted to receive them: for they were each four cubits in length and breadth (ver. 27).

Bp. Horsley.—And every laver was four cubits. This is omitted in some of Kennicott's best Codd. The number four must be erroneous.

Bp. Patrick.—The pots.] Pots or caldrons were those vessels wherein they boiled those sacrifices which were divided between the priest and the people that offered them, that is, peace-offerings, that they might eat them before the Lord, and feast with him upon his own meat.

Shovels, and the basons.] They are mentioned before, but here I suppose have a different signification (though in the Hebrew the words are the same) from what they had in ver. 40. And the first word signifies flesh-hooks, wherewith they took the meat out of the pots: and the second the platters, or dishes, into which it was put, to be set before them.

Of bright brass.] Or polished brass: or, the purest and finest that could be got. The Syriac and Arabic translators render it, Corinthian brass. But it is not credible, that it was known in the days of Solomon.

Pool.—In the clay ground, or, in thick clay; fat, and tough, and tenacious, and therefore fittest to make moulds of all sorts, into which the melted brass was to be poured.

Bp. Patrick.—In the Hebrew the words for "clay-ground" are, "in the thickness of the ground." That is, the earth was stiff and glutinous, and upon that account more fit to make moulds of all kinds. And in a plain country, such moulds were more easily fixed than on the sides of hills, or steep places.

Spoons. See notes on xxv. 29, vol. i., p. 328.

Bp. Patrick.—The bowls, and the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers.] The use of these is visible. The first being to keep oil for the lamps; the next to trim them: the basons (which were a hundred as we learn from the Book of Chronicles) were to receive the water of sprinkling, and the blood of the sacrifices which were sometimes brought into the most holy place: the spoons served to take up the oil: the censers were for offering incense; though some translate the word dish-pans, wherein the incense was kept. There were other censers of silver, which received the coals from the altar upon all days but the tenth of Tisri (which was the great day of expiation), when the golden censer received them, and by it the most holy place was incensed. On other days it was not employed, but at the altar of incense; where the coals were poured out of the silver censer (which received them from the altar of burnt offering) into the golden, to burn the incense: as the Talmudists say, both in Codex Joma and Tamid. Where they also say, that the foregoing word capoth, which we translate spoons, signifies a vessel which contained the incense that was to be offered upon the coals in the golden censer. See Braunius, in his Selecta Sacra, lib. ii., cap. 5, where he hath learnedly explained both these words, capoth and machtah, which we translate spoons and censers, where he hath demonstrated the latter signifies the instrument that received the coals from the altar of burnt-offering, and the former that which had the incense in it to be poured upon them.

Ver. 51.

Au. Ver.—51 So was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the house of the Lord. And Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated [Heb., holy things of David]; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the Lord.

Bp. Patrick.—51 I observed upon vi. 1, that Abarbinel thinks he would use none of the things that were dedicated by his father; but do all at his own cost and charges. Yet others think these words mean no more, but that all the remaining silver and gold, which David left, and was not spent in this work, Solomon would not employ to his own uses; but religiously preserved in the treasury of the temple. Where the altar of burnt-offering, which Moses made, and some other things, which were now of no use (far better and larger being made), were also laid up, as the tabernacle itself was. For the temple being built, there was no further occasion for the tabernacle; and yet it was fit to preserve it as a place that had been holy to the Lord.

that feast; for Solomon and the people kept the feast for fourteen days, here, ver. 65, i. e., seven days for the dedication of the temple, and seven other days for that of tabernacles; and after both these were finished, he sent all the people to their homes on the twenty-third day of the month. See 2 Chron. vii. 9, 10. Which is the seventh month. Quest. The temple was not finished till the eight month, 1 Kings vi. 38, how then could he invite them in the seventh month? Answ. This was the seventh month of the next year; for although the house in all its parts was finished the year before, yet the utensils of it, described chap. vii., were not then fully finished, but took up a considerable time afterward; and many preparations were to be made for this great and extraordinary occasion.

Au. Ver.—8 And they drew out the staves, that the ends [Heb., heads] of the staves were seen out in the holy place [or, ark; as 2 Chron. v. 9] before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are unto this day.

Oracle. See notes on vi. 5.

Pool.—They drew out the staves; not wholly, which was expressly forbidden, Exod. xxv. 15; Numb. iv. 6; but in part. In the holy place; either, first, Properly so called; which place was indeed before the oracle. But how then could it be said that they were not seen without, to wit, in the holy place? For that they should be seen without to wit, in the court, was so ridiculous a conceit, that it had been absurd to suppose it, or to say anything to prevent it. Nor is it much better what others say, that these ends of the staves did discover themselves through the veil, which they thrust forward, though they did not pierce through it; for neither in that case had they been seen; and besides, there was a wall as well as a veil in that place. Or rather, secondly, In the most holy place, which is oft called by way of eminency the holy place, as Exod. xxix. 30; xxxix. 1; Lev. vi. 30; x. 18; xvi. 2, 16, 17, 20. And the Hebrew words rendered before the oracle, may be as well rendered within the oracle, the phrase al pene being so used, Gen. i. 2, the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, i. e., in the waters, or in that confused heap of earth and water in which God was now working, that he might bring it into order and use; and Gen. i. 20, where it is well rendered in the open firmament of heaven, i. e., of the air. And thus the whole is most true; they were seen out, to wit, without the ark, and the cherubims which covered all the other parts, but they were not seen without the oracle, to wit, in the holy place, strictly so called; for how could they be seen there, when there was both a wall and a thick veil between that place and the oracle? And these staves were left in this posture, that the high priest might hereby be certainly guided to that very particular place where he was one day in a year to sprinkle blood, and to offer incense before the ark, which otherwise he might mistake in that dark place, where the ark was wholly covered with the wings of the great cherubims, which stood between him and the ark when he entered thither. Some conceive that the door of the oracle stood always open, (which yet seems very improbable,) and that they who were near the door might see the ends of the staves, though by reason of the darkness of the place they could see nothing else there.

Bp. Patrick.—The ends of the staves were seen out in the holy place.] By the holy place is here meant the most holy, where the ark was under the cherubims: which covered both the ark and the staves. But the staves were so drawn out that the ends of them might be seen: whereby the high-priest was directed in the way he should go just before the mercy-seat on the day of expiation; when he went between these two staves to sprinkle the blood before God. See 2 Chron. v. 9 and Buxtorf. in his Arca Fœderis, where he explains both this and the next verse, and gives a large account of drawing out the staves (pp. 96, 97).

They were not seen without.] In the sanctuary.

There they are unto this day.] And in this posture.

Bp. Horsley.—8 And they drew out the staves, &c. See this verse well explained in Mr. Parkhurst's Lexicon under the word למטה.

Parkhurst.—למטה. The idea of the word is length, long.

I. In Kal, To be or grow long, as boughs, Ezek. xxxi. 5. In Hiph., To draw out in length, as ropes, Isa. liv. 2.—as the tongue, in derision, Isa. lviii. 4.—as a furrow, Ps. cxxix. 3; 1 Kings viii. 8, וַיִּצְמְדוּ, And they (the priests) lengthened out, i. e., drew out some way, but not entirely, the staves (of the Mosaic ark) and the ends of the staves appeared out in the Holy of Holies [so קדש קדשים is used for the Holy of Holies, Lev. xvi. 3, 16, 17, 20, 23, and al.] כִּן וַיִּצְמְדוּ, from the ark, says 2 Chron. v. 9) on the front of the oracle, but did not appear without, namely in the outer sanctuary. Dr. Prideaux (Connect., vol. i., p. 150, 1st edit. 8vo.) justly observes that this text, which however he does not seem to have clearly understood (comp. Bp. Patrick's note), plainly proves that the staves were put through the rings made for them, not on the sides of the ark, but on the two ends of it. For had they been on the sides of the ark lengthways, they would, on their being drawn out, have reached towards the side-wall, and not have been seen from the ark, on the front of the oracle.

Au. Ver.—9 There was nothing in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when [or, where] the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

Bp. Patrick.—9 The very same words, in a manner, are repeated, 2 Chron. v. 10. But it is commonly observed that both these places seem to contradict the apostle's words, Heb. ix. 4. For it is said here in these books, that nothing was in the ark save only the two tables of stone: but there, that the pot of manna and Aaron's rod were also in the ark. For so they generally interpret those words ἐν ᾗ, "in which," i. e., in the ark, στάμνος χρυσοῦ, "the golden pot containing the manna," &c. Many learned men have endeavoured to reconcile these places several ways, which Andreas Senertus hath collected in a treatise on purpose about it. Which might have been spared by this easy observation, that the preposition ἐν doth not always signify in, but by: and so the place in the Hebrews is to be rendered, not in which, but by which [so Pool]. Bochartus hath given a great many instances of such use of the particle beth in the Old Testament (Hieroicoicon, par. ii., lib. ii., cap. 50). And indeed it is never said there that the pot of manna was laid up in the ark, but "before the Lord and before the testimony" (Exod. xvi. 33, 34); and the same is said of Aaron's rod (Numb. xvii. 4). Which signifies no more than putting them by the ark (see Huetius, Demonstr. Evang., p. 322.)

Although he might do both, first bless the congregation, which possibly he might do in that solemn and appointed form, Numb. vi.; which therefore it was needless to repeat here; and then blessed God. Au. Ver.—16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that my name might be therein; but I chose David to be over my people Israel.

Ken.—Mention is here made of some one place, and some one person, preferred before all others; and the preference is that of Jerusalem to other places, and of David to other men. In consequence of this remark, we shall see the necessity of correcting this passage by its parallel, in 2 Chron. vi. 5, 6, where the thirteen Hebrew words, now lost in Kings, are happily preserved. Let us compare the passages.

Hallett.—The passage in Kings appears to be defective; if we consider it alone, as well as when we compare it with the parallel. God's saying, that he had formerly chosen no city, required that he should say, he had now chosen Jerusalem. And his saying that he had now chosen David, supposes that he had said before, that he had not formerly chosen any man to be a king over Israel. Accordingly these passages are preserved in their proper place in the Book of Chronicles. The occasion of their being omitted in Kings was (what the learned call ὁμοιοστελευτον) that the clause omitted ended with the same words, [That my name might be therein] as are in the end of the foregoing clause. Le Clerc takes notice of this omission.

Dr. A. Clarke.—I do not think these thirteen words ever made a part of Kings, and, consequently, are not lost from it; nor do they exist here in any of the versions; but their being found in Chronicles helps to complete the sense.

Au. Ver.—28 Yet have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to day.

Bp. Patrick.—Abarbinel observes upon ver. 39, that Solomon uses three words in this verse, which in some places signify the very same thing: but being all used here together, he thinks have distinct meanings. For the word rinnah (which we translate cry), he thinks, signifies setting forth with a loud voice the praises of God : concerning which their wise men in Beracoth say, " Let a man first commemorate the praises of God, and then let him pray." Then the word tephillah (which we translate prayer), he thinks, signifies men's judging and condemning themselves before God for their offences : confessing they are unworthy to have their petitions granted. And the other word techinah (supplication we translate it) imports men's petitions to God for what they want, and deprecating his displeasure, &c.

Au. Ver.—31 If any man trespass against his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him [Heb., and he require an oath of him, Lev. v. 1.] to cause him to swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house.

Pool.—If any man trespass, i. e., if he be accused of a trespass.

Hallet.—If any man trespass against his neighbour, &c. I find no fault here with our translators, who have undoubtedly well expressed Solomon's meaning. But it is not to be supposed that אִם אִשָּׁר should signify if. Buxtorf in his Lexicon refers us to a place where אִם signifies if, Deut. xi. 27. But I suspect that there is an error in that place too, even in the Samaritan copy itself, as well as in the Hebrew, and that the word there should be אִם, if; as it is in both Hebrew and Samaritan in the next verse, where the expression is somewhat alike, viz., A blessing, if ye obey—a curse, if ye will not obey. It is most likely that the Hebrew word for if in both clauses should be the same. But be this as it will; let it be supposed that אִם may signify if: or, as Le Clerc would have it, that אִם אִשָּׁר may signify because. Yet if we look into the parallel place, 2 Chron. vi. 22, we shall find, that the words אִם אִשָּׁר are a corruption, and that we should read אִם. Here one may venture to be the more positive, because Solomon's prayer recorded 1 Kings viii. and 2 Chron. vi. was but one prayer. These are two copies of the same prayer. Originally therefore they must have agreed in every letter. Solomon did not repeat the prayer in different words, but spoke it only once. Where then there are any differences between these two copies of the same prayer, it is a plain case, that the one or the other of the copies has been abused, and that errors have crept into it. For instance, Solomon did not say both אִם אִשָּׁר and אִם אִשָּׁר. If his word was אִם (as no doubt it was) then the transcribers of Kings have been guilty of a mistake in representing him as having said וְאֵלֶּיךָ. This is an instance of a mistake committed by transcribers, which no one will attempt to evade.

Au. Ver.—34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest unto their fathers.

In heaven. See notes on ver. 32.

Pool.—Quest. If they were banished into a strange land, how could they pray in this house, as they are said to do, ver. 33? Ans. 1. That may be rendered to or towards this house, as it is expressed, ver. 29, 30. The Hebrew preposition beth, in, being oft put for el, to, or towards. 2. This may be understood of divers persons; and so the sense is this: When the people of Israel be defeated in battle, and many of their brethren be taken prisoners, and carried into captivity; if then their brethren remaining in the land, shall heartily pray for their captive brethren, they shall be delivered.

Bp. Horsley.—And bring them again unto the land. They are not supposed driven from the land: for they are supposed to make supplication "in this house," verse 33. Perhaps for וְנָתַתָּ, or וְנָתַתָּ, which is the reading in the parallel place in Chronicles, we should read וְנָתַתָּ, and give them rest in the land.

Au. Ver.—36 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, that thou teach them the good way wherein they should walk, and give rain upon thy land, which thou hast given to thy people for an inheritance.

Pool.—That thou teach them; that their sin being pardoned, and thou being reconciled unto them, mayst vouchsafe to teach them. Or rather, as our translators render the very same words, 2 Chron. vi. 27, when thou shalt teach, or hast taught them; not only by thy word, for that was done before; but by their afflictions, which is one of God's schools; and especially, by thy Spirit. And this is here fully added, to show that he could not expect, and did not desire, from God the pardon of their sins, but upon God's terms, to wit, upon their true repentance.

Bp. Patrick.—That thou teach them, &c. These words are better translated in 2 Chron. vi. 27 (where the Hebrew words are the very same with these here). When thou hast taught them the good way wherein they should walk. He doth not desire their pardon, till their affliction had taught them better obedience.

Ged., Booth.—36 Then hear thou, in the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy servants, of thy people Israel; teach [Ged., shew] thou them the good way, &c.

Au. Ver.—37 If there be in the land famine, if there be pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust, or if there be caterpillar; if their enemy besiege them in the land of their cities [or, jurisdiction]; whatsoever plague, whatsoever sickness there be.

In the land of their cities.

Ged., Booth.—In any of their cities. The present text reads literally, in the land of their gates. I have followed the reading of Sept., Syr., Arab., which I take to be the genuine one.—Ged.

Ver. 38.

Au. Ver.—38 What prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands toward this house.

Pool.—The plague of his own heart, i. e., either, 1. His sin. Or rather, 2. His affliction; for so this is explained in the parallel place, 2 Chron. vi. 29, (which is the more considerable, because that book was written after this, to explain what was dark or doubtful, and to supply what was lacking in this,) when every one shall know his own sore, and his own grief; which is not unfitly called the plague of his heart, because it was that plague which his heart was most afflicted with, which pained him at the very heart, as the phrase is, Jer. iv. 19; compare Ps. lv. 4; which caused him most vexation or grief, which is a passion of the heart: and so the sense is, Who shall know, i. e., be duly and deeply sensible of his affliction, and the hand of God in it; and his sin as the cause of it; for words of knowledge in Scripture do very frequently note such a kind of knowledge as affects and changeth the heart, and reforms the whole course of a man's life; for which cause, men of ungodly lives are frequently said in Scripture not to know God, or Christ, or his word, &c. And therefore no man knows his sore in a Scripture sense but he who bears the rod, who turneth unto him that smiteth him, and sincerely seeketh to the Lord for relief.

Ver. 39.

Ver. 40.

Au. Ver.—40 That they may fear thee all the days that they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

Hallet.—That they may fear thee all the days that they live, &c. The sentence is more full in 2 Chron. vi. 31, That they may fear thee to walk in thy ways, all the days that they live, &c. It was an error of the transcribers to add these words in Chron., or else it was an error to omit them in Kings. This error is older than all the versions, which agree with their respective texts.

Ver. 46.

כִּי יִחַטְאוּלֶּךָ כִּי יִזְנוּ אֶתְּךָ אִשָּׁר לְיִיחִיטָא וְאִנְפִּתָּ לָם וְרָב

ὅτι ἀμαρτήσονται σοι, ὅτι οὐκ ἔστιν ἀνθρώπος, ὃς οὐχ ἀμαρτήσεται καὶ ἐπάξει αὐτοὺς, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—46 If they sin against thee, (for there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives unto the land of the enemy, far or near.

Dr. A. Clarke.—46 If they sin against thee.] This SEVENTH case must refer to some general defection from truth, to some species of false worship, idolatry, or corruption of the truth and ordinances of the Most High; as for it they are here stated to be delivered into the hands of their enemies and carried away captive, which was the general punishment for idolatry, and what is called, verse 47, acting perversely and committing wickedness.

In ver. 46 we read, If they sin against thee, for there is no man that sinneth not. On this verse we may observe that the second clause, as it is here translated, renders the supposition in the first clause entirely nugatory; for if there be no man that sinneth not, it is useless to say, if they sin; but this contradiction is taken away by reference to the original, כִּי יִחַטְאוּ לָךְ, which should be translated if they shall sin against thee, or should they sin against thee; כִּי אִין אָדָם אִמָּר לֹא יִשְׁכָּח, for there is no man that MAY not sin; i. e., there is no man impeccable, none infallible, none that is not liable to transgress. This is the true meaning of the phrase in various parts of the Bible, and so our translators have understood the original; for even in the thirty-first verse of this chapter they have translated יִשְׁכָּח, if a man TRESPASS; which certainly implies he might or might not do it; and in this way they have translated the same word, if a soul SIN, in Lev. v. 1; vi. 2; 1 Sam. ii. 25; 2 Chron. vi. 22, and in several other places. The truth is, the Hebrew has no mood to express words in the permissive or optative way, but to express this sense it uses the future tense of the conjugation kal.

This text has been a wonderful stronghold for all who believe that there is no redemption from sin in this life, that no man can live without committing sin, and that we cannot be entirely freed from it till we die. 1. The text speaks no such doctrine; it only speaks of the possibility of every man sinning, and this must be true of a state of probation. 2. There is not another text in the Divine records that is more to the purpose than this. 3. The doctrine is flatly in opposition to the design of the Gospel; for Jesus came to save his people from their sins, and to destroy the works of the devil. 4. It is a dangerous and destructive doctrine, and should be blotted out of every Christian's creed. There are too many who are seeking to excuse their crimes by all means in their power; and we need not embody their excuses in a creed, to complete their deception, by stating that their sins are unavoidable.

Pilkington.—We are told in ver. 65, that "Solomon held a feast seven days, and seven days, even fourteen days, and on the eighth day he sent away the people." An account no ways consistent with that propriety which is observable through the whole Scriptures. Yet all the antient versions render this passage in the same manner: except that, in the Vatican copy of the LXX, we have an account very consistent with itself, and what we must be inclined to think is agreeable to the original. "Solomon held a feast seven days; and on the eighth day he sent away the people." And this I apprehend to be entirely consistent with what is said 2 Chron. vii. 9, 10. That after Solomon had dedicated the temple, he held the feast of tabernacles, which began on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, viz., Tizri or Ethaniam, 1 Kings viii. 2, and which is now marked as the first day of that feast in the Jewish calendars. See "Religious Ceremonies, &c.," vol. i., p. 224. And here we are particularly informed that on the 23d day of the seventh month (which is also marked in those calendars as the octave of the feast of tabernacles) he sent away the people into their tents, glad and cheerful upon this happy occasion.

Au. Ver.—2 That the Lord appeared to Solomon the second time, as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

3 And the Lord said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy supplication, that thou hast made before me: I have hallowed this house, which thou hast built, to put my name there for ever; and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

4 And if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my statutes and my judgements:

5 Then I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel for ever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel.

6 But if ye shall at all turn from following me, ye or your children, and will not keep my commandments and my statutes which I have set before you, but go and serve other gods, and worship them:

7 Then will I cut off Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, will I cast out of my sight; and Israel shall be a proverb and a by-word among all people:

8 And at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and to this house?

9 And they shall answer, Because they forsook the Lord their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worshipped them, and served them: therefore hath the Lord brought upon them all this evil.

10 And it came to pass at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houses, the house of the Lord, and the king's house.

Pool—The time of this revelation was either, 1. After all Solomon's buildings, as the words thus rendered plainly imply. Or, 2. Presently after the building of the temple, as may be thought from the matter of this revelation, which seems best to suit with that time when it was newly built, and when Solomon's prayer here mentioned was newly made; for seeing the following words contain God's answer to that prayer, it seems improbable, that the answer should come so many years after it. But then this second verse, and the rest, even to ver. 11, are to be enclosed with a parenthesis; and the place must be thus rendered, ver. 2, For (so the Hebrew vau is oft rendered) the Lord appeared, or had appeared, unto Solomon, &c.; ver. 3, And the Lord had said unto him, &c. And this parenthesis may seem to have a foundation in ver. 10, where the first verse (in substance, though not in the very same words) is repeated, as is usual after long digressions; and then he completes the sentence, ver. 11, &c., which till then had been suspended. Nor are such long parentheses without example in Scripture. See my Latin Synopsis on Rom. v. 12, &c., Eph. iii. 1, &c., Rev. xxii. 7.

If ye shall at all turn from following me; or rather, if ye shall wholly turn, &c.; if you shall wilfully and obstinately depart from God, and violate his laws, as the doubling of the word implies. Whereby he also intimates that he would not be so rigid and severe towards them as to mark everything that was amiss; but would bear with much, as he did in David, &c., only that he would not endure a total defection from him.

Au. Ver.—8 And at this house, which is high, every one that passeth by it shall be astonished, and shall hiss; and they shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and to this house?

Pool.—Which is high, i.e., exalted in its privileges, glorious, and renowned. The particle which is oft understood, and is here fitly supplied out of 2 Chron. vii. 21, where it is expressed. Shall be astonished at its unexpected and wonderful ruin. Shall hiss, by way of contempt and derision. See Jer. xix. 8; xlix. 17; l. 13.

Hallett.—And at this house, which is high, &c. Our translators have well noted, that the word, which, is not in the Hebrew, by causing it to be printed in a different character from the rest of the verse. It is obvious the word ought not to have been omitted. It is well retained, 2 Chronicles vii. 21, where the expression is, והיה, which was. This expression, by the carelessness of the transcribers of the Book of Kings, is turned into והיה, it shall be, or it was; as Le Clerc has also observed.

Ged.—And this house shall be laid in the dirt: every one who shall pass by it will be astonished, &c.

Shall be laid in the dirt. This rendering arises from changing only the Masoretic punctuation. The text, as it is now pointed, runs literally thus: And this house shall be high, every one, &c. The parallel place in Chron. has this house which was high: every one—which mends not the matter much.

Ver. 11.

— אֲנִי וְיִסְרוּ הַמֶּלֶךְ שְׁלֵמָה לְחִירָם

אֲנִי וְיִסְרוּ הַמֶּלֶךְ שְׁלֵמָה לְחִירָם

— τότε ἔδωκεν ὁ βασιλεὺς τῷ Χιράμ εἴκοσι πόλεις ἐν τῇ γῇ τῇ Γαλιλαίᾳ.

Au. Ver.—11 (Now Hiram the King of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar trees and fir trees, and with gold, according to all his desire,) that then King Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

In the land of Galilee.

Pool.—Or, near (as beth often signifies, as hath been proved before) the land of Galilee, bordering upon it; in those parts which were near and adjoining to Hiram's dominions: with the cities understand the lands and territories belonging to them.

Quest. How could Solomon give away any part of that land wherein the people had a right by a Divine lot, and God had a right, as being the only proprietary of it; upon which ground the total alienation of it, or any part of it, was forbidden, Lev. xxv. 23?

Ans. 1. It is not said that he gave them away wholly, and for ever; but he might assign them to him only for a time, until he was fully satisfied for his debt. 2. If these cities were possessed by Israelites, Solomon did not give him their particular possessions, but only his own royalties over them, and all the profits he received from them, which were very considerable, as may be gathered from that passage, chap. xii. 4. 3. These cities, though they were within those large bounds which God fixed to the land of promise, Gen. xv. 18; Josh i. 4, yet were not within those parts which were distributed by Lot in Joshua's time, nor belonging to the tribe of Asher (as some suppose,) as may be gathered both from Josh. xix. 27, where their border is said to go out only to the land of Cabul, to wit, exclusively; and ver. 30, where all their cities are said to be but twenty and two; and from 2 Chron. viii. 2, where it is said of those cities, when Hiram restored them, that Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there; which makes it more than probable that these cities were not inhabited by Israelites, but by Canaanites or other heathens; who being subdued and extirpated by David, or Solomon, those cities became a part of their dominions, and at their disposal; and afterwards were reckoned a part of Galilee, as Josephus notes; and may be one reason why he gave these rather than other cities, because they were in his power to give, when others were not.

Bp. Patrick.—Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.] They were near or adjoining to the country of Galilee

(as the particle beth frequently signifies), but were no part of the land of Canaan, when it was divided among the Israelites: for that could not be alienated, being God's heritage. They were therefore cities out of the territories of Israel, as appears from Josh. ix. 27, but had been conquered partly by Pharaoh, who gave them to Solomon, as part of his daughter's portion; and partly by Solomon himself, who had power to dispose of them; especially since at that time they were not inhabited by the Israelites (see 2 Chron. viii. 2, and Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, lib. i. cap. 3, sect. 12, n. 3). Hotoman, indeed, a famous lawyer, thinks that Solomon did not give Hiram a propriety, and perpetual right in these cities; but only the possession and enjoyment of them till the debt was satisfied, which Solomon had contracted, by the assistance which Hiram afforded him in building the temple. But his ground is not solid: for as our Selden also hath shown (lib. vi. De Jure Nat. et Gent., cap. 16), the kings of Israel might dispose of those lands which they had conquered in a voluntary war, without the consent of the senate. Bochartus also is of the same mind, that these cities were no part of the country of Judea: but Abarbinel confirms Hotoman's opinion, that the revenues of these cities were given to him till the debt was discharged.

Ver. 13.

וַיֹּאמֶר מֶלֶךְ הָעִירִים הָאֵלֶּה אֲשֶׁר נָתַתָּה לִּי אֲחֵי וַיִּקְרָא לָהֶם אֲרָצָה כְּבֻל ἡμέρας ταύτης.

Au. Ver.—13 And he said, What cities are these which thou hast given me, my brother? And he called them the land of Cabul [that is, displeasing, or, dirty] unto this day.

Bp. Patrick.—What cities are these which thou hast given me?—These are not words of contempt; for it is not likely that Solomon, who had been highly obliged to Hiram (and was in his own temper very generous) would give him that which was of little value. But his meaning is, these cities were not such as would serve his purpose; which made him return them to Solomon again (2 Chron. viii. 2), who, no doubt, made him some other recompense, which gave him better satisfaction. Abarbinel thinks, that Solomon having agreed to give Hiram so many measures of wheat and oil, as are mentioned, v. 11, with which he had supplied him every year; now that this work was ended, gave him this country, out of which he might raise this provision for his household himself. Which Hiram did not like, because his people were addicted to merchandise, not to agriculture: but did not upon this account break off friendship with Solomon, as appears by the following history.

He called them the land of Cabul.] It is commonly thought that Hiram called them, by way of contempt, Cabul; which signifies "a dirty country:" or, as Josephus will have it, displeasing (as we translate it in the margin of our Bibles). For Chabulon, he saith, in the Phœnician language, signifies as much as οὐκ ἀρέσκον, "that which doth not please" (lib. viii., Archæol., cap. 2). But the LXX seem to have understood the word better; who translate it ὄριον, the term or bound: as if Cabul were the same with Gebul: caph and gimel being frequently changed, as Bochartus observes; who approves of this signification of the word. For Chabulon was that tract of ground which bounded the lower Galilee: extending from Tiberias unto this place, as Josephus himself saith, lib. iii. De Bello Judaico, cap. 2 (see Bochartus, in his Canaan, lib. ii., cap. 4).

Gesenius.—בָּבֻל obsol. root, Talm., Syr., Arab. to tie, to bind, to bind together.

בָּבֻל Cabul pr. n. a) A city in the tribe of Asher, Josh. xix. 27.

b) A district of Galilee comprising twenty towns, given by Solomon to Hiram king of Tyre, 1 Kings ix. 13; so called by the latter in token of dissatisfaction, comp. v. 12. Josephus says, probably by conjecture from the context, Ant. viii. 5, 3, μεθερμηνεύμενον γὰρ τὸ Χαβαλὼν κατὰ Φοινίκων γλῶτταν οὐκ ἀρέσκον σημαίνει. The LXX have ὄριον, border, as if בָּבֻל i. q. בְּנֵי, and so Bochart; but this neglects the context. Hiller, in Onomast. V. T., p. 435, takes בָּבֻל for בְּנֵי part. pass. of בָּנָה, 'as something exhaled, as nothing.' Something like this was perhaps present to the mind of the sacred writer; though the reading of the Sept. is in itself the more natural.—R. בָּבֻל.

Houb.—13 בָּבֻל אֲרָצָה, terra Cabul. Radix est, ut videtur, בָּבֻל Arabicum, differre debi-

Au. Ver.—14 And Hiram sent to the king sixscore talents of gold.

Bp. Patrick.—And Hiram sent.] It may be better translated, "and Hiram had sent," &c. See ver. 11, where the reason is given why Solomon offered him so rich a country. Which, though he did not like, yet these words, Abarbinel thinks, signify, that notwithstanding Hiram continued his generous friendship with Solomon, and after that sent him all this gold; or, it was sent him as his share in their traffic to Ophir, mentioned in the conclusion of this chapter.

Ver. 15.

וְזֶה דְּבַר-חֵפְסִי אֲשֶׁר-הֶעֱלָה הַמֶּלֶךְ שְׁלֹמֹה וְנֹ

[Alex.] αὕτη ἡ πραγματία τῆς προνομῆς, ἥ ἀνήνεγκεν ὁ βασιλεὺς Σαλωμὼν, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—15 And this is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised; for to build the house of the Lord, and his own house, and Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer.

Millo. See notes on 2 Sam. v. 9, pp. 521, 522.

Bp. Patrick.—This is the reason of the levy which king Solomon raised.] That the raising of a great tribute upon the people, and employing so many men in his works, might not seem strange, he here shows the cause of it; which was his great and numerous buildings; suitable to the high dignity to which God had advanced him. But Mr. Selden hath shown, by many instances, that the word mas is used, not only for pecuniary tribute, but for corporeal labour. And thus he interprets these words, "this is the cause of requiring the labour and work of so many men." Which when he had declared, viz. his great buildings, then he proceeds (ver. 20), to relate who they were that he employed in this service.

Millo.] Which was a large and very beautiful place (as Abarbinel takes it), near to Zion; where the Israelites were wont to meet, and take their pleasure: and because it was full of people, was therefore called Millo; which signifies fulness, or repletion. Now David had built round about Zion, from Millo inward (as we read 2 Sam. v. 9), but had left the structure of Millo itself imperfect; which Solomon now completed, with a particular respect to Pharaoh's daughter, whose house was near to it (ver. 24, of this chapter). In this place some think there was a strong fortress built, which they gather from xi. 27, and 2 Chron. xxxii. 5. But others will have it to signify that deep valley or ditch (it may be called) which was between Mount Zion (the city of David) and Mount Moriah, on which the temple stood. Therefore, that there might be a convenient passage from the king's palace to the house of God, Solomon joined these two mountains by a bridge or a causeway, which could not be done without filling up the valley, or making great arches; some think the one, and some the other.

The wall of Jerusalem.] There were three walls, one within another, as Abarbinel and Joseph ben Gorion explain it: the inner wall compassing the house of God and the house of the king; the middle wall compassing the houses of the prophets and great persons (which explains 2 Kings xxii. 14), and the third compassing the houses of all the people.

Gesen.—מס m. tribute; commonly derived from מסק to pine away, because tribute is a consuming of strength, confectio virium, which is hardly tolerable. Better to take מס as contr. from מסק, tribute, tax, from the root מסק to number, like fem. מסק number, for מסקה. Instances of the letters ks or ξ at the end of words being softened by dropping the k, exist in multitude in Greek and Latin, as Ajax, Αἶας; pistrix, pistria, πίστρις; ὄρνις, Dor. ὄρνιξ; mixtus, mistus; sestertius for sextertius; also of x and ss between two vowels, like Heb. micsa, misa; Ulixes, Ulysses; μαλάσσω, malaxo; further, maximus and Ital. massimo; Alexander and Alessandro. Almost everywhere spoken of tribute to be rendered in service, tribute-service, fully עֲבָדָה (tribute of one serving) 1 Kings ix. 21; and concr. of a levy of men as labourers; 1 Kings v. 27 [13] and king Solomon let come up a levy (עֲבָדָה) out of all Israel, and the levy (עֲבָדָה) was thirty thousand men; comp. ix. 15; 2 Chron. viii. 8. Frequent in the phrases: עֲבָדָה לַיהוָה Deut. xx. 11; Judg. i. 30, 33, 35; Is. xxxi. 8, also עֲבָדָה לַיהוָה Gen. xlix. 15; Josh. xvi. 10, to become subject to tribute-service. So עֲבָדָה Josh. xvii. 13, עֲבָדָה Judg. i. 28, and עֲבָדָה Esth. x. 1, to impose tribute-service upon any one. Also עֲבָדָה לַיהוָה prefect over the tribute-service, tribute-master, 2 Sam. xx. 24; 1 Kings iv. 6; xii. 18.

Au. Ver.—23 These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

Five hundred and fifty.

Pool.—Object. They were only two hundred and fifty in 2 Chronicles viii. 10. Ans. First, Those might be officers of another sort; for they are not said to be over the work, as these are, but only over the people. Secondly, The two hundred and fifty were Israelites, who are therefore distinctly mentioned in that book, where many things are more exactly noted than in the former; and the other three hundred were strangers, who therefore are neglected in that more accurate account. Or, thirdly, There was but two hundred and fifty at one time, which is noted there, and two hundred and fifty at another time, (for it is apparent they did their work by turns,) and the other fifty either were superior to all the rest, or rather were a reserve to supply the place of any of the five hundred when there was occasion, which might frequently happen. And so this was an act not unbecoming Solomon's wisdom, to make provision for emergencies.

Bp. Patrick.—In 2 Chron. viii. 10, they are said to be but two hundred and fifty. For the Hebrew doctors commonly say that there were of these officers but two hundred and fifty Israelites: the other three hundred were proselytes. But the plainest account of this is given by Abarbinel, that there were only two hundred and fifty set over those that wrought in the temple: the rest were employed in looking after his public works in other places. And it must be observed, also, that there were far greater numbers employed when the temple work was carried on with great speed, as we read before (v. 16).

Houb.—חמשים ומאת, quinquaginta et quingenti. Legitur 2 Par. viii. 10. חמשים ומאת, quinquaginta et ducenti. Statuebat Lud. Cappellus in alterutro loco errasse scribas; cui quidem nugatorie respondit Buxtorfius, Rabbini suis obsequens. Nam "dici potest, (inquirebat) 550 præfectos fuisse omnes ex Israelitis, sed in opere templi adhibitos fuisse tantum 250 sicuti habetur in Libro Paralipomenon, reliquos 250 (lege 300) occupatos fuisse in cæteris ædificiis passim per universum Regnum." Atqui non aguntur utroque in loco præfecti operum templi, qui quidem numero erant 3,600 vel 3,300 ut videre licet supra v. 15, et 2 Par. ii. 6 (vide et confer): sed præfecti operum in urbibus ædificandis. Placebat etiam Buxtorfio id, quod "Hebræi communitur putant, ex præfectis 550 fuisse 300 peregrinos, seu proselytas; 250 ex Israelitis. Itaque in Libro Chronicorum recenseri tantum eos, qui fuerint ex Israelitis; in Libro vero regum omnes in universum." Sed distinctio talis adhiberi non jam potest, postquam pagina sacra negavit Israelitas in operum fuisse servitute, affirmavitque solos in ea fuisse Chananæos. Sapientius profecto faciunt, qui mendorum culpam Scribis attribuunt, quam qui narrant, sine historia teste, fabulas tales.

Au. Ver.—25 And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt offerings and peace offerings upon the altar which he built unto the Lord, and he burnt incense upon the altar [Heb. upon it] that was before the Lord. So he finished the house.

Pool.—So he finished the house, or, so he perfected the house, to wit, by applying it to the use for which it was made, in which the perfection of such things consist. Or, the house may be put metonymically for the work or service of the house, as it is elsewhere commonly used for the things or persons in the house. Or the words may be and are rendered thus, After that (for so the Hebrew vau often signifies, as Isaiah xxxvii. 9, 36; Hos. i. 11; Zech. xii. 2) he finished the house, i. e., from the time of the finishing of the house, until this time, he continued to do so.

Ged.—25 "Three times in the year Solomon offered holocausts and eucharistic sacrifices upon the sacrifice-altar, which he had constructed to the Lord; and caused incense to be burned on that altar which was before the Lord. 26 When the building was finished, &c."

This verse seems out of its place. I would place it at the end of ch. viii. or after ch. ix. ver. 9.

Dr. A. Clarke.—A navy of ships. Literally, יָסַד oni, a ship : in the parallel place, 2 Chron. viii. 17, it is said that Hiram sent him יָסַד oniyothe, ships; but it does not appear that Solomon in this case built more than one ship, and this was manned principally by the Tyrians.

Au. Ver.—28 And they came to Ophir, and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

Dr. A. Clarke.—And they came to Ophir. No man knows certainly, to this day, where this Ophir was situated. There were two places of this name; one somewhere in India, beyond the Ganges, and another in Arabia, near the country of the Sabæans, mentioned by Job, chap xxii. 24 : Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust; and the gold of Ophir as the stones of the brooks. And chap xxviii. 16 : It cannot be valued with the gold of Ophir, with the precious onyx, or the sapphire. Calmet places this country at the sources of the Euphrates and Tigris.

But there are several reasons to prove that this was not the Ophir of the Bible, which it seems was so situated as to require a voyage of three years long to go out, load, and return. Mr. Bruce has discussed this subject at great length; see his Travels, vol. ii., chap iv., p. 354, &c. He endeavours to prove that Ezion-geber is situated on the Elanitic branch of the Arabian Gulf or Red Sea. 2. That Tharshish is Moka, near to Melinda, in the Indian Ocean, in about three degrees south latitude. 3. That Ophir lies somewhere in the land of Sofala, or in the vicinity of the Zambeze river, opposite the island of Madagascar, where there have been gold and silver mines in great abundance from the remotest antiquity. And he proves, 4. That no vessel could perform this voyage in less than three years, because of the monsoons; that more time need not be employed, and that this is the precise time mentioned in chap. x. 22. 5. That this is the country of the Queen of Sheba. or Sabia or Azeba, who, on her visit to Solomon, brought him one hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices and precious stones great store, ver. 10. And that gold, ivory, silver, &c., are the natural productions of this country. To illustrate and prove his positions he has given a map on a large scale, "showing the tract of Solomon's fleet in their three years' voyage from the Elanitic Gulf to Ophir and Tharshish;" to which, and his description, I must refer the reader.

Gesen.—אֹפִיר, אִי, אִי, pr. n. Ophir, a celebrated region, abounding in gold, which the seamen of Solomon in company with the Phœnicians were accustomed to visit, taking their departure from the ports of the Elanitic gulf, and bringing back every three years gold, precious stones, and sandal-wood, also silver, ivory, apes, and peacocks; 1 Kings ix. 28; x. 11; 2 Chron. viii. 18; ix. 10; especially 1 Kings x. 22, where Ophir is to be understood, although not expressly mentioned. The gold of Ophir is frequently mentioned in the Old Testament as Job xxviii. 16; Ps. xlv. 10; Is. xiii. 12; 1 Chr. xxix. 4; once also אִי itself is put for gold of Ophir, Job xxii. 24.

As to the geographical situation of Ophir, there is the greatest diversity of opinion among commentators. Yet among modern interpreters, the best hesitate only between two regions, viz. India, and some part of Arabia. That Ophir is to be sought in India, was the opinion of Josephus (Ant. viii. 6, 4), and among the moderns, of Vitranga, Reland, and others; and this view is supported by the following arguments: a) The countries of India abound in the articles of traffic above-mentioned; and several of these, as ivory and sandal-wood, are found only in India; also the words for apes and peacocks correspond entirely with the Indian words for the same on the coast of Malabar, and are doubtless derived from these latter; see אִי אִי. b) The LXX have everywhere (except once in Gen. x. 29) for אֹפִיר put Σουφίρ, Σουφείρ, Σωφίρ, Σωφείρ, Σωφάρ, Σωφηρά. But COCIP, according to the ancient Coptic lexicographers, (whose authority, however, is not very great,) is the name for India. c) There exists in India a district from the name of which both the names Ophir and Sophir may be readily explained, viz. Σουφάρα, the Οὐφνάρρα of Arrian (Sanscr., Uppara upper), situated in the hither Chersonesus where is now the celebrated emporium of Goa, and mentioned by Ptolemy, Ammianus, and Abulfeda. Of not less weight are the arguments brought in favour of Arabia; which view is supported among the moderns by Michaëlis (Spicil. ii., p. 184, sq.), Gosselin, Vincent, Bredow (Histor. Unters. ii. 253), T. C. Tychem, Seetzen in Zach's Monatl. Correspond. xix., p. 331 sq. and others. It is said: a) That Ophir, in Gen. x. 29, is enumerated among other regions inhabited by the descendants of Joktan; all of which, so far as known to us, are to be sought in the southern part of Arabia, and especially between Sabæa and Havilah, both of which are rich in gold; although it cannot be denied that Ophir, even if more remote and situated in India, might have been referred, in this genealogical list of nations, to the colonies of the Joktanidæ. b) Of the articles of traffic above-mentioned, only certain ones, indeed, as gems and apes, are now found in Arabia; and in modern times no gold whatever is found there. But that formerly certain districts at least of Arabia abounded in gold, and that too native and ἄγνως, is testified not only by the writers of the Old Testament. e. g. Num. xxxi. 22, 50; Judg. viii. 24, 26; Ps. lxxii. 15; but also by Diod. Sic. ii. 50; ib. iii. 44, 47 (comp. in אִי), by Agatharchides ap. Phot. Cod. 250, Artemid. ap. Strab. xvi. 4, 22; Pliny H. N. vi. 28, 32. The authority of all these witnesses cannot well be impeached; since the mines may have been exhausted or wholly neglected, as in Spain; or the globules of native gold formerly found in the sand may have failed. c) Ophir is expressly mentioned as an island of Arabia by Eupolemus ap. Euseb. Præp. Evang. ix. 30; and at the present day there exists a place called el-Ophir in the district of Oman, a few miles from the city Sohar towards the interior.

However it may be as to the respective merits of these two hypotheses (for we cannot here exhaust the discussion), they are both far more probable than that which assigns Ophir to the eastern coast of Africa, making it to comprise Nigritia and the Sofala of Arabian writers, now Zanguebar and Mosambique, where there is a gold district called Fura; an opinion held by Grotius, Huet, D'Anville, Bruce, Schulthess, and others.

Prof. Lee.—שֶׁבָּא, or שֶׁבֶּא, the name of a place celebrated for its gold. It probably took its name from שֶׁבֶּא, one of the descendants of Eber, Gen. x. 29, who fixed themselves in Arabia for the most part. The gold of Sheba, Havilah, and Ophir, is often mentioned in Scripture. The two former places certainly were in Arabia (Gen. xxv. 18, &c.). Seetzen, too, found a place so named near the Persian Gulf. Bochart and others, however, after placing the original Ophir in Arabia, look out for another in the East Indies, or elsewhere; because Arabia seems too near to account for the three years' voyages of Solomon's ships for the purpose of transporting the gold, peacocks, &c., to Palestine. Hence too, the Σοφῖρ, Σώφειρα, or Σώφισα of the LXX, has been supposed to be an Egyptian name of the East Indies, which has been thought corroborated by the سوفرارة Sufara of Abulfeda, situated on the coast of Malabar. Sōfāla again, on the eastern coast of Africa opposite to Madagascar, has also been supposed to be the Ophir of Scripture. See Bochart's Phaleg, p. 147, &c.; Reland's Dissert. Miscel. i. 4; Spicileg. Geogr. Sacr. Michaëlis ii. 184, &c. also my notes on Job xxii. 24, &c.

CHAP. X. 1.

וְהַמֶּלֶךְ שָׁבָא שָׁמַע אֶת-שֹׁמֵעַ שְׁלֹמֹה

Au. Ver.—1 And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the LORD, she came to prove him with hard questions.

Sheba.

Pool.—The queen of Sheba; either, first, Of Ethiopia, as that people by constant tradition from their ancestors affirm, which also was truly in the ends of the earth, whence she came, Matt. xii. 42. Or rather, secondly, Of that part of Arabia called Sabæa, which was at a great distance from Jerusalem, and really in the ends of the earth, and bordering upon the southern sea; for there, much more than in Ethiopia, were the commodities which she brought, ver. 2, 10.

Bp. Patrick.—When the queen of Sheba.] Josephus thinks she was queen of Meroe, which was anciently called Saba. But a great many of his countrymen more rightly understand this matter; who say she came from Aljemin, which was the south part of Arabia Felix, near the Red Sea; and so our Saviour calls her the “queen of the south,” which is the signification of Jewin in Hebrew; and in Arabic, with the addition of Al, is called Aljemin.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Queen of Sheba.] As our Lord calls her queen of the south (Matt. xii. 42), it is likely the name should be written Saba, Azab, or Azaba, all of which signify the south. She is called Balkis by the Arabians, but by the Abyssinians Maqueda.

Gesen.—שֶׁבָּא (comp. Ethiop. ሰባኤ : man) Sheba, pr. n.

1. Three men in the genealogical tables in Genesis and 1 Chron. founders of families or tribes in Arabia. a) A son of Raamah and grandson of Cush, also brother of Dedan, Gen. x. 7; 1 Chron. i. 9. b) A son of Joktan, and brother of Uzal, Ophir, &c., Gen. x. 28; 1 Chron. i. 22. Comp. Abulfeda, p. 98, Paris. c) A son of Jokshan and grandson of Abraham and Keturah, also brother of Dedan, Gen. xxv. 3; 1 Chr. i. 32. Comp. in No. 2 fin.

2. Sheba, the Sabæans, a region and people in Arabia Felix, abounding in frankincense, spices, gold, and precious stones, 1 Kings x. 1, sq. Is. lx. 6; Jer. vi. 20; Ez. xxvii. 22; Ps. lxxii. 15; celebrated also for their great traffic, Ez. i. c. Ps. lxxii. 10; Joel iv. 8; Job vi. 19; but in Job i. 15 driving off plunder in the vicinity of Uz or Ausitis. With all this accords what Greek and Arab say of the Sabæans (Σαβαῖοι), whose chief city they call Saba and Mariaba (Μαριάβα, now مارب Māreb), three or four days' journey distant from Sana'a; see Strabo xvi., p. 768, 777, 780. Agatharch., p. 64; Diod. Sic. iii. 38, 46; Plin. vi. 32; Abulfeda, p. 96 Par.; Edrisi i., p. 53, 147, ed. Jaubert. See Thesaur., p. 1351. Comparing now the three names in Genesis (No. 1, a, b, c), it appears that the Sabæans of Arabia Felix adjacent to Sana'a are descendants of Joktan, Gen. x. 28, lett. b. Nor is it less evident that the other two passages, Gen. x. 7 and xxv. 3, lett. a, c, refer to one and the same people, although a different origin is assigned; since in both, Sheba is coupled with Dedan and Raamah. We may therefore assume two tribes of Sabæans; one of which (b), the more powerful and noble, was in Arabia Felix; while the other (a, c) dwelt towards the Persian Gulf, not far from the mouths of the Euphrates. This latter tribe is not mentioned except in Genesis l. c.

Concerning the name of the Lord.

Pool.—Concerning the name of the Lord, i. e., concerning the great work which he had done for the name, i. e., the honour, and service, and worship, of the Lord, as it is expressed chap. viii. 17, and elsewhere. Or, concerning God; the name of God being oft put for God, as hath been noted before; concerning his deep knowledge in the things of God. Or, concerning the great things which God had done for him, especially in giving him such incomparable wisdom, and that in an extraordinary manner.

Ged.—"When the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon (through the name of the Lord), she came," &c.

Through. LXX, Syr., Arab., read and. The whole parenthesis is wanting in p. p. 2 Chron. ix. 1.

Houb., Hallet, Dathe, Booth.—1 And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, and of the name of Jehovah, &c.

Ver. 4.

Au. Ver.—4 And when the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom and the house that he had built.

Ver. 5.

Au. Ver.—5 And the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance [Heb., standing] of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cupbearers [or, butlers], and his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord; there was no more spirit in her.

Cup-bearers.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The original שֵׁם may as well be applied to his beverage, or to his drinking utensils, as to his cup-bearers.

Gesen.— שֵׁם m. (r. שָׂם to drink).

1. Part. Hiph. cup-bearer, see the root.

2. Drink, espec. wine, Gen. xl. 21; Lev. xi. 34; 1 Kings x. 5, 21, שֵׂם כֵּל , drinking vessels.

And his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord.

Pool.—His ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord from his own palace. See 2 Kings xvi. 18. But the ancients, and some others, translate the words thus, and the burnt-offerings which he offered up in the house of the Lord [so Houb., Dathe, Horsley, Clarke, Booth.]; under which, as the chief, all other sacrifices are understood: when she saw the manner of his offering sacrifices to the Lord.

Dr. A. Clarke.—And his ascent by which he went up.] It seems very strange that the steps to the temple should be such a separate matter of astonishment. The original is, And the holocausts which he offered in the house of the Lord. The Vulgate, Septuagint, Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic, all express this sense; so does the German translation of Luther, from which, in this place, we have most pitifully departed: Und selas brand opfer die er in dem hause des Heren opferete; "And his burnt-offering which he offered in the house of the Lord."

Ver. 7.

Au. Ver.—7 Howbeit I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame [Heb., thou hast added wisdom and goodness to the fame] which I heard.

Pool.—I believed not the words, or, the things reported; Prosperity; or, happiness; or, virtue; Heb., goodness.

Ver. 10.

Au. Ver.—10 And she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

Dr. A. Clarke.—After this verse the 13th should be read [so Houb., Ged., Booth.], which is here most evidently misplaced; and then the account of the queen of Sheba will be concluded, and that of Solomon's revenue will stand without interruption.

Ver. 11.

Almug-trees.

Bp. Patrick.—It is very uncertain what these almug, or algum-trees were (as they are called by a transposition of letters in 2 Chron. ii. 8). Our famous Dr. Castell thinks it was the wood called sanctulum, which is proper for all the uses mentioned in the next verse, and is still in India. And R. D. Kimchi, upon that place in the Chronicles, saith it was a red wood which is now called brezil, by which cannot be meant the wood that comes from Brazil, for that country was not known in his days, but probably he calls it brezil, from the Hebrew word barzel, which signifies iron; it being of such a dark colour. And such a wood there is now in the kingdom of Java, as Gousset observes out of Thevet, and other authors, in his Comment. Linguæ Hebr.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Almug-trees.] In the parallel place, 2 Chron. ix. 10, 11, these are called algum-trees, the ו and the י being transposed; probably the latter is the more correct orthography. What the algum-trees were we do not exactly know. The Vulgate calls it ligna thyina, the thya or lignum vitæ wood; and Mr. Parkhurst thinks that the original, אֵלְכָן, comes from אֵל, not, and כָּן, to fill; because the lignum vitæ is of so close a texture that it can imbibe no water, and cannot be affected by wet weather. The Septuagint translate it ξύλα πυκινα, pine timber; the Syriac, ܠܡܥܡܐ,

ܠܡܥܡܐ, probably cypress wood, or what the translators render ligna brasiliica. The Arabic translates coloured wood, and subjoins a paraphrase, for that wood was by nature painted with various colours. Perhaps the Arabic comes nearest the truth; wood shaded of different colours, such as the rose wood and such like, which are brought to us from various parts of the East Indies. The whole passage as it stands in the Arabic is this: "And the ships of Hiram brought gold from the land of Hind (India), and they carried also much coloured wood (but this wood is naturally painted of various colours), and very precious jewels. And Solomon put some of that same painted wood which was brought to him in the house of the Lord, and in his own house; and with it he adorned them." And for inlaying and veneering nothing can be finer than this wood.

Gesen.—עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם m. plur. 1 Kings x. 11, 12, and by transpos. עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם 2 Chron. ii. 7; ix. 10, 11, almug-trees, a kind of precious wood, brought along with gold and precious stones in the time of Solomon from Ophir. According to 2 Chron. ii. 7, growing also on Lebanon. It seems to correspond to Sanscr.

mīcata (from simpl. mīca, so Bohlen) with the Arab. art. ^{ال} lignum Santalinum, Pterocarpus Santaliorus Linn. red sandal-wood, still used in India and Persia for costly utensils and instruments. Celsii Hierobot. I., p. 171 sq.—Many of the rabbins understand corals, and so the singular עֵצֶי מִצְרַיִם is used in the Talmud; but these are not wood, עֵצִים; although were the Talmudic usage ancient, this wood might have been so named from its resemblance to coral, q. d., coral-wood. Kimchi : ^{البقم} القمر, Brazil-wood.

Prof. Lee.—עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם, m. pl. i. q. עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם, metath. The word is apparently foreign, and occurs only in 1 Kings x. 11, 12; 2 Chron. ii. 7; ix. 10, 11. It is, perhaps, the Sanscrit āgāmah, a tree; and as the Hebrews have no short syllables in their language (Gram. art. 31, note), the ^ל may have been introduced, just as the ^ר is in עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם (Arab. ^{لشعشع} لشعشع) for the purpose of obviating this difficulty. If this be true, the Hebrews, ignorant of the real meaning of this word, took it to signify a certain sort of precious wood brought from Ophir; just, perhaps, as the Roman soldiers, and after them many learned men, supposed Ur, to be the name of a place, when it signified a castle only. (See עֲצֵי מִצְרַיִם). If then the Ophir from which this wood, together with certain precious stones, was brought, was Ceylon, as Bochart seems to have shown (Canaan, lib. i. xlv.); let us see whether we can find any such wood there. Ibn Batuta (my Translation, p. 184) tells us, that "the whole of its (the region of Battala) shore abounded with cinnamon wood, bakam, and the kalanji aloe. The merchants of Malabar and of the Maabar districts, transport it without any other price than a few articles of clothing, &c." These precious woods, therefore, were in great plenty, were cheap, and were transported accordingly in great abundance by the merchants. That precious stones particularly the ruby abounded in Ceylon, the same author attests, p. 187, and that pearls abounded in the pearl-fisheries. If then Solomon and Hiram's merchants traded to this place, they would readily obtain these articles in exchange for others. Now we are told (1 Kings x. 12) that the king made out of this wood, whatever it was, מִשְׁחָד לְיְהוָה וְלְבֵיתוֹ, A MISHAD, or support, &c., for the house of Jehovah, and for the king's house, also lyres and nablia for the singers. This is given again in 2 Chron. ix. 11, except that instead of מִשְׁחָד, we have מִשְׁחָדִים, which, in other places, seems to signify a way thrown up, or made artificially. In Psalm lxxxiv. 6, it seems equivalent to מִשְׁחָד, in the sense of support, or supporter. The first is rendered ὑποστηρίγματα by the LXX, the second by ἀναβάσεις. The first, the Syriac renders by ^{ܐܘܢܐܬܐ} ܐܘܢܐܬܐ, ornament, the Targumist by מִשְׁחָד, fulcrimentum;

the second by מִשְׁחָדִים, seats, or benches; and מִשְׁחָדִים מִשְׁחָדִים, steps to ascend; but, with no claim to probability, can either of them be rendered pillars. Our Authorized Version gives terraces for the second. If then, we are here to understand benches, brackets, terraces, or something similar, we need not suppose the timber to have been very large which was brought from the East; for this sort of wood very rarely grows large, but is very hard, and admirable for constructing brackets, or other furniture, such as would be wanted in the temple and the palace.

In the next place, lyres and nablia are also made out of this wood, on account perhaps of its hard, and hence sonorous, quality. We have seen above, that the kalanji aloe

(عود), was one of the precious woods found in Ceylon. We now remark that the Eastern lyre is,—because perhaps made of this sort of wood,—termed the ^{عود} عود, ūd, the very word which designates the wood in question! And the author of the Kamoos tells us, that it is the name of a stringed instrument, the player upon which is termed عَوَاد, awwād.

In the King of Oude's Persian Dictionary, too, we are told that it is the name of a certain musical instrument, ونام سازي

هم هست. The Medical Dictionary of Ibn El Hosein of Bagdad gives a very detailed account of the عود, and of its several species and properties. The following will suffice for our purpose. "ūd is also named ANJŪJ and YALANJŪJ, and it is of various sorts. Sheikh El Rais (i. e. Avicenna) says, the best of the ūd is that sort of sandal-wood which they bring from the middle regions of Hindustan; after that comes the mountain ūd, which is still better than the Mandalī, because it will drive away the moths from clothes. Some make no difference between the Mandalī and Hindī ūd. Another species is the Samandūrī, which is brought from the Safāla of India; it is the best. After this comes the Komāri, which is a species of the Safāli. After this comes the Kākulī and the wild ūd." Whence it appears, that there are several sorts of this wood, and that of these the sandal-wood of Hindustan is one of the best. He goes on to say, "And the author says, the best ūd is that which they name KALMAK (Is not this our ילמך?), and this is brought from the port of Chata . . . It is extremely precious, and sells for its weight in gold." And again, "Among the Mantāi there is a sort which they call Ashbā, and this is of two kinds. . . . It is not very sweet-scented, but is proper for (making) ornaments, such as instruments (or furniture) for sitting-parlours, combs, chess-boards, knife-handles," &c. Here, then, we have a species of this wood converted, apparently, to the very purposes for which Solomon purchased his; which must amount to little short of demonstration, that a species of the ūd (عود) was the wood used by Solomon; but whether it was the sandal wood of India, or Kalanji ūd of Ceylon, &c. it is impossible to determine; but, that it is one or other species of this wood, I think there can be no doubt.

In 2 Chron. ii. 7, Solomon desires that these trees be sent him, with others from Lebanon; whence some have imagined, that they must all have grown there. This does not follow from the context; the request only being to send timber, the algum, which might have been at Tyre and Zidon for sale, with other timber, the produce of Lebanon. The Arabs, indeed, attest that the sandal grows in Syria (Hierob. Cels., pt. i., p. 182); but to this Accosta gives a flat denial. See the whole of this article by Celsius. The term πεύκινα pitchy or gummy, used here by the LXX, may perhaps be accounted for from the circumstance, that the gum obtained from some of the trees of this species, is used as incense to perfume apartments like the frankincense.

Compare this with 1 Chron. xxvi. 16, 18, and 2 Chron. ix. 11, and see Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple, p. 125, where he only quotes Ralbag, who saith he made battlements, i. e., rails, on either side, that men by them might stay themselves as they went along the highway of that ascent.

Pool.—Of the merchantmen, Heb., of the searchers, or spies, i. e., either merchants, who use to inquire and search out commodities, and all advantages of trade : or rather, the publicans or gatherers of the king's revenues, who used to search narrowly into all wares and dealings, that the king might not be defrauded of his rights. Of the spice merchants, or rather, of the merchants in general, as that word is oft used in Ezek. xxvii., and elsewhere. So this and the former particular contain both the branches of the king's revenue, what he had from the land and fruits thereof, and what he had from the merchants and traders in other commodities. Of all the kings of Arabia, to wit, of those parts of Arabia which were next to Canaan, which were either conquered by David, or submitted to pay tribute to Solomon. But we must not think all these to be kings of large dominions, but many of them only governors of cities, and the territories belonging to them, such as were formerly in Canaan, and were anciently called kings. Of the country, or, of the land, or, of that land, for there is an article in the Hebrew; i. e., either of the land of Canaan; or, rather, of the land of Arabia; whereof some parts were so far conquered, that he had governors of his own over them, who were each of them to take care of the king's revenue in his jurisdiction; and part only so far that they still had kings of their own, but such as were tributaries to him.

Bp. Patrick.—The merchantmen.] Who paid custom for the goods they brought from several countries; or, as Abarinel thinks, the men of Hattarim (as the words are in the Hebrew) signify a certain nation, viz., the Tartars (as they are now called), who brought commodities from the north country to the people of Israel, as others did from the south.

Spice merchants.] There is no reason thus to translate these words, as the same author thinks: but they signify in general all sorts of traders, who brought in merchandize, by sea or land.

Ged.—Exclusive of what he drew from the miners, &c.

Miners; lit. searchers, or spies. I take it to have been men employed to search in streamlets and mountains for particles of gold. Perhaps they may have been searchers in another sense: like our custom-house searchers.

Booth.—Besides what he received from the port-collectors, &c.

The port-collectors.] Literally, searchers. Geddes renders, miners, I think without any probability.

Au. Ver.—22 For the king had at sea a navy of Tharshish with the navy of Hiram : once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory [or, elephants' teeth], and apes, and peacocks.

Bp. Patrick.—Once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver.] It was not so far off, that they could not return in less than three years: but, as Abarbinel supposes, they went thither in the end of one year, and stayed there the next to vend and buy their commodities; and then returned in the beginning of the third year. Bochartus hath made it very probable that this place was Tartessus in Spain, where gold and silver in ancient times, if we may believe Strabo and others, whom he quotes, were plentiful. But I do not find any proof that ivory, apes, and peacocks, were the commodities of that country (see his Phaleg., lib. iii., cap. 7).

Ivory.] The Hebrew word senhabim is of doubtful signification : but the word sen, or shen, certainly signifying a tooth, interpreters have supposed that habim signifies an elephant; and both together import elephant's teeth, i. e., ivory. But it is hard to give an account of this word habim: therefore Bochartus rather thinks that the whole word senhabim signifies an elephant: which best agrees with what follows, apes and peacocks, all three signifying living creatures; and, indeed, ivory itself, in this chapter, is simply called by the name of sen: where he speaks of Solomon's throne, ver. 18 (see his Hierozoicon, par. ii., lib. i., cap. 20).

And apes.] The Hebrew word kophim is both by the ancients and moderns translated apes; which creature Pliny calls cephos; and saith they were seen but once at Rome in his days, and that they came out of Ethiopia. So that if Tarshish was in Spain, they that sailed thither trafficked in Afric also before they came home (see Bochartus, in his Hierozoicon, par. ii., lib. iii., cap. 31).

And peacocks.] The LXX do not venture to translate the Hebrew word thuccijim: but the Chaldee, Syriac, Arabic, and Latin, translate it as we do, peacocks; and so do the most learned among the Jews, as Bochartus shows in a long dissertation; where he probably guesses this creature had its name by a small transposition of letters from Cuthajim; as much as to say a bird of Cuth, or a Persian bird. Which transpositions are so usual, that we have an instance of it in this chapter: the trees here called almugim, being called in the Chronicles algumim. See Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 23, where he shows how beautiful a creature this is: which might well be brought from foreign countries to Judea, where there were none of them.

Pilkington.—The words טַרְשִׁישִׁי and חִירָם are only used 1 Kings x. 22 and 2 Chron. ix. 21, which, from the Latin, Syriac, and Arabic versions, we render apes and peacocks; but, from the context, I am fully persuaded that the Greek translators of the Book of Kings more properly understood them to mean some kinds of precious stones: but of what particular sorts, it would be in vain to inquire.

שִׁנְיָהּ m. plur. ivory, 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21. Sept., ὀδόντες ελεφάντινοι, Targ., שִׁנְיָהּ elephant's tooth. It is compounded from שֵׁן tooth, and (as was first shown by A. Benary in the Berliner litt. Jahrbücher 1831, No. 96) הַיָּהּ contr. הַיָּהּ, from Sanscr. ibha-s elephant, (whence with the Arabic article Gr. ἐλ-έφας,) because the Hebrews were unable distinctly to pronounce הַיָּהּ or הַיָּהּ (plur. הַיָּהּ) with the article. Egypt. also ΕΒΩ, ΕΒΟΥ, elephant.

אָפִי m. an ape, 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21. Sanscr. and Malabar kupi, ape, (pp. swift, agile,) a word of Indian origin; whence also Gr. kīptos, kīβos, κείβος, which are used of various species of apes and monkeys.

הַיָּהּ m. plur. 1 Kings x. 22, and הַיָּהּ 2 Chron. ix. 21, peacocks, according to the Targ., Syr., Arab., Jerome, and the Heb. intpp. Corresponding are Malabar togei, Sanscr. sikhi. This would seem to have been the domestic name of this bird in India; and hence comes also Gr. ταῶς, ταῶς, pp. TaFōs, Athen. ix., p. 397, whence Arab. طائوس, Chald. טַוּס, and also Lat.

Prof. Lee.—שִׁנְיָהּ, pl. m. twice, 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21. Ivory, according to the majority of interpreters: Bochart prefers Elephants. The etymology is doubtful. Gesenius adopts that proposed by Benary, (Annal. Litt., Berol. 1831, No. 96,) who derives the latter part of the word from the Sanscrit ibha इ: An elephant.

הַיָּהּ, and הַיָּהּ, m. pl. 1 Kings x. 22; 2 Chron. ix. 21, only. According to the majority of interpreters, peacocks; some, however, suppose them to have been parrots.

For the former we have Pers. طائوس. Gr.

Au. Ver.—28 And Solomon had horses brought [Heb., and the going forth of the horses which was Solomon's] out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by their means [Heb., by their hand].

Pool.—28 Horses and linen yarn; the two chief commodities of Egypt. See Prov. vii. 16; Cant. i. 9; Isa. iii. 23; Ezek. xxvii. 7. The king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price; Solomon received them from Pharaoh at a certain price agreed between them, and gave this privilege to his merchants, for a tribute to be paid to him out of it.

29 A chariot: this is not to be understood of the chariots and horses themselves, (for then all horses had been set at an equal price, which is most absurd,) but by a metonymy, for the lading of chariots and horses, which consisting of fine linen and silk, &c., were of great value; and the king's custom, together with the charges of the journey, amounted to these sums.

Bp. Patrick. — And linen yarn.] Most think bysnus, fine linen, is hereby meant; which was a great commodity in Egypt.

The king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.] These words Bochartus seems to me to have cleared with the greatest perspicuity, by taking the Hebrew word mikeh, not for linen yarn, or fine linen; but for the toll or custom that was taken for the horses that were brought out of Egypt. And thus he translates the whole; "Horses were brought up to Solomon out of Egypt; and as for the toll or custom, the merchants of king Solomon hired it at a price (that is redeemed it of the king of Egypt for so much constantly); and a chariot coming out of Egypt went out for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty; and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring by their hands." The sense of which words is plainly this, that noble horses being found in those times, in few countries but Egypt, Pharaoh would not suffer them to be carried from thence without a great tribute which he exacted from them; which was six hundred shekels for a chariot, and a hundred and fifty for a horse. This must not be understood to be the price at which they were bought, but the custom paid for them; otherwise every horse would have been of the same value, which is absurd. Solomon, therefore, bringing many thousand horses out of Egypt, prevailed with his father-in-law to free him from this grievous tribute, and to accept of a certain sum of money to be paid him every year instead of it. Thus being freed from the custom which was demanded of all others, all the kings of the Hittites and Syrians bought their chariots and horses of Solomon's merchants, who could afford to sell them cheaper than they could have them in Egypt (see Hierozoicon, par. ii., lib. ii., cap. 9).

By the "kings of the Hittites" are meant the rulers of some of that nation, who were driven out by the Israelites; and lived in the north-east of the land of Canaan, or in some part of Arabia (see Judg. i. 26).

Bp. Horsley.—In this obscure passage, the word מִכָּה, or מִכָּה, as it is written in 2 Chron. i. 16, is taken by the LXX in this place, and by the Vulgate, both here and in Chronicles, as the proper name of a place, with the prefix כ. For מִכָּה at the beginning of verse 29, we read in the parallel place, 2 Chron. i. 17, מִכָּה.

28 "And the exportation of horses for Solomon was from Egypt, even from Coa. The king's merchants took [them] from Coa at a fixed duty.

29 "For they went and brought a chariot from Egypt for six hundred [shekels] of silver, and a horse for one hundred and fifty. And upon the same terms for all the kings of Syria, they exported through their hands."

"They went" namely, to Coa. A public mart, as I suppose, in the part of Egypt nearest to Palestine, where the Egyptian horses were exposed to sale, and the king of Egypt had a customhouse for the receipt of his duties. This place might sink into obscurity, when Judea ceased to be the channel of the commerce between Egypt and Syria; which may be the reason that we hear no more of it in history, sacred or profane.

"A chariot" i. e., a chariot with its set of four horses.

Dr. A. Clarke. — 28 And linen yarn.] The original word, מִכָּה, is hard to be understood, if it be not indeed a corruption.

The versions are all puzzled with it: the Vulgate and Septuagint make it a proper name: "And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and from Coa, or Tekoa." Some think it signifies a tribute: thus Bochart: "They brought horses to Solomon out of Egypt; and as to the tribute, the farmers of this prince received it at a price." They farmed the tribute, gave so much annually for it, taking the different kinds to themselves, and giving a round sum for the whole.

Some suppose that מִכָּה signifies the string or cord by which one horse's head is tied to the tail of another; and that the meaning is, Solomon brought droves of horses, thus tied, out of Egypt.

Rabbi Solomon Jarchi, in his comment on the parallel place, 2 Chron. i. 14, says that מִכָּה signifies a collection or drove of horses, or what the Germans call stutt, a stud. He observes on that place, "That he has heard that there was a company of merchants in Egypt, who bought horses from the Egypt-tians at a certain price, on condition that no person should be permitted to bring a horse out of Egypt but through them."

Houbigant supposes the place to be corrupt, and that for סָמָה we should read מִרְכָּבָה, chariots: "And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt, and chariots; and the king's merchants received the chariots at a price: and a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver," &c. This makes a very good and consistent sense; but none of the versions acknowledge it, nor is there any various reading here in any of the MSS. yet collated.

If we understand it of thread, it may refer to the byssus or fine flax for which Egypt was famous; but I do not see on what authority we translate it linen thread. Bochart's opinion appears to me the most probable, as the text now stands; but the change contended for by Houbigant makes the text far more simple and intelligible.

29 A chariot came up—for six hundred shekels.] This was the ordinary price of a chariot, as an hundred and fifty shekels were for a horse.

Ged.—28, 29 Now horses, for Solomon, were chiefly brought from Egypt; and, particularly, from Kōa. The king's agents took them from Kōa, at a certain price: a set of chariot-horses were purchased from Egypt, for six hundred shekels of silver; and a single horse for an hundred and fifty: at the same price at which they were purchased for all the kings of the Hethites, and for all the kings of Syria.

21 And.....from Kōa. I have followed the most probable interpretation of this difficult passage. The rendering in our vulgar version, and linen yarn, is unsupported by any tolerable authority.

Booth.—28 And Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt and from Coa: the king's merchants received them from Coa at a stated price. 29 And a chariot was brought up out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and a horse for a hundred and fifty: and so were they brought for all the kings of the Hethites, and for the kings of Syria.

Vocabulum מֹלֵךְ, in quo omnis est difficultas, putem explicari posse de privilegio, ut vulgo dicitur, exclusivo coëmendī equos, quod negotiatores regis pro certa pecuniæ summa erant consecuti. Sic enim describitur illud מֹלֵךְ in textu מֹלֵךְ קִצְוֹת יָקָר. Potest vero מֹלֵךְ hanc habuisse significationem ex con-jugat. viii. verbi قَوِي, licitatus fuit rem, auctoque ad summum pretio acquisiuit; cf. Golius, p. 1987. Hujusmodi autem privilegium regem Ægypti Salomoni, genero suo, concessisse, nemo improbable dixerit. Hic igitur per suos homines, qui propterea vocantur מֹלֵךְ, equos coëmit, quos deinde pretio pro arbitrio suo constituto vendebat.

Sed vere monuit Winerus, "verborum lusum in hac tenui oratione aliquantulum jejunum videri." Præterea notio catervæ hominum et animalium minus certa videtur. Itaque non omnino contemnenda est eorum opinio, qui in מֹלֵךְ nomen proprium regionis, fortasse Koæ Nisam inter et Ariam sitæ, subesse putantes, locum ita expediendum censent: educabantur equi Salomonis ex Ægypto et ex Koa (מֹלֵךְ); mercatores regis adducebant eos ex Koa pretio soluto.

Μελχόμ, Jer. xlix. 1, 3; Syr. مَلْحَم comp. Zeph. i. 5. To this idol the Hebrews from the time of Solomon sacrificed infants upon מֹלֵךְ erected in the valley of Hinnom. According to the Rabbins, its statue was of brass, with the members of the human body, but the head of an ox; it was hollow within, was heated from below, and the children to be immolated were placed in its arms, while drums were beaten to drown their cries; see Jarchi ad Jer. vii. 3; Lund Jüd. Heiligthümer, p. 638; Carpzov. Antiq. 87, 404. Such a tradition is strongly confirmed by a passage in Diodorus Siculus, respecting human sacrifices offered by the Carthaginians to Κρόνος, i. e., Saturn, Diod. Sic. xx. 14. Hence it has been commonly held, that the Moloch of the Old Testament was also Saturn, and indeed the planet Saturn, which the ancients regarded as a κακοδαίμων to be appeased with human sacrifices; see Comm. on Is. ii., p. 343, and comp. in יר. p. 469. But from the language of Jeremiah, e. g. xxxii. 35, and they build the high places of Baal which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire to Molech, comp. xix. 5, they have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons in the fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, it would seem to follow that the idol Molech (מֹלֵךְ) was no other than Baal (בַּעַל), to whom also in the region of Carthage and Numidia children were immolated; see three Punic inscriptions, Monumm. Phœnic., pp. 448, 449, 453. It may be supposed that מֹלֵךְ, מִלְכָם, was an epithet of Baal in current use chiefly among the Ammonites, as מֹלֵךְ was an epithet of the same god among the Tyrians; see in גֵּזַר No. 4. Among the Phœnicians also a customary epithet of Baal מלך מלך king eternal, and also simply מלך, king; see Monumm. Phoen. l. c. The forms מלכ, מלכ, may be compared with מלך p. 219; i. e., the endings מל and מל may be regarded as diminutive forms of endearment affixed to the names of gods; although in these syllables there may also lurk a suffix, the force of which was by degrees lost, as in the names of the gods Ἀδωνις מל, Baaltrīs מל, Monumm. Phoenic., p. 400; see also art. מל p. 13 above.

Prof. Lee.—מלך, masc. always with art. מלך, Molech, Moloch: Gr. Μολόχ: i. q. מלכ, מלכ. The name of an idol of the Ammonites often worshipped by the Hebrews. The same, apparently, with מל, see p. 294 above, or the planet Saturn, as generally supposed. See Selden de Diis Syris, Syntag. i. cap. vi.; Michaëlis Supp., p. 1514. According to the author of the Dabistan (on the ancient Persians), the image of Saturn was made of black stone. It had the head of a monkey, the body of a man, and the tail of a pig. On his head was a crown, in his right hand a hair-sieve, in his left a serpent. On his shrine, see p. 62 above. It was probably the same with the Mahadeva, or destroying deity of the Hindoos: and, hence, was to be placated by the sacrifice of children, &c. See, too, Diodorus Siculus, lib. xx. 14, on the worship paid to Saturn by the Carthaginians, as quoted by Gesenius.

Ver. 13.

Au. Ver.—13 Howbeit I will not rend away all the kingdom; but will give one tribe to thy son for David my servant's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.

Pool.—How but one tribe, when he had both Judah and Benjamin, 2 Chron. xi. 12? Ans. Either Benjamin is swallowed up in Judah, because it was comparatively very small, and their habitation much intermixed with that of Judah; or one, to wit, of that kingdom which he here threatens to rend away from him, i. e., of the kingdom of Israel, and that was Benjamin; one beside Judah, which was his own tribe: or but one, because Benjamin was not entirely his, but part of it adhered to Jeroboam, as Beth-el, 1 Kings xii. 29, and Ephraim, 2 Chron. xiii. 19, both which were towns of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 22.

Au. Ver.—15 For it came to pass, when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, after he had smitten every male in Edom.

Pool.—When David was in Edom, to wit, by his army, to war against it. See 1 Chron. xviii. 12, 13. After he had smitten every male in Edom; or, and he smote, &c., as it is in the Hebrew; which is here noted as the cause of Hadad's flight, he smote, &c. He understood what Joab had done in part, and intended further to do, even to kill all the males, and therefore fled for his life.

Houb., Booth., Maurer.—15 For when David smote [LXX, Syr., Arab.] Edom, and Joab, &c.

Ged.—15 When David invaded Edom. The present Hebrew text has, was in Edom. The Greek and Syriac versions, laid waste Edom; which is probably the true reading. I have used a word that is applicable to either. Comp. 2 Sam. viii. 14.

[Alex.] 23 καὶ ἠγειρεν Κύριος Σατὰν τῷ Σαλωμών τὸν Ῥαζών, υἱὸν Ἐλιαδάε τὸν Βαραμείθ Ἀδαδέζερ βασιλέα Σουβὰ, κύριον αὐτοῦ. 24 καὶ συνηθροίσθησαν ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἄνδρες, καὶ ἦν ἄρχων συστρέμματος ἐν τῷ ἀποκτείνειν Δαυὶδ αὐτούς· καὶ ἐπορεύθησαν Δαμασκὸν, καὶ ἐκάθισαν ἐν αὐτῇ, καὶ ἐβασίλευσαν ἐν Δαμασκῷ. 25 καὶ ἐγένετο ἀντικείμενος τῷ Ἰσραὴλ πάσας τὰς ἡμέρας Σαλωμών αὐτῇ ἡ κακία Ἀδερ.

Au. Ver.—23 And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord Hadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah: and they went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, beside the mischief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

23 Hadadezer.

Houb.—Nos, Adarezer, ex scripturâ יצחק, ut in libro Samuel, et in paralipomenis. Sic etiam hoc loco duo Codices, nec non Vulgatus et Syrus.

Rezon.

Dathe., Booth.—Hezion. [xv. 8.]

Ged.—Rezon. He is supposed to be the same with Hezron, mentioned in xv. 18. This verse and the two following verses are in most Greek copies after ver. 14.

24 And he gathered men unto him.

Dathe.—And men were gathered [LXX, Syr., Arab.] unto him.

And reigned in Damascus.

Le Clerc, Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth.—And made him [Ged., Rezon; Booth., Hezion] king of [Vulg., Syr., Arab., five MSS.] Damascus.

Houb.—24 יצחק: Non licet convertere et regnârunt; nam solus Adad Damasci regnum tenebat. Itaque יצחק sic habendum ut יצחק, et regem eum fecerunt; ut Clericus observat.

25 Besides the mischief that Hadad did, &c.

Pool.—So the sense is, this infelicity was added to the former concerning Hadad, mentioned above, ver. 14, &c. Whilst Hadad molested him in the south, Rezon threatened him in the north. But some understand this of Hadadezer, who is here called Hadad, by way of abbreviation, (which is not unusual in proper Hebrew names, as is well known,) and that for, or because of, (for the Hebrew particle eth is sometimes put for el, which oft signifies, for, or because of, as Hebricians know,) the evil which befel Hadad, or Hadadezer, i. e., he bore a grudge against the Israelites from and ever since the slaughter that Joab made in Hadadezer's army, whereof he was a member, although he also took that occasion of making a defection from his master.

Ged.—25 He was an adversary to Israel all the remaining days of Solomon; and an abettor of the mischief done by Hadar; who being made king of Edom [LXX, Syr., Arab., and three MSS.], infested the Israelites.

Booth.—25 And he was an adversary to Israel all the days of Solomon, besides the mischief that Hadad did, who reigned over Edom, and infested Israel.

Houb.—25 Ille igitur, dum vixit Salomon, Israël perpetuò adversatus est, cum interea vexabat eum Adad devastabatque Israël; nam in Edom regnabat.

25 יצחק יצחק יצחק: Hæc interpretationem bonam habere non posse, testis est Arias, sic convertens, et cum malo, quod Hadad, ut nullâ serie, ita etiam nullâ sententiâ. Græci Intt. legebant יצחק, pro יצחק, quos imitatur Vulgatus hoc modo, et hoc est malum Adad, omittens relativum יצחק. Sed continuationem hæc non habent, ut postquam de Razon vexatore Israel, dictum est, continenter subdatur, hoc est malum Adad, vel ut Græci Intt. hoc est malum quod fecit Adad. Nobis sic videtur, pro יצחק, legendum יצחק, quod verbum exhibent in Codice Rom. Græci Intt. et omittendum יצחק, quod omittit Codex Alex. deinde pro יצחק, substituendum יצחק, et cum eo, vel simul cum eo, (mala inferebat Adad, vexabatque Israël;) ut significetur Adad eodem tempore, quo Razon, vexasse Israelitas. Denique pro יצחק, Syria, legendum יצחק, vel יצחק, Edom. Nam Adad erat Idumæus, et ex Egypto proficiscens erat opportuna Idumæa. Omnes Veteres legunt יצחק, præter unum Chaldæum, quem Vulgatus sequitur.

Dathe.—23 Alius deinde Salomonis adversarius ex Dei voluntate fuit Hesjon, a) Eljadæ filius, qui ab Hadadesero, rege Zobensi, domino suo, aufugerat. 24 Ad quem confluerunt milites, quorum dux fuit, cum David Zobenses concideret. Venerunt Damascus, ibi consederunt eumque regem constituerunt. 25 Hunc Israëlitarum hostem expertus sunt, quamdiu Salomo vixit, præter Hadadum non minus eis molestum, qui Edomitarum rex factus Israëlitas multum infestavit.

a) Cf. de hac pericopa verss. 23, 24, 25, Celeb. Koehlerus in repertorio pro litterat. orient. p. II. p. 262. In eo quidem non possem assentiri Viro Doctissimo, quod totum hunc locum habet pro interpolatione, quæ ex nota marginali textui sit inserta. Nam cum scriptor hoc agat, ut quos Salomo adversarios expertus sit, enarret, non potuit hunc Resonem s. Chesjonem omittere. Sed quod textus emendationes attinet, in his, una excepta, assentior. Primo pro יָרֵחַ legendum puto יָרֵחַ propter locum xv. 18, ubi Benhadad, filius Tabrimonis, nepos vocatur Hesjonis, non Resonis; et sic quoque vocatur ab interpretibus antiquis. Deinde vers. 24 pro יָרֵחַ ol ó Syrus et Arabs legerunt יָרֵחַ congregati sunt ad eum, sc. Hesjonem.—Porro pro יָרֵחַ Vulgatus, Syrus et Arabs יָרֵחַ constituerunt eum regem Damasci. Addo, conjugationem Hiphil etiam exhibere quinque codd. Kennicotti, in quibus scriptum exstat יָרֵחַ.—Tandem in vers. 25 pro יָרֵחַ ol ó et Vulg. habent יָרֵחַ, quam lectionem etiam probat Cel. Koehlerus. Sed hæc minime apta videtur contextui. Nam in his verbis sermo est de inimicitia Hadadi, regis illius Edomitarum, de quo vers. 14, seqq. quæ comparatur cum illa, qua Hesjon, alter ille adversarius Salomonis, Israëlitas infestavit. Sensus autem existit perquam durus si legatur: hoc est malum, quod Hadad fecit, de quo in his versibus sermo non fuit, sed de Hesjone, rege Damasci. Igitur יָרֵחַ explico per cum, cujus sensum in versione modo magis Latine indicavi. In fine versus pro יָרֵחַ cum τοῖς ó, Syro et Arabe legendum puto יָרֵחַ. Sic quoque duo codd. Kennicotti 93 et 150, a prima manu.

Au. Ver.—28 And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour: and Solomon seeing the young man that he was industrious, [Heb., did work] he made him ruler over all the charge [Heb., burden] of the house of Joseph.

Pool.—A mighty man of valour, or, a man of great strength of body, or courage of mind, or both.

Bp. Horsley.—28 “Of valour;” rather, “of activity.”

Ged.—28 For the man, Jeroboam, being a man of valour; and Solomon seeing him to be a youth fit for business, he set him over the imposts of the whole house of Joseph.

28 There is here, though strangely misplaced, a curious addition in Sep. Rom. and Ald. which I subjoin: And he builded for Solomon, Sarira (Zerida); where he had thirty horse-chariots. He also builded the citadel, and enclosed the city of David out of the imposts of the house of Ephraim; but, aspiring at royalty, and Solomon seeking to kill him, he was afraid, and fled to Susak king of Egypt: with whom he remained unto the death of Solomon. And Susak gave to Jeroboam, for a wife, And the elder sister of his own wife Thekemina: she was high among the royal women; and she bore to Jeroboam his son Abiah.

Set him over the imposts, &c. He was made governor and collector of the taxes that were raised chiefly in the tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, to carry on the new buildings of Solomon: which taxes were doubtless odious to the people, especially to the house of Joseph; who were naturally jealous of the tribe of Judah, and had always a great influence over the other northern tribes. Jeroboam would take occasion, from his situation among them, to alienate them from Solomon: and thus pave the way to royalty. If the addition in the Greek version be genuine, which I am inclined to believe, it throws considerable light on the subject.

Ver. 29.

Au. Ver.—29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment; and they two were alone in the field.

Ged.—He had clad, &c. Who? Jeroboam or the prophet? for according to the text it may be either. The Greek version, indeed, has Abiah was clad; and so the Syriac. The Vulgate also refers it to him. I am inclined to think that it was Jeroboam's garment that was torn in pieces: perhaps the robe of his new office.

Garment.

Ken.—Instead of כִּסְאוֹ, Camb. MS. 1 has כִּסְאוֹ in veste. Should we find in any Lat. Author the word Vestimentum frequently repeated, and should we sometimes find the same word (or letters expressive of the same thing) writ Vestinetum, we should correct the latter without the least scruple. In the Heb. Bible we have כִּסְמָה (Shilmah) sixteen times, and כִּסְמָה (Shimlah) twenty-seven times; both signifying vestis. I humbly presume it should be כִּסְמָה (Shimlah) universally, as it is here in this MS.; the Arab. verb شَمَلَ, (Shamal) is vestivit, totum se operuit, &c. Let us only consider Exod. xxii. 26, 27. Can we think, that Moses, in ver. 26, writ כִּסְמָה: and, in the very next verse, כִּסְמָה as the words are now printed? Since making the preceding correction, upon referring to the Samar. Pentateuch, I find the word there properly כִּסְמָה (Shimlah) in every place.

Ver. 32.

Au Ver.—32 (But he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel.)

See notes on ver. 13.

Bp. Patrick.—One tribe.] Besides his own. Or Benjamin and Judah may be looked upon but as one tribe; both of them having a share in the city of Jerusalem, and lying near one to the other.

Ged.—One tribe, LXX two, and this may be the true reading. It is certain that the tribe of Benjamin remained in the possession of Solomon's posterity, as well as the tribe of Judah; but, being a small tribe, it might be here included in the greater.

Ver. 33.

Au. Ver.—33 Because that they have forsaken me, and have worshipped Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh the god of the Moabites, and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my statutes and my judgements, as did David his father.

Pool.—They have forsaken me, i. e., the king, and his concubines, and people.

Commentaries and Essays.—Because they have forsaken me, &c. שָׁנָה, Hebrew. The Greek version hath the verbs in the singular number, and rightly [so Horsley, Ged., Booth.]. 1st. Because Solomon is the person spoken of as the subject of the message, in the preceding and following verses; and 2dly, The Hebrew betrays its own error in the close, by the words, כִּדּוּ אֲבִי, “as David his father,” which appropriates what is here said to Solomon. As it stands in the present Hebrew text it is not sense. Five Hebrew MSS. have the first verb singular, שָׁנָה; and six, וְשָׁנָה.

Ashtoreth. See notes on Jud. ii. 13, p. 167. Chemosh.

Gesen.—כִּמּוֹשׁ m. (perh. subduer, vanquisher, r. כָּשַׁב) Chemosh, pr. n. of the national god of the Moabites and Ammonites, Judg. xi. 24; the worship of which was introduced at Jerusalem under Solomon, 1 Kings xi. 7; 2 Kings xxiii. 13; Jer. xlviii. 7. Hence כְּמֹשׁ, עַם, people of Chemosh, i. e., the Moabites, Num. xxi. 29. Sept. Χαμῶς, Vulg., Chamos.

Au. Ver.—34 Howbeit I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince all the days of his life for David my servant's sake, whom I chose, because he kept my commandments and my statutes.

Pool.—The whole kingdom, to wit, of Israel, that which I have designed for thee. Or rather, I will not take anything, or part of the kingdom [so Houb., Ged., Booth.]. For the Hebrew phrase lo col, which properly signifies not all, or not the whole, doth usually signify not any thing, as Deut. viii. 9, thou shalt not want every thing, i. e., not any thing. So also Gen. iv. 15; xxiii. 6; xxxix. 23; Psal. xlix. 17; cxliii. 2, &c. The whole kingdom out of his hand; he shall possess it whilst he lives, as it follows; and therefore thou shalt not yet attempt to invade it.

[Alex.] 2 καὶ ἐγένετο ὥς ἤκουσεν Ἰεροβοὰμ υἱὸς Ναβὰτ, καὶ αὐτοῦ ἔτι ὄντος ἐν Αἰγύπτῳ ὥς ἐφύγεν ἐκ προσώπου τοῦ βασιλέως Σαλωμῶν, καὶ ἐπέστρεψεν Ἰεροβοὰμ ἐξ Αἰγύπτου. 3 καὶ ἀπέστειλαν καὶ ἐκάλεσαν αὐτὸν καὶ ἦλθεν Ἰεροβοὰμ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—2 And it came to pass, when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it, (for he was fled from the presence of king Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt;)

3 That they sent and called him. And Jeroboam and all the congregation of Israel came, and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

Bp. Patrick.—2 Heard of it.] The words of it are not in the original, but only that he heard: either of this meeting, or of the death of Solomon, or both: for he could not hear of this meeting without hearing of his death.

And Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt. So Patrick, Maurer.

Commentaries and Essays.—When Jeroboam, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it. What then? We are not told. But the omission may be supplied from the parallel place, 2 Chron. x. 2, which adds, "that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt." Perhaps, however, here is no omission, but rather an error in the text. i. e., of נבט, for נבט, as it is in Chronicles. The difference between Kings and Chronicles in the word נבט, is only in the points, which are of no authority. Then the passage will run the same as in Chronicles, and the version the same, "It came to pass when Jeroboam heard of it, that he returned [so Pilkington] out of Egypt." The LXX have not this verse, and differ greatly from the Hebrew in this and in the foregoing chapter.

Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth.—And [Ged., now] when Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of king Solomon, had heard of Solomon's death, then Jeroboam returned [Ged., had returned] from Egypt, &c.

Quod nisi sic esset, omninò inutile fuisset memorare hæc audivisse Jeroboam, ut postea subderetur, eum in Aegypto commoratum fuisse.

Au. Ver.—15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cause was from the Lord, that he might perform his saying, which the Lord spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

The cause was from the Lord.

Bp. Horsley.—15 Rather, the turn, or, the bringing about; i. e., the event was from Jehovah.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The cause was from the Lord.] God left him to himself, and did not incline his heart to follow the counsel of the wise men. This is making the best of our present version; but if we come to inquire into the meaning of the cause of all this confusion and anarchy, we shall find it was Rehoboam's folly, cruelty, and despotic tyranny: and was this from the Lord? But does the text speak this bad doctrine? No: it says סבה, the revolution, was from the Lord. This is consistent with all the declarations which went before. God stirred up the people to revolt from a man who had neither skill nor humanity to govern them. We had such a סבה, revolution, in these nations, in 1688; and, thank God, we have never since needed another. None of our ancient translations understood the word as our present version does: they have it either the turning away was from the Lord, or it was the Lord's ordinance; viz., that they should turn away from this foolish king.

Ged., Booth.—For it came to pass.

Commentaries and Essays.—When all Israel heard, that Jeroboam was come again, they sent, and called him, &c. This seems inconsistent with what is said verse 3 and 12 above, that Jeroboam appeared in person at the head of the people in their address to Rehoboam. If so, they must not only have heard, but seen, that he was returned. The parallel place, 2 Chron. x., hath not this verse, and the narrative is there consistent. The LXX have this verse, but as it mentions nothing of Jeroboam's appearing at the head of the congregation after his return, but seems to suppose him concealed, its narration also is consistent. And I confess it doth not seem so likely, that such an obnoxious person as Jeroboam should head the people on a petition for redress of grievances; this would have been too affronting, and a seeming insult on the king; but rather more probable that he should lie a while concealed, perhaps plotting, and intriguing, and in readiness to take advantage of circumstances.

Au. Ver.—31 And he made an house of high places, and made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

Pool.—An house of high places, or, an house (i. e., houses, or chapels) in the high places. Besides the famous houses, or temples, which he built at Dan and Beth-el, he built also, for his people's better accommodation, lesser temples upon divers high places, which were esteemed sacred and venerable, because their pious ancestors had served God in them; and thereby Jeroboam might not seem to bring in a new religion, but only to revive the old. Made priests of the lowest of the people. The words in the Hebrew properly signify from the ends of the people; which is and may be translated thus, out of all the people; promiscuously out of every tribe; which exposition seems to be confirmed by the following words, which are added to explain these, which were not of the sons of Levi; though they were not of the tribe of Levi. And that indeed was Jeroboam's sin; not that he chose mean persons, for some of the Levites were such; and his sin had not been less, if he had chosen the noblest and greatest persons, as we see in the example of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 18, 19; but that he chose men of other tribes, contrary to God's appointment, which restrained that office to that tribe. Not of the sons of Levi; to whom that office was confined by God's express command; but he gave the priesthood promiscuously to any person of any other tribe.

Bp. Patrick.—He made an house of high places. That is, saith Abarbinel, he made an house or temple at Dan; wherein there was not one altar only, as there was at Jerusalem, but a great many high places.

And made priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi. The Hebrew words miketsoth haam should not be interpreted "the lowest of the people;" but, as Abarbinel expounds it, "out of all the people;" he made anybody a priest though he was not of the sons of Levi. And Bochartus hath justified this exposition, by a great many examples of the use of these words in other places. To this Jeroboam was forced, because the Levites would not serve his impiety (2 Chr. xi. 14), and therefore he expelled them all, and seized on their cities and lands. Whereby, as he eased the people of paying their tithes, there being none to demand them; so he gratified them by making priests out of every tribe and family; even "in the extremest part of the country," as the Hebrew words signify. Thus, as he transferred the kingdom from the house of David, so he transferred the priesthood from the family of Aaron, and let it loose, that any body might be admitted to that honourable employment. Which was a very popular thing, and ingratiated him no doubt, with the Israelites. And Cornel. Bertram thinks, that as he had priests, so he had Levites also of the same stamp; that is, some to officiate under the priests as they did. The former he called cohenim, as they were called in Judah; the other he called cemarim, who ministered as the Levites did; but in black, not in white garments, and thence had their name (De Republ. Judaica, cap. 16).

Au. Ver.—32 And Jeroboam ordained a feast in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feast that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar [or, went up to the altar, &c.]. So did he in Beth-el, sacrificing [or, to sacrifice] unto the calves that he had made: and he placed in Beth-el the priests of the high places which he had made.

33 So he offered upon the altar [or, went up to the altar, &c.] which he had made in Beth-el the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had devised of his own heart; and ordained a feast unto the children of Israel: and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incense [Heb., to burn incense].

Commentaries and Essays.—32 and 33. We have here an account of Jeroboam's instituting a feast, in honour of his new gods, which he set up at Dan, and at Bethel, in imitation of the feast of tabernacles at Jerusalem, and by the clause, so did he in Bethel, it should seem that he celebrated it first at Dan, and afterwards at Bethel with the same rites as he did at Dan, and so the commentators I have consulted understand it. Patrick, on the clause, so did he in Bethel, thus comments, "what he had done in Dan, he did also in Bethel, for hitherto hath been related only what he did in the remotest place." See also his comment on the latter part of the 33d verse. Now here it may be objected, 1st, That it is not reasonable to suppose, that Jeroboam would institute his new feast, and celebrate it first at Dan, the remotest corner of the kingdom, but at Bethel, near his own royal residence, which appears by the tenor of the future history to have been the capital seat of idolatry, the rival of the temple at Jerusalem, "the king's sanctuary and the king's court," as it is called, Amos vii. 13. 2dly, That, this clause excepted, there is the greatest reason to conclude from the tenor of the narration, that the whole transaction was performed at one time, and at one place, and that at Bethel. 3dly, by supposing he celebrated it first at Dan, and then at Bethel, so as he did at Dan, a plain absurdity follows, i. e., that he celebrated the same feast both at Dan and at Bethel, the same day of the same month; for it was the fifteenth day of the eighth month that he celebrated the feast; but the distance of the places, together with the time the celebration of such a solemn feast would necessarily take up, renders the very supposition of such a thing absurd. These difficulties occurred to me in reading this passage. I then looked into the Greek version, and all these difficulties vanished; all was plain and consistent, and that only by a different reading of one word in the text: for instead of "so $\kappa\alpha\iota$, did he at Bethel," it has $\epsilon\upsilon\ \epsilon\pi\alpha\gamma\alpha\gamma\epsilon\ \epsilon\upsilon\ \beta\epsilon\theta\epsilon\lambda$; he offered upon the altar which he had made at Bethel; reading either, $\alpha\lambda\tau\alpha\rho$, (and one MS. has now $\alpha\lambda\tau\alpha\rho$, as in ver. 33) or, $\kappa\iota$, which more nearly resembles $\kappa\iota$, the word now in the Hebrew text, which is often used in the relative sense of $\alpha\lambda\tau\alpha\rho$. (See many instances of this in the note on Jer. vii. 21, 22.) Here then we find, that Jeroboam celebrated this new feast, not at Dan first, and afterwards at Bethel on the same day, but at Bethel, he offered on the altar, which he had made at Bethel, sacrificing to the calves he had made, and he placed at Bethel the priests, &c. The whole translation relates to Bethel only, and the difficulties that occur in the Hebrew text in this place are removed. If it be objected, that the 33d verse will be an unnecessary repetition; I answer, that repetitions like this are very common in the style of the Old Testament. But this recapitulation will appear more proper here, when it is considered that this verse is connected with the following, verse 1 of chap. xiii., and should not have been separated from it. It is the introduction to another narration, and another subject concerning the people, &c., and should have begun the next chapter, not ended this. And in this view our version of the beginning of this 33d verse is very proper, So he offered ($\epsilon\upsilon$ often carries this sense) upon the altar he had made at Bethel, in the fifteenth day of the eighth month, and ordained a feast, and offered upon the altar, and burnt incense. And behold there came a man of God, i. e., while, or, as he was doing this, a man of God came. This 33d verse then is designed to introduce the ensuing story, and therefore not an unnecessary repetition. But further, this verse explains the former, as it fixes the transaction to one day, as well as the former, and consequently to one place, and that Bethel expressly; and therefore it was but one transaction, and the same as that spoken of in the 32d verse.

Dathe.—Male h. l. capita sunt divisa. Cum hoc versu novum caput incipere debet. Nam apodosis manifeste est in initio vers. 1.

Bp. Horsley.—33 Of his own heart. For מלבו, many of Kennicott's Codd. have מלבו.

Maurer.—[מִן הַלֵּב מִן הַלֵּב] quem (mensum) excogitaverat seorsum a Judæis, i. e., pro lubitu suo. K'ri מִן הַלֵּב 'א, quam scripturam post alios assensu suo probavit Hitzigius Begriff, p. 128. Cf. Neh. vi. 8: מִן הַלֵּב מִן הַלֵּב. Sed religio est, lectionem receptam mutare, ubi bonum sensum fundit.

Ken.—In ver. 33 there is another extraordinary mistake, מלבו, præter, instead of מלבו, ex corde suo, as it is in the text of MS. 4, and Camb. 1. This word is also right in the marginal Keri; which, Leusden tells us, we are by no means to say is the truer reading, because then the text must be allowed to be corrupted: but the Keri כלנו, ex corde suo only explains what is meant by כלנו, præter. Strange indeed! If it be true, that præter is explained by ex corde suo, it is in truth a marvellous explanation; and perhaps it is only to be paralleled by ei explained by non!

καὶ ἐγένετο αὐτῶν καθήμενων ἐπὶ τῆς τραπέζης, καὶ ἐγένετο λόγος Κυρίου πρὸς τὸν προφήτην τὸν ἐπιστρέψαντα αὐτόν.

Au. Ver.—20 And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that the word of the Lord came unto the prophet that brought him back.

Ken.—We have here a Masoretic piska or hiatus, the little circle of omission being placed between the two words וַיֵּשְׁבוּ וַיֵּשְׁבוּ. The sense is, And it came to pass, as they sat at table that the word of the Lord came, &c. The Arab. version only has the word here omitted, which reads, As they sat at table and did eat, that the word of the Lord came, &c.

Pool.—Unto the prophet that brought him back; so he makes this prophet publicly to call himself liar, and to pronounce a terrible sentence against him, to whom he professed so much kindness. Indeed the Hebrew words are ambiguous, and by others rendered thus, to the prophet whom he had brought back; which agrees very well with the Hebrew phrase, and may seem to be the best translation, by comparing ver. 23, where the very same phrase is so rendered; and ver. 26, where this message is said to be spoken to him. But these arguments are not cogent; not that from ver. 23, because it is a common thing for the same phrase in divers verses, and sometimes in one and the same verse, to be diversely used; nor that from ver. 27, for that may be rendered concerning him. And therefore our translation is better, as is manifest from ver. 21.

Ken.—A great clamour has been raised against this part of the history, on account of God's denouncing sentence on the true prophet by the mouth of the false prophet: but if we examine with attention the original words here, they will be found to signify either he who brought him back; or, whom he had brought back; for the very same words, אִשֵּׁר וְהַיֵּשִׁיב, occur again in ver. 23, where they are now translated, whom he had brought back; and where they cannot be translated otherwise. This being the case, we are at liberty to consider the word of the Lord as delivered to the true prophet thus brought back; and then the sentence is pronounced by God himself, calling to him out of heaven, as in Gen. xxii. 11. And that this doom was thus pronounced by God, not by the false prophet, we are assured in ver. 26: "The Lord hath delivered him unto the lion, according to the word of the Lord which he spake unto him." Josephus expressly asserts that the sentence was declared by God to the true prophet. The Arabic asserts the same.

Ver. 23, 24.

וַיָּחִי אַחֲרַי אֲכָלוּ לֶחֶם וַיֵּשְׁבוּ
שְׂתוּרָתוֹ וַיַּחֲבֹשׁ לוֹ קַחְמוֹר לְנָבִיא אַחֲרֵי

23 καὶ ἐγένετο μετὰ τὸ φαγεῖν αὐτὸν ἄρτον καὶ πιεῖν ὕδωρ, καὶ ἐπέσاختεν αὐτὰς τὸν θνόν, καὶ ἐπέστρεψε, καὶ ἀπῆλθε. 24 καὶ εὗρεν αὐτὸν λέων ἐν τῇ ὁδῷ, καὶ ἐθανάτωσεν αὐτόν, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—23 And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and slew him: and his carcase was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcase.

Bp. Horsley.—23 For the prophet whom he had brought back. In the 20th verse these same words are understood to express "the prophet who brought him back;" and in the 26th verse, the words אִשֵּׁר וְהַיֵּשִׁיב necessarily bear that meaning. The LXX finish the sentence with the word לְנָבִיא; and what follows they read וישן רץ, and they began the 24th verse with the word וימאחז.

That he saddled the ass for him, for the prophet: so he returned and went away.

24 And a lion met him, &c.

By this reading the impropriety is avoided of taking the same phrase in opposite senses.

וירחב לו החמור לנביא אשר השיב: Hæc verba male expediunt, qui non adhibent criticam manum. Arias sic, et stravit ei asinum, ipsi prophetæ quem reduxerat eum, promiscue habens prophetam cum viro Dei, etsi hæc in pagina sacra distinguuntur. Nam toto in hoc capite propheta est propheta senex, qui in Bethel habitabat, vir Dei is propheta, qui de Juda in Bethel venerat. Clericus: stravit Bethelensis asinum propheta, quem reduxerat, vitio interpretandi eodem, quo Arias; quod idem vitium est apud Vulgatum. Græci Intt. omittunt וישן אשר השיב, in Codice Rom. in Codice autem Alex. tantum ultima duo verba, et similiter Syrus. Nihil tam obvium, quam ut pro לנביא, legatur והנביא, propheta, ut intelligatur prophetam senem de Bethel stravisse asinum viri Dei, quem a se dimittebat, ne propheta et vir Dei temere permisceantur.

*Pool.—*Or rather, concerning him; for so the particle lamed is oft used, as Gen. xx. 13; Psal. iii. 2; xci. 11, compared with Matt. iv. 6. See the notes on ver. 20.

Au. Ver.—32 For the saying which he cried by the word of the Lord against the altar in Beth-el, and against all the houses of the high places which are in the cities of Samaria, shall surely come to pass.

Dr. A. Clarke.—In the cities of Samaria.]

It is most certain that Samaria, or as it is called in Hebrew Shomeron, was not built at this time. We are expressly told that Omri, king of Israel, founded this city on the hill which he bought for two talents of silver, from a person of the name of Shemer, after whom he called the city Samaria or Shomeron (see chap. xvi. 24); and this was fifty years after the death of Jeroboam. How then could the old prophet speak of Samaria, not then in existence, unless he did it by the spirit of prophecy, calling things that are not as though they were; as the man of God called Josiah by name three hundred years before he was born? Some suppose that the historian adds these words because Samaria existed in his time, and he well knew that it did not exist in the time of the old prophet; for himself, in the sixteenth chapter, gives us the account of its foundation by Omri. After all, it is possible that God might have given this revelation to the old prophet; and thus by anticipation, which is the language of prophecy, spoke of Samaria as then existing. This is the solution of Houbigant, and is thought sound by many good critics.

Houb.—32 בשׁ שׁמרון, in uribus Samariæ. Si relinquitur שׁ numero plur. accipiendum erit Samaria, ut regnum Samariæ, quod nos sequimur. Sed haud scio an meliùs בעיר, in urbe. Non semel שׁ scriptum fuit pro errore, pro בעיר. Omittunt Græci Intt. שׁ, et sic habent שׁמרון, ut urbem Samariam; nam convertunt ἐν Σαμαρείᾳ, in Samariâ, Cæterum nos, habebunt, futuro tempore, quia nondum ædificata erat Samaria. Nec mirum videri debet, prophetam nominare Samariam, antequàm ædificetur; postquàm vir Dei nominavit Josiam, qui longo tempore regnavit, post ædificatam Samariam.

Au. Ver.—33 After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but made again [Heb., returned and made] of the lowest of the people priests of the high places: whosoever would, he consecrated him [Heb., filled his hand], and he became one of the priests of the high places.

Au. Ver.—34 And this thing became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

Pool.—This thing became sin; either an occasion of sin, and means of hardening all his posterity in their idolatry; or, a punishment, for so the word sin is oft used. This his obstinate continuance in his idolatry after such warnings was the utter ruin of all his family.

CHAP. XIV. 1.

Au. Ver.—1 At that time Abijah the son of Jeroboam fell sick.

Pool.—At that time; either, first, Presently after the things described in the former chapter; which though related in the beginning of his reign, yet might be done a good while after it, and so Abijah the prophet might be very old, as he is described to be, ver. 4. Or, secondly, Many years after it, i. e., whilst Jeroboam persisted in his former course; for this phrase is oft used indefinitely, and without respect to the time last mentioned before it, as Dan. xii. 1; Matt. iv. 1. Abijah fell sick, by the stroke of God, to punish Jeroboam's rebellion against God.

Au. Ver.—3 And take with thee [Heb., in thine hand] ten loaves, and cracknels [or, cakes], and a cruse [or, bottle] of honey, and go to him: he shall tell thee what shall become of the child.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Cracknels.] נָקִים, spotted or perforated bread; thin cakes, pierced through with many holes, the same as is called Jews' bread to the present day, and used by them at the passover. It was customary to give presents to all great personages; and no person consulted a prophet without bringing something in his hand.

Au. Ver.—10 Therefore, behold, I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam him that pisseth against the wall, and him that is shut up and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

Against the wall. See notes on 1 Sam. xxv. 22. pp. 467, 468.

Him that is shut up and left. See notes on Deut. xxxii. 36, vol. i., pp. 780, 781.

Pool.—Him that is shut up and left; those who had escaped the fury of their enemies invading them, either because they were shut up in caves, or castles, or strong towns; or because they were left, overlooked or neglected by them, or spared as poor, impotent, helpless creatures. But now, saith he, they shall be all searched out, and brought to destruction. See more on Deut. xxxii. 36.

Bp. Patrick.—And him that is shut up and left in Israel.] That is, married or unmarried, as De Dieu expounds these words upon Deut. xxxii. 36, all sorts of men, of whatsoever state or condition they be. Others refer this to treasures shut up in secret places, and to flocks left in the field; or to men taken captive, or that have escaped. As much as to say, there shall be an universal destruction. And thus Bochartus glosses (comprehending all these), "I will cut of every male, whether he be a captive or a free man; whether he live in the city or in the country, be married or single." (See his Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 66.)

Comp. שָׁמַיִם וָאָרֶץ Mal. ii. 12, see in r. שָׁמַיִם, No. I., 1; also the similar Arabic phrases, Thesaur. p. 1008. L. de Dieu interprets this phrase by "the married and the unmarried," comp. ⁸عزب ⁸cælebs, and ⁹اعصر ⁹pater-familias; Kimchi as neut. 'the locked up and the abandoned,' i. e., the precious and the worthless. The sense is in either case the same, but the first interpretation is preferable; and against the latter it may also be urged, that the Heb. expression is everywhere applied only to persons and not to things.

Houb.—10 צדור וסור : Nos, id. quod reconditum videtur ac tutum. Prænuntiat Deus neminem fore in Israel tam tutum ac præsidiis munitum, quin vindictæ divinæ pateat. Aberrant à sententiâ illi, qui convertunt צדור, derelictum, aut neglectum. Nam talis significatus minuit sententiam, nedum augeat; neque enim mirum est homines eos, qui præsidiis careant, patere hostium assultibus. ... צדור : Nos, et auferam post me. Au. Ver.—14 Moreover the LORD shall raise him up a king over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: but what? even now.

Pool.—A king, i. e., Baasha, chap. xv. 28. Who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day; when he is so raised; in the very beginning of his reign. chap. xv. 29. But what? but what do I say, he shall raise, as it were a thing to be done at a great distance of time? he hath already raised him in some sort; the man is now in being, if not in power, who shall do this; this judgment shall be shortly executed.

Bp. Patrick. — But what? even now.] What did I say (that day)? even just now. It is as sure as if it were now done. The Chaldee takes it otherwise; he shall destroy the house of Jeroboam, both that which liveth now at this day, and that which shall be born in time to come. But Kimchi puts no stop at this word vemah (and what), but continues it with what follows, in this manner, "What is this which shall now happen, to that which shall come hereafter?" that is, the present calamities shall be nothing to the future. Which agrees well enough with what follows, concerning the continual troubles that should be in Israel; and at last their captivity.

Au. Ver.—21 And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, the city which the LORD did choose out of all the tribes of Israel, to put his name there. And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammonitess.

Ged.—Forty-one years. This number is highly improbable; although in all the copies and ancient versions, except in the above fragment mentioned among the various readings. Some modern critics think the true number is twenty-one. Houbigant is for fourteen. I suspect the original reading was twenty-two.

The city which the Lord did choose out of all the tribes of Israel to put his name there. This is wanting in Sept. and has much the air of an interpolation.

Houb.—21 בִּן אַרְבַּעִים וְאַחַת שָׁנָה, natus erat annos quadraginta et unum (Roboam, cùm cœpit regnare). Mendosum esse istum numerum annorum sic probat in Criticâ Sacrà Lud. Cappellus: “Roboam dicitur annos natus 41 cūm cōepit regnare. Atqui pater ejus Salomon regnavit tantūm annos 40 et juvenis erat admodūm, cūm suscepit regnum, uti liquet ex 1 Reg. iii. 7, et ex 1 Chron. xxii. 5. An putandum est Salomonem adeo juvenem, anno uno atque altero ante susceptum regnum, cūm adhuc esset sub Nathanis prophetæ veluti pædagogia atque ductu, uxorem duxisse Nahamam Ammonitidem, Roboami matrem, quomodo ea vocatur 1 Reg. xiv. 31 cūm Deus Deut. xxxiii. 3 tam severè interdicat ne gentes illæ in æternum ingrediantur in cœtum Domini. Salomonem uxorem duxisse ante susceptum regnum Scriptura omninò non memorat, imò filia Pharaonis regis Ægypti (quam post initum regnum duxit in uxorem) memoratur prima ejus uxor. Omninò ergò legendum videtur annos 22 (aut verò etiam 12) non verò 42 maximè cūm Roboam dicatur juvenis, imò infans, 2 Chron. x. 8 et xiii. 17 quum suscepit regnum. Nec sit verisimile Salomonem duxisse in uxorem Nahamam Ammonitidem Roboami matrem, nisi quum cōepit Salomon flecti in amorem peregrinarum mulierum, quod non videtur contigisse, nisi circa annum regni sui ut minimum 18 vel vigesimum." Atque hæc Lud. Cappellus docens multos habuit assensores. Nos verò eidem eatenus assentimur, ut numerus 41 mendum sit manifestum, non autem ut numerus germanus sit 22 vel 12 aut, ut lib. i., cap. 10 ejusdem Criticæ Sacræ, 21 quia nulla autoritas est talis emendationis; sed ut Græcos Intt. sequamur, in quorum appendice legitur, ἔξ καὶ δέκα, (annorum) sexdecim. Quodd si aliqua alia scriptio, præter hanc Græcorum, esset eligenda, ea certè eligi deberet, quæ hodierno mendo esset nonnihil similia, puta יבשה שש ושה, quatuordecim annorum, pro eo quod nunc habetur יבשה ושה. Abeunt adhuc Græci Intt. à numero annorum septemdecim, quos Roboam regnasse dicitur; habent enim in Appendice δωδεκα, duodecim, quem numerum amplecti non licet, ut potè cum annis regum Israel pugnantem.

Datke.—Hic numerus Cappello (in critica s. lib. i., cap. x., § 11) suspectus videtur, et pro eo legendum putat 21. Nam Rehabeam mater fuit Naama Ammonitis, 1 Reg. xiv. 21. Salomo autem regnavit annos tantum 40. Si ergo Rehabeamus natus fuit annos 41, cum cōepit regnare, susceptus fuerat et natus Salomoni anno uno, antequam cōepisset regnare. Atqui tum erat adhuc puer ferme (1 Chron. xxii. 5 et 1 Reg. iii. 7) et vivebat pater ejus David; an ergo tum ea ætate duxisset uxorem Ammoniticam, vivente et vidente patre Davide, etc. Hæc Cappellus. Au. Ver.—24 And there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the Lord cast out before the children of Israel.

Pilkington.—I apprehend the appropriated meaning of the word שָׂדֵם to have been mistaken, when it is rendered sodomite; 1 Kings xiv. 24; xv. 12; 2 Kings xxiii. 7. If שָׂדֵם means a whore, Deut. xxiii. 17 which seems to be sufficiently confirmed from Gen. xxviii. 22 שָׂדֵם must, most probably in the same verse, mean a whoremaster or fornicator, unless the terms may be more precisely applied to those persons, of both sexes, who prostituted themselves for hire.

And these terms may have been applied to them, as persons who had consecrated themselves to the lewd service of some impure Deity; which was a common practice among the idolatrous nations. The ancient versions give no countenance to our calling this a sodomite. Nor do I see any grounds for charging the Israelites with being so frequently, and so notoriously guilty of sodomitical practices.

Dr. A. Clarke.—שִׁמְרָן, consecrated persons; persons who had devoted themselves, in practices of the greatest impurity, to the service of the most impure idols.

These wretched beings were priests or rather temple servants (ιερόδουλοι) of Astarte at Hierapolis in Syria; and having been emasculated and wearing a female dress, they wandered about through the cities and villages begging and bearing with them an image of the goddess. Au. Ver.—30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

Bishop Patrick.—30 This doth not seem to agree with what we read xii. 22, where God commanded Rehoboam and his people not to go to fight with Israel: and they obeyed his voice. But this is easily satisfied, by observing that the Jews were commanded not to make war upon the Israelites; but they are not commanded not to defend themselves, if the Israelites made war upon them. And this was their case; the Israelites vexed them with continual incursions and depredations; though the house of David did not assault them, but only repelled their violence; or, perhaps, upon the borders, they were continually endeavouring to get ground one of another; though they never came to a set battle.

Ged.—And his mother's name was Naama, an Ammonitess. So the present text with Chald., Vulg., Arab. But it appears to be an interpolation, and is wanting in Sep. and Syr.

Abijam.

Ken.—Among the various corruptions, to which ancient MSS. have been liable, none have happened more easily than the corruptions of numbers and proper names: and yet, as no words are of greater consequence to the sense, proportionable care should be taken for the correction of such mistakes. The name of this king of Judah is now expressed three ways. Here, and in four other places, it is Abijam or Abim; in two other places it is Abihu; but in eleven other places it is Abiah—as it is expressed by St. Matthew, at i. 7—Ροβοᾶμ ἐγενήθη τὸν ΑΒΙΑ. It is remarkable that in this first instance, Abijam is Abiah in our oldest Heb. MS., supported by ten other copies. Note also, that it is here Abiah in the Greek and Syriac versions; and though the printed Vulgate has Abiam, yet it is Abia in the only Latin MS. consulted on this occasion.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Dr. Kennicott observes that the name of this king of Judah is now expressed three ways: here and in four other places it is Abijam or Abim; in two others it is Abihu; but in eleven other places it is Abiah, as it is expressed by St. Mat. i. 7, 'Ποσοαυ εγεννησε τον ABIA; and this is the reading of thirteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., and of thirteen respectable editions of the Hebrew Bible. The Syriac is the same. The Septuagint in the London Polyglot has Αβιου, Abihu; but in the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglots it is Αβια, Abiah. Though the common printed Vulgate has Abiam, yet the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate, some MSS., and the text in the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglots have Abia: which without doubt is the reading that should in all cases be followed.

CHAP. XV. 1, 2.

Au. Ver.—1 Now in the eighteenth year of King Jeroboam the son of Nebat reigned Abijam over Judah.

2 Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Maachah, [2 Chron. xiii. 2, Michaia the daughter of Uriel.] the daughter of Abishalom [2 Chron. xi. 21, Absalom].

In the eighteenth year.

Bp. Patrick.—1. This seems to disagree with what is said below (ver. 9) concerning Asa, that he began to reign the twentieth year of Jeroboam, and Abijam reigned three years. But it is usual both in Scripture and in other authors to reckon part of a year for a whole year. So Abijam began to reign in some part of Jeroboam's eighteenth year, and continued his reign the whole nineteenth and died in the twentieth: and so was reckoned to have reigned three years [so Pool], as it here follows.

His mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.] Abarbinel fancies she was the daughter of Absalom (as he is called [2 Chron. xi. 21], who rebelled against his father David. She is called by another name, 2 Chron. xiii. 2, viz., Michaiah the daughter of Uriel. But he thinks that is the name of the family, and this her proper name. Others think this is a mere fancy, and with great reason; for Abishalom is a different name from Absalom, as David's son is always called. And they think he had two names as his daughter also had. But Pellicanus seems to me to have given the plainest account of this, that Maachah was his grandmother, and Michaiah his mother.

Pool.—Of Abishalom, or, of Absalom, as he is called, 2 Chron. xi. 21. And because he is here mentioned as a known person, without any addition of his kindred or quality, some conceive that this was Absalom's daughter, called properly Tamar, 2 Sam. xiv. 27, and from her royal grandmother, 2 Sam. iii. 3, Maachah; and that she is called Michaiah (which differs not much from Maachah) the daughter of Uriel, 2 Chron. xiii. 2, because she was first married to Uriel, as Josephus affirms, Antiq. viii. 3, and afterwards to Rehoboam. Others think this was another person, and that both she and her father had each of them several names, which was not unusual among the Hebrews.

Ver. 5.

Au. Ver.—5 Because David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aside from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

Pool.—Quest. How is this true, seeing David sinned in the matter of Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv., and Achish, chap. xxvii., and Mephibosheth, and his indulgence to his children, Adonijah, Amnon, and Absalom, and in the numbering of the people? Ans. This and the like phrases are not to be understood as exclusive of every sinful action, but only of a sinful course or state, or of an habitual and continued apostacy from God, or from his ways, as the very phrase of turning aside from God, or from his commands, doth constantly imply, as appears from Exod. xxxii. 8; Deut. ix. 12, 16; 1 Sam. viii. 3; Psal. lxxviii. 57; Isa. xlv. 20; 1 Tim. i. 6; v. 15, &c. And thus it is most true. For David's other sins were either sudden and transient acts, proceeding from human infirmity, and extraordinary temptations, and soon repented of and blotted out; whereas that which concerned Uriah's wife was a designed and studied sin, long continued in, defended with a succession of other sins, presumptuous, and scandalous to his government and to the true religion, which he so eminently professed.

Commentaries and Essays.—"Save only in the matter of Uriah." I much suspect this clause to be an interpolation. 1st. Because the Greek version hath not this saving clause. 2dly, Because it is contrary to fact. The first part of the verse, that "David did what was right in the eyes of Jehovah, and turned not aside from anything that he commanded him," is most probably genuine, and is true with respect to the public character of David, as a king, and his administration of the laws and statutes of Jehovah relating to the church and state of the Jews, to which alone, I apprehend, what is here said of him refers; and herein he was a man of God's own heart, who fulfilled all his will in this respect in opposition to Saul, who made no scruple to deviate from it. But this has nothing to do with his private character. Some injudicious person, however, not perceiving this, and taking it to include his private character too, in order to save the credit of the sacred historian, might, I suppose, put this clause into the margin, "save only in the matter of Uriah," which relates to his character as a moral man; but in this respect the observation is unhappily not true, for David was guilty of several, and some very great breaches of God's moral law, besides the matter of Uriah. From the margin it might be taken into the text, as many other passages have been.

Au. Ver.—6 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

7 Now the rest of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

Pool.—6 There was war, &c.; which was said chap. xiv. 30, and may be here repeated, to signify the cause and original of the war between Abijam and Jeroboam, which is implied here, and particularly described 2 Chron. xiii. Abijam continued the war which Rehoboam had begun, and pushed it on to a decisive battle. But the place may be thus rendered, Yet there was war, &c., i. e., although God was pleased to show so much respect to David, as for his sake to continue the succession to the kingdom in his posterity, yet he thought fit to manifest his displeasure against David's successors for their sins, and to mix their honour and happiness with wars and troubles.

7 The chronicles of the kings of Judah. See above on chap. xiv. 19.

Bp. Patrick.—6 This was said before (xiv. 30), and therefore may seem to come in here impertinently: because he is not speaking of Rehoboam, but of his son Abijam: who was a valiant young man in the days of his father, and always fought his battles with Jeroboam. Which being related before in the history of Rehoboam, is here repeated, as Abarbinel thinks, to show that Abijam was the cause of these wars. And these words, "all his days," he thinks, relate to Abijam, who continued the war between his father and Jeroboam with great success: as we read 2 Chr. xiii. 17. Bochartus thinks a plainer account may be given of this, by supposing that Rehoboam signifies this son of his; children and fathers being one and the same in a moral account. Thus Abraham is said to have purchased the sepulchre of the sons of Emor; which was indeed purchased by Jacob: and the Israelites say to Rehoboam (xii. 16), "What portion have we in David?" That is, in Rehoboam the grandchild of David? In like manner, he thinks, it may be said, "there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam;" that is, between Abijam the son of Rehoboam and Jeroboam: whom Abijam grievously afflicted (Hieroziocion, par. i., lib. ii., cap. 43). But this doth not seem to be the true account; because the war between Abijam and Jeroboam is distinctly mentioned in the next verse. Therefore the meaning of these words is, that though God was pleased, for David's sake, who walked uprightly before him, to continue a lamp, that is, a successor to him in Jerusalem; yet these successors were vexed with continual wars (as appeared both in the reign of Rehoboam and Abijam), and did not enjoy their kingdom peaceably.

Ken.—6 And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam, &c., &c.

As the history of Rehoboam was ended in the former chapter, where the last verse but one had mentioned the continual war between him and Jeroboam: 'tis highly improbable, that the account of his successor Abiah should be interrupted by a repetition of the same notice concerning Rehoboam. And as there was a very memorable war between Abiah and Jeroboam; 'tis probable, that such a war did not pass entirely unnoticed here. It is therefore much to the honour of eight Heb. MSS., to have preserved here the true word Abiah, instead of the corrupted word Rehoboam. As to the words now in the next verse, and there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam; they are entirely wanting in one Hebrew MSS. So Bp. Horsley.

Commentaries and Essays.—6 This verse looks like an interpolation; nor is it acknowledged by the LXX. The history of Rehoboam was closed in the former chapter, and there it is said, "there was war between him and Jeroboam all their days;" then follows the history of his son Abijam, and in the midst of it this passage comes in again, where it can have no business.

Dr. A. Clarke.—6 There was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam.] This was mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver. 30, and it can mean no more than this; there was a continual spirit of hostility kept up between the two kingdoms, and no doubt frequent skirmishing between bordering parties; but it never broke out into open war, for this was particularly forbidden. See chap. xii. 24. Hostility did exist, and no doubt frequent skirmishes; but open war and pitched battles there were none.

But why is this circumstance repeated, and the history of Abijam interrupted by the repetition? There is some reason to believe that Rehoboam is not the true reading, and that it should be Abijam: "Now there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam all the days of his life." And this is the reading of fourteen of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. The Syriac has Abia the son of Rehoboam; the Arabic has Abijam. In the Septuagint the whole verse is omitted in the London Polyglot, but it is extant in those of Complutum and Antwerp. Some copies of the Targum have Abijam also, and the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate has Abia. This is doubtless the true reading, as we know there was a very memorable war between Abia and Jeroboam; see it particularly described 2 Chron. xiii. 3, &c.

Dathe, Ged., Booth.—6 And there was war between Abiah the son of Rehoboam and Jeroboam, all the days of his life. 7 Now the rest of the acts of Abiah, and all that he did, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah.

Abiah the son of.] I have followed the reading of Syr. and Arab. which I deem the true one; and which is partly confirmed by fourteen Heb. and one Chald. MSS. The rest, except Sept. in which the whole comma is wanting, have Rehoboam for Abiah; a manifest blunder at the end of ver. 7. In the present text, and in all the versions except Syr., we have this addition: And there was war between Abiah and Jeroboam. But this is plainly an interpolation; or, perhaps, the words of ver. 6, stood here originally.—Ged.

Houb.—7 Cætera autem quæ Abiam spectant, et cuncta quæ egit, hæc scripta reperiuntur in libro commentariorum regum Judæ. 6 Cæterum fuit Abiam, quamdiu vixit, cum Jeroboam bellum perpetuum.

Au. Ver.—10 And forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's [that is, grandmother's, ver. 2] name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

Bp. Patrick.—Maachah.] This was the name of his grandmother, who is called his mother [so Pool], as Reuel is called the father of Jethro's daughters, Exod. ii. 18, when he was their grandfather. Which example Kimchi here alleges to explain this. And thus Abarbinel. The sense is not, that Maachah brought forth Asa (for she was his father's mother), but she brought him up and gave him his education: which made his piety the more remarkable that he was not tainted with her principles of religion as his father was. But why his mother should not be mentioned, but his grandmother, which was not at all needful (because it was evident, by what was said before, that Maachah was the mother of Abijam his father), is unaccountable. And therefore others think that this was the name of his mother; which was the same: as her father's also was, with that of Abijam's mother's father.

Bp. Horsley.—His mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Absalom. Rehoboam married Maachah the daughter of Absalom, and by her had Abijam; 2 Chron. xi. 20—22. Therefore Abijam's mother's name and family is rightly described, ver. 2. And this passage, where the same person is mentioned as Asa's mother, must be corrupt. Again, the second verse of 2 Chron. xiii. must be corrupt, where Michaiah the daughter of Uriel is mentioned as Abijah's mother. Nothing seems so probable as that some confusion has been made between these two women, and that Michaiah the daughter of Uriel was Asa's mother.

Ged.—Maacha. If this reading be right, the word mother is here placed for grand-mother; which is very possible. Houbigant prefers the reading of the Vatican copy of the Greek version, Ana. The same note applicable to ver. 13.

Houbigant, Booth.—And his mother's name was Anah, the daughter of Absalom.

Au. Ver.—13 And also Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa destroyed [Heb., cut off] her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron.

Bp. Patrick.—13 Also Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen.] He took away her guards, all the ensigns of royal dignity, and reduced her to the condition of a private person. But the word being is not in the Hebrew; which others translate, "he removed her from the queen:" that is, from his wife.

Because she had made an idol in a grove.] The word we translate idol is miphlezeth, which imports something of terror and horror; either because it was of a frightful aspect, or brought dreadful judgments upon its worshippers. St. Jerome understands by it Priapus [so Clarke], or Baal-peor, to whom the women were much devoted. Theodoret takes it for Astarte, or Venus: and, indeed, in the northern countries, Priapus and Venus were painted together; as Johan. Gensius observes in his book De Victimis Humanis, par. i., cap. 9.

High places. See notes on iii. 2, p. 720.

Bp. Patrick.—14 He did take away all the high places wherein they sacrificed to strange gods (2 Chron. xiv. 3), but not those wherein God alone was worshipped: for his authority was not great enough to do this; the people having so universally and so long taken this license, that none durst attempt to abolish this inveterate custom till the days of Hezekiah: who, seeing the calamities that were coming upon his country, endeavoured to prevent them by a thorough reformation. But though Asa did not venture to do this, yet his heart was sincerely affected to the right worship of God; and he suffered sacrifices to be offered to none else.

Pilkington.—The English version, by no means preserves the distinctions observable in the Hebrew: neither indeed does any other version, and therefore the propriety of the Scripture language can only be discovered and judged of by those who read the original.

The Greek Δομα and Δωρον: the Latin donum and munus; and the English, gift and present are scarcely distinguishable: and they are indiscriminately, and often very improperly given as the translation of סָחָה, stacha, and שָׁדָה, which are words that have different, peculiar, and appropriated significations.

מנחה signifies, a gift, in general, Gen. xxv. 6; Lev. xxv. 38, &c.

שחד signifies a bribe. And it does not sufficiently convey the idea intended, to render it a gift, a present, or a reward. Exod. xxiii. 8, 'Thou shalt take no gift; for a gift blindeth the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous; Deut. x. 17, 'The Lord your God regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward; xxvii. 25, 'cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person; 1 Kings xv. 19, 'Behold I have sent thee a present of silver and gold; come, break thy league with Baasha.

Now, does not this word as evidently mean a bribe in all these places as it does where it is so translated? 1 Sam. viii. 3; Psalm xxvi. 11; Isaiah xxxiii. 5: and I know of no passage where it can be properly understood in any other sense.

Au. Ver.—4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the fields shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 Now the rest of the acts of Baasha and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

6 So Baasha slept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and Ela his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani, came the word of the Lord against Baasha and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the sight of the Lord, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and because he killed him.

7 Houb., Horsley, Clarke, and Booth. place this verse between verses 4 and 5.

Pool.—By the hand of the prophet Jehu came the word of the Lord: the meaning is, the message which came from the Lord to Jehu, ver. 1, &c., was here delivered by the hand, i.e., the ministry, of Jehu, unto Baasha. Jehu did what God commanded him in this matter, though it was not without apparent hazard to himself.

Bp. Patrick.—Because he killed him.] That is, killed Nadab [so Pool], who was Jeroboam's son: or rather (as Abarbinel judiciously observes) this relates to the whole house of Jeroboam before mentioned; which Baasha destroyed, not because they were idolaters, and that he might fulfil the word of the Lord (as perhaps he pretended), but to satisfy his own ambition, being guilty of the very same crime that Jeroboam was; and therefore was no better than a murderer in the slaughter he made of his family; and accordingly is threatened to be punished, for that very act, which was committed not in obedience to God, but to serve himself.

Bp. Horsley.—And also, rather, thus also. The word of Jehovah, as it had come by a prophet against Jeroboam and his family came against Baasha too and his family by the prophet Jehu.

Ged.—7 Now the word of the Lord had, through the mediation of the prophet Jehu Ben-Hanani, been denounced against Baasha and against his house, on account of all the evil which he did in the eyes of the Lord, in provoking him to indignation by his deeds; and because he put to death the house of Jeroboam, although himself was like them.

And because, &c. I have made a slight transposition to make the passage more intelligible. After all I am not sure if I have hit upon the true meaning.

Booth.—Thus the word of Jehovah came, by the prophet Jehu, the son of Hanani, against Baasha, and against his house, for all the evil that he did in the eyes of Jehovah, in provoking him to anger with the works of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and on this account God slew him.

Au. Ver.—8 In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Ela, the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

Bp. Patrick.—In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Ela—to reign.] This seems to contradict what Ezra saith in 2 Chron. xvi. 1, that Baasha built Ramah in the thirty-sixth year of Asa. Of which I shall give an account in my notes on that place. For the present it may suffice to say, that Ezra doth not speak of the thirty-sixth year of Asa's reign, but of the thirty-sixth year after the division of the kingdom. For it could be, at the most, but the twenty-sixth year of Asa's reign when Baasha died.

Two years.] Not complete; but one entire year, and part of another; as appears from ver. 10, 15.

Au. Ver.—23 In the thirty and first year of Asa king of Judah began Omri to reign over Israel, twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

Bp. Patrick.—23 Twelve years.] These twelve years of his reign are to be computed not from the thirty-first of Asa's reign; for it is evident he began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Asa (ver. 15), and his son began to reign in the thirty-eighth year of Asa (ver. 29). Therefore the twelve years are to be computed from the beginning of Omri's reign; which was, as I said, the twenty-seventh of Asa's. From which time (as Abarbinel observes) the contest continued between Omri and Tibni, unto the thirty-first year of king Asa. In the end of which Tibni died; and then Omri reigned over all Israel, whereas he reigned but over half the people before. And Tibni being extinct, all the foregoing years are accounted to Omri; viz., from the beginning of Asa's seven-and-twentieth year, when Zimri died, to the end of this eight-and-thirtieth year, which make twelve years.

Six years reigned he in Tirzah.] Half of his time he made this his royal seat; which was, as some think, all the time his contention with Tibni lasted, and some time after.

Dr. A. Clarke.—23 In the thirty and first year of Asa.] There must be a mistake here in the number thirty-one; for in ver. 10 and 15, it is said that Zimri slew his master, and began to reign in the twenty-seventh year of Asa; and as Zimri reigned only seven days, and Omri immediately succeeded him, this could not be in the thirty-first, but in the twenty-seventh year of Asa, as related above. Rab. Sol. Jarchi reconciles the two places thus: "The division of the kingdom between Tibni and Omri began in the twenty-seventh year of Asa; this division lasted five years, during which Omri had but a share of the kingdom. Tibni dying, Omri came into the possession of the whole kingdom, which he held seven years; this was in the thirty-first year of Asa. Seven years he reigned alone; five years he reigned over part of Israel; twelve years in the whole. The two dates, the twenty-seventh and thirty-first of Asa, answering, the first to the beginning of the division, the second to the sole reign of Omri." Jarchi quotes Sedar Olam for this solution. So Horsley.

Houb. — Anno trigesimo primo. Nunc Amri dicitur regnasse anno 31 regni Asæ. Suprà vss. 10 et 15, dicitur Zambri regnasse in Israel anno regni Asæ 27. Atqui idem Zambri non plus regnavit, quam septem dies; ut necesse sit regnasse Amri eodem anno, quo Zambri regnarat, seu anno Asæ 27 non autem quatuor post annis, seu anno Asæ 31. Hæc pugna temporum non tolletur, si dices regnasse Amri in partem Israel annos quatuor, donec adversarium alterum Thebni debellaret, tumque demum in omnem Israel regnasse, cum Asa annum ageret regni sui trigesimum primum, nisi etiam statues legendum על כל ישראל, in omnem Israel. Au. Ver.—34 In his days did Hiel the Bethelite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firstborn, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the Lord, which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun.

Dr. A. Clarke.—There are three opinions on the words, lay the foundation in his first-born, and set up the gates in his younger son.

1. It is thought that when he laid the foundation of the city, his eldest son, the hope of his family, died by the hand and judgment of God, and that all his children died in succession; so that when the doors were ready to be hung, his youngest and last child died, and thus, instead of securing himself a name, his whole family became extinct [so Pool, Patrick, Rosen.].

2. These expressions signify only great delay in the building; that he who should undertake it should spend nearly his whole life in it; all the time in which he was capable of procreating children; in a word, that if a man laid the foundation when his first-born came into the world, his youngest and last son should be born before the walls should be in readiness to admit the gates to be set up in them; and that the expression is of the proverbial kind intimating greatly protracted labour, occasioned by multitudinous hindrances and delays.

3. That he who rebuilt this city should, in laying the foundation slay or sacrifice his first-born, in order to consecrate it, and secure the assistance of the objects of his idolatrous worship; and should slay his youngest at the completion of the work, as a gratitude-offering for the assistance received. This latter opinion seems to be countenanced by the Chaldee, which represents Hiel as slaying his first-born Abiram, and his youngest son, Segub.

But who was Hiel the Beth-elite? The Chaldee calls him Hiel of Beth-mome, or the Beth-momite; the Vulgate, Hiel of Beth-el; the Septuagint, Hiel the Baithelite; the Syriac represents Ahab as the builder: "Also in his days did Ahab build Jericho, the place of execration;" the Arabic, "Also in his days did Hiel build the house of idols—to wit, Jericho." The MSS. give us no help. None of these versions, the Chaldee excepted, intimates that the children were either slain or died; which circumstance seems to strengthen the opinion, that the passage is to be understood of delays and hinderances. Add to this, why should the innocent children of Hiel suffer for their father's presumption? And is it likely that, if Hiel lost his first-born when he laid the foundation, he would have proceeded under this evidence of the Divine displeasure, and at the risk of losing his whole family? Which of these opinions is the right one, or whether any of them be correct, is more than I can pretend to state.

the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

Bishop Patrick.—Elijah the Tishbite.] Whose original being not known (for here is no mention of his father or mother), some of the Jews have fancied him to have been an angel sent from heaven to reduce them to the true religion. So Abarbinel relates, upon the Book of Judges, as Joh. Frischmuthus observes, in a dissertation about Elijah. Whose name, which in the Hebrew is Elijahu, carries something divine in it: being compounded, as Ægid. Camartus imagines, of three of the names of God, viz., Eli, and Jah, and Hu. There is no doubt the first two are the names of God, but there is reason to question the last, though a great man of our own, Edm. Castellus, in his Polyglot Lexicon, doth put Hu among the Divine names, and so do the Cabalists. He was indeed a very eminent messenger of God, sent to call the Israelites to repentance; from whence our learned Dr. Lightfoot thinks he had the name of Tishbite; from the Hebrew word shub, which signifies to return; for he was sent to be the converter of the nation (see him upon St. Luke, i. 17). Other conjectures there are about this name. But Kimchi seems to have given the plainest account of this name of Tishbite from Thesbe, a town or region where he was born; just as Ahijah is called Shilonite, from Shiloh, where he was born, or dwelt.

Who was of the inhabitants of Gilead.] It is not certain that he was a native of this country; but only that he came and settled among the Gileadites, being born, as some think, in the tribe of Benjamin, though most are rather of opinion in the tribe of Gad.

Au. Ver.—4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

6 And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening: and he drank of the brook.

Pool.—I have commanded; or, I shall command the ravens to feed thee. Object. The ravens were unclean, Lev. xi. 15. Answ. They were unclean for meat, but not for the touch. But howsoever, that ceremonial law was overruled by necessity, and by the lawgiver's dispensation.

Ravens. So Bochart, Houbigant, Pool, Patrick, Geseñ., Lee, Maurer, et al.

Bp. Patrick.—Ravens.] This seems so strange, that some will have the word orebim not to signify ravens, but merchants: because they find the word orebe in Ezekiel xxvii. 17, signifying merchants that traded in the market of Tyre. But, as Bochartus hath observed, they are never called simply orebim. Nor is their opinion better, who think Arabians to be here meant: for there were none thereabout; and Elias's lurking-place would soon have been discovered to Ahab, if merchants, or any other people that travelled that way, had been acquainted with it. We must therefore acknowledge a miraculous care which God took of Elijah, as all the ancients do, none excepted (see Bochartus, in his Hieroicoicon, par. ii., lib. ii., cap. 13).

Prof. Lee.—In 1 Kings xvii. 4, 6, some suppose Arabs to be meant. But this is both unnecessary and groundless. For a miracle must have been wrought in any case, and the text, as it now stands, will admit of nothing less. Besides, to have made known generally to the Arabs the place of the prophet's retirement, would have been to have entirely ruined its object. Aquila, Symm., Theod., LXX., here, καὶ οἱ κόρακες, κ.τ.λ. And so the ancient versions, except the Arabic, which possesses no authority.

Ken.—In my Second Dissertation on the Hebrew Text (p. 581), I observed, that the words of Jerom are, Orbim, accolæ villæ in finibus Arabum, Eliæ dederunt alimenta. And as the authority of this learned father is certainly great, with regard to places in or near Palestine; the best interpretation of this passage seems to be, that this food was brought to Elijah by the Orbim, the inhabitants of Oreb or Orbo, a small village near Arabia.

Dr. A. Clarke.—I have commanded the ravens to feed thee. It is contended that if we consider שָׂרִים, orebim, to signify ravens, we shall find any interpretation on this ground to be clogged with difficulties. I need mention but a few. The raven is an unclean bird, And these ye shall have in abomination among the fowls—every raven after his kind; Lev. xi. 13—15; that is, every species of this genus shall be considered by you unclean and abominable. Is it therefore likely that God would employ this most unclean bird to feed his prophet?

Besides, where could the ravens get any flesh that was not unclean? Carion is their food, and would God send anything of this kind to his prophet? Again: If the flesh was clean which God sent, where could ravens get it? Here must be at least three miracles: one, to bring from some table the flesh to the ravens; another, to induce the ravenous bird to give it up; and the third, to conquer its timidity towards man, so that it could come to the prophet without fear. Now, although God might employ a fowl that would naturally strive to prey on the flesh, and oblige it, contrary to its nature, to give it up; yet it is by no means likely that he would employ a bird that his own law had pronounced abominable. Again, he could not have employed this means without working a variety of miracles at the same time, in order to accomplish one simple end; and this is never God's method: his plan is ever to accomplish the greatest purposes by the simplest means.

The original word orebim has been considered by some as meaning merchants, persons occasionally trading through that country, whom God directed, by inspiration, to supply the prophet with food. To get a constant supply from such hands in an extraordinary way was miracle enough; it showed the superintendence of God, and that the hearts of all men are in his hands.

But in answer to this it is said, that the "original word never signifies merchants; and that the learned Bochart has proved this." I have carefully read over cap. 13, part ii., lib. 2, of the Hierozoicon of this author, where he discusses this subject; and think that he has never succeeded less than in his attempt to prove that ravens are meant in this passage. He allows that the Tyrian merchants are described by this periphrasis, עֲרָבִים מְכַשְׁכְּשֵׁי, the occupiers of thy merchandise, Ezek. xxvii. 27; and asserts that עֲרָבִים, per se, mercatores nusquam significat, "by itself, never signifies merchants." Now, with perfect deference to so great an authority, I assert that עֲרָבִים, the contracted form of עֲרָבִים, does signify merchants, both in Ezekiel xxvii. 9, and xxvii. 27, and that מְכַשְׁכְּשֵׁי signifies a place for merchandise, the market-place or bazaar, in Ezek. xxvii. 9, 13, 17, 19; as also the goods sold in such places, Ezek. xxvii. 33; and therefore that עֲרָבִים may, for aught proved to the contrary, signify merchants in the text.

As to Bochart's objection, that, the prophet being ordered to go to the brook Cherith, that he might lie hid, and the place of his retreat not be known, if any traders or merchants supplied his wants, they would most likely discover where he was, &c., I think there is no weight in it; for the men might be as well bound by the secret inspiration of God not to discover the place of his retreat, as they were to supply his wants; besides, they might have been of the number of those seven thousand men who had not bowed their knees to the image of Baal, and consequently would not inform Ahab and Jezebel of their prophet's hiding-place.

Some have supposed that the original means Arabians; but Bochart contends that there were no Arabians in that district: this is certainly more than he or any other man can prove. Colonies of Arabs, and hordes and families of the same people, have been widely scattered over different places for the purpose of temporal sojournment and trade; for they were a wandering people, and often to be found in different districts remote enough from the place of their birth. But, letting this pass merely for what it is worth, and feeling as I do the weight of the objections that may be brought against the supposition of ravens being the agents employed to feed the prophet, I would observe that there was a town or city of the name of Orbo, that was not far from the place where Elijah was commanded to hide himself. In Bereshith Rabba, a rabbinical comment on Genesis, we have these words, עֵר דִּיא בְּחוּמֵי בִיתְשָׁן וְשָׁמָּה, עֲרָבִים; "There is a town in the vicinity of Beth-shan (Scythopolis), and its name is Orbo." We may add to this from St. Jerome, Orbim, accolæ villæ in finibus Arabum, Eliæ dederunt alimenta; "The Orbim, inhabitants of a town in the confines of the Arabs, gave nourishment to Elijah." Now, I consider Jerome's testimony to be of great worth, because he spent several years in the Holy land, that he might acquire the most correct notion possible of the language and geography of the country, as well as of the customs and habits of the people, in order to his translating the sacred writings, and explaining them. Had there not been such a place in his time, he could not have written as above: and although in this place the common printed editions of the Vulgate have corvi, "crows or ravens;" yet in 2 Chron. xxi. 16, St. Jerome translates the same word עֲרָבִים, "the Arabians;" and the same in Neh. iv. 7; it is, therefore, most likely that the inhabitants of Oreb or Orbo, as mentioned above, furnished the aliment by which the prophet was sustained; and that they did this being specially moved thereto by the Spirit of the Lord. Add to all these testimonies that of the Arabic version, which considers the word as meaning a people, عَرَبِيْم, Orabim, and not ravens or fowls of any kind. In such a case this version is high authority.

Ver. 7.

וַיָּבֵי יְמֵי נִיבֶשׁ תַּחֲלֵ וְנִיבֶשׁ καὶ ἐγένετο μετ' ἡμέρας, καὶ ἐξηράνθη ὁ χαμάριος, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—7 And it came to pass after a while [Heb., at the end of days] that the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

Bp. Patrick.—After a while.] In the Hebrew it is, at the end of days, that is, of a year [so Pool]; as that phrase, I have shown, is often used.

Houb.—Post aliquod tempus. See notes on ver. 15.

Ver. 12.

וַתֹּאמֶר חַיִּיהָ וְהָאֵלֶּהֶם אֲמִישׁ לִי מָלֶכֶת וְנִיבֶשׁ

Au. Ver.—12 And she said, As the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it and die.

I have not a cake.

Houb.—סֶמֶךְ, subcinericius panis. Mirum est mulierem respondere, non sibi esse panem subcinericium, cum eum panem Elias non nominârit. Præterea Elias infra ver. 13, cibum ab eâ muliere postulans, utitur verbo עֵנָה, non verbo סֶמֶךְ, quod quidem ambigitur utrum sit Hebraicum; neque enim alibi recurrit, quàm Pa. xxxv. 16, ex mendo, ut ibi animadvertimus, et id, hoc loco, circulo superno Codices castigant. Germanam scripturam habuere Chaldæus et Syrus, qui convertunt, ille סֶמֶךְ, hic סֶמֶךְ, nilil: nempe legebant סֶמֶכָה, nilil. Arabs سَمَكَة, cibus, ex sententiâ potiùs, quàm ex ipso verbo, cum videret incommodum esse ut de pane subcinericio mulier respondeat, de quo verbum non fecerat Elias. . וְנִיבֶשׁ, et id comedemus, deficienter ac mendosè, pro וְנִיבֶשׁ; itaque id circulo notatur in Codicibus.

Two sticks.

Bp. Patrick.—By two sticks is meant a few: as two frequently signifies (Isaiah xvii. 6; Jer. iii. 14).

Ver. 15.

וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ

וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ וְנִיבֶשׁ

— καὶ ἔσθιεν αὐτὴ καὶ αὐτὸς καὶ τὰ τέκνα αὐτῆς.

Au. Ver.—15 And she went and did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat many days [Or, a full year].

Many days. [So Houb.]

Pool.—Many days, i. e., a long time, even above two years: see chap. xviii. 1. Heb. days, i. e., a full year; as ver. 7; namely, before the following event about her son happened, and the rest of the time of the famine after it.

Bp. Patrick.—Her house did eat many days.] Some by many days understand a full year; as it is in the margin. But it rather signifies two years: for one year was past before he came from the brook Cherith (see ver. 7). And therefore they lived upon this meal and oil two years more, till the end of the famine.

Houb.—סֶמֶךְ: Clericus, annum, ut solet, non dubitans hoc vocabulo nudè posito significari annum, quia sæpe id sibi videre visus est; neque idem vidit hoc loco, in quæ dumeta compellatur. Nam postquam suprâ ver. 7, convertit יָמִים כָּכָן, exactly anno, necessitas ei fuit statuere, Eliam fuisse à corvis anno toto nutritum prope torrentem Carith, cujus aquam bibebat Elias, donec torrens exaruisset. Ergò etiam illi statuendum fuit, non exaruisse torrentem, nisi post annum totum, eumque sine pluviis transactum; quod non facillè creditur de torrente in regione sito non parùm calente. Neque id satis. Nam hoc versu 15. Clericus accepit יָמִים, de anno ultimo famis, quæ quidem annorum fuit trium sexque mensium. Venit Elias ad mulierem de Sarepta proximè ante annum eum, in quo desiit fames. Fuerat antè in torrente Carith annum unum; ergò, ex Clerico, duo tantùm anni ultimi famis transacti sunt, dùm hæc evenerunt, quæ hic narrantur; ex quo sequitur, annum jam unum famis sexque menses præterisse, antequàm Elias in torrente Carith habitaret. Sed torrens non exaruit, ex Clerico, nisi postquam Elias annum totum ibi habitasset; ergo aquæ torrentis, ex eodem Clerico non exaruerint, nisi post annos duos sexque menses siccitatis: nam fames fuit annorum trium cum dimidio. Ne ipse quidem Clericus hæc persuadere vellet, si animo reputasset. Sed Lector ex hoc loco intelligere potest, quàm inconsideratè novi Interpretes vocabulum יָמִים, annum, credant esse. Nam eos à tali interpretatione detertere hic locus debuerat, cùm ex eà sequatur falsa temporum notatio. Porro nos, multos dies, addito multos, ex sententiâ, et perspicuitati servientes. Nam Latinè dies, sine adjuncto, nihil significaret.

Ver. 18.

Au. Ver.—18 And she said unto Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?

Pool.—To remembrance; either, 1. To my remembrance; that I should by this dreadful judgment be brought to the knowledge and remembrance of my sins, which have procured it. Or rather, 2. To God's remembrance; for God is oft said in Scripture to remember sins, when he punisheth them; and to forget them, when he spares the sinner. See 2 Sam. xvi. 10. Have I, instead of the blessing which I expected from thy presence, met with a curse?

Ver. 19.

A loft. See notes on Judg. iii. 20, p. 181.

Bp. Patrick.—A loft.] The LXX, translate it ὑπερφῶν, "an upper room:" which he had to himself for his study, meditation, and prayer.

Au. Ver.—24 And the woman said to Elijah, Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth.

Is truth.

Pool.—That the word of the Lord in thy mouth is truth; that the God whom thou professest is the true God, and the doctrine and religion which thou teachest is the only true religion.

Ged., Booth.—And that the word of Jehovah is truly in thy mouth.

Houb.—Et Dominum per os tuum loqui veritatem.

CHAP. XVIII. 1.

Au. Ver.—And it came to pass after many days, that the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth.

Pool.—In the third year; either, 1. From the time when he went to hide himself by the brook Cherith; six months before which time the famine might begin, though it was not yet come to extremity. And so this being in or towards the end of the third year, it makes up these three years and six months, James v. 17. Or, 2. From the time of his going to Sarepta, which probably was a year after the famine begun; see on chap. xvii. 7; and so this might be in the middle of the third year, which also makes up the three years and six months.

Dr. A. Clarke.—1 After many days—in the third year.] We learn from our Lord, Luke iv. 25, that the drought which brought on the famine in Israel lasted three years and six months. St. James v. 17, gives it the same duration. Probably Elijah spent six months at the brook Cherith, and three years with the widow at Sarepta.

I will send rain upon the earth.] The word haadamah should be translated the ground or the land, as it is probable that this drought did not extend beyond the land of Judea.

Au. Ver.—10 As the Lord thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee: and when they said, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

Bp. Patrick.—10 There is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not sent to seek thee.] That is, to all the countries thereabout, with whom he was in league.

He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation.] These words incline me to think, that he sought him only throughout all his dominions; through every tribe, which is called a nation; and every government, which is called a kingdom. For how could he take an oath of any but his own subjects? It may be said, indeed, that there might be such compacts between him and the Moabites, Edomites, Ammonites, and other neighbouring nations, that they should harbour none of his rebellious subjects: and if they required it, they should swear they knew of none in their country. But such a treaty is so unusual, that I see no reason to suppose it.

Ver. 18.

Bp. Patrick.—The prophets of the groves.] By the prophets of the groves (as we translate it), Mr. Selden understands the prophets of Astarte, the great goddess of the Zidonians; which he proves by comparing many places of scripture together (L. de Diis Syris, Syntag. ii., cap. 3), Maimonides hath a peculiar notion, that the prophets of Baal, and of the groves, were such as had drunk in the opinion of the ancient Zabii; who made images to receive the influences of the stars; golden ones for the sun, and silver ones for the moon, &c., which gave to men the gift of prophecy, and showed what was good for them. The same they said of trees; which were some under the influence of one star, some under the influence of another; and were planted in their names, and worshipped after several manners, and infused special virtues into the trees, and made men prophets. This he avers he found expressly in their books (More Nevochim, par. iii., cap. 29).

Au. Ver.—21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and said, How long halt ye between two opinions [or, thoughts]? if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered him not a word.

Bishop Patrick.—Halt ye between two opinions.

Parkhurst.—ספֿר.] In general, to split, divide, rive. The LXX have given nearly the idea, Isa. ii. 21, by rendering the N. ספֿר, σχισμας, clefs, from σχίζω to rend, cleave.

I. In Hiph. To split, rive, as a branch from a tree, occ. Isa. x. 33; where Vulg. confringet, shall break.

II. As a N. masc. plur. in Reg. ספֿר the branches of a tree, which divide off from its body. Occ. Isa. xvii. 6; xxvii. 10. And so with Mr. Bate we may understand ספֿר,

1 Kings xviii. 21, how long halt or hop ye upon two boughs [so Horsley, Clarke]? i. e., like birds hopping backwards and forwards from one bough to the other, without settling. It does not appear that the N. ever signifies thoughts or opinions, as we render it. As a N. fem. plur. in Reg. ספֿר the same. occ. Ezek. xxxi. 6, 8.

Gesen.—ספֿר. 1. pp. to leap, to dance.

Au. Ver.—26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, hear us [or, answer]. But there was no voice, nor any that answered [or, heard]. And they leaped upon the altar [or, leaped up and down at the altar] which was made.

Pool.—Upon the altar; or, over the altar; which might easily be done, the altar being low, and suddenly made for the present use. Or rather, beside (as the Hebrew (al) oft signifies) the altar; or, before it.

Which was made, Heb., which he made; either, first, Elijah; which some think was already made, though the making of it be not mentioned till afterwards, ver. 31, and that it was their design, by leaping upon his altar, to overthrow it. Or rather, secondly, Ahab on their behalf; or any other person; that being only a Hebraism, the third person active being put for the passive verb, as our translators well render it.

Gesen.—פָּסַח. Piel to leap, to dance; so the priests of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 26 they danced at (around) the altar which was made; Sept. διέτρεχον, Targ. סחחן insaniebant, which Kimchi explains, "they danced after their manner." Dancing was customary at some sacrifices; see 2 Sam. vi. 16.

Professor Lee.—פָּסַח. Pih. pres. פָּסַח. Probably, leaped about [so Patrick, Clarke, Dathe, Ged., Booth.], in a frantic manner, on or by the altar; this being, apparently, their manner of expressing their earnestness in calling upon Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 26.

Houb.—Interea ad altare, quod fecerant, inambulabant.

26 אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה : Lege, אֲשֶׁר עָשָׂה, quod fecerant; sic lego in Codice uno Orat. sicque omnes veteres, præter unum Chaldæum, cui Judæi Scribæ sæpe obtemperant, ut menda transcribant. Cæterum verbum פָּסַח convertimus, inambulabant, non autem saltabant, ut recentiores; is enim significatus nullam habet Sacris ex Codicibus autoritatem. Præterea vix credibile est tot prophetas Baal potuisse altare, quod fecerant, saltu transilire, ut plerique putant. Talia enim altaria conspici longo intervallo poterant, atque adeo altitudinem habebant talem, qualis hominis saltum superabat.

Maurer.—[פָּסַח.] Contemtim utitur scriptor hoc verbo de saltu sacrificulorum Baalis.

Ver. 27.

וַיִּהְיֶה בְּצִהְרֵי יוֹחֵל בָּתָם אֱלֹהֵהוּ וַיֹּאמֶר קְרָאָה בְּהוֹל־צִדּוֹל קְרָאֵלֵהֶם אָחָא פִּי־שִׁיחַ וּכְרָשִׁיב לוֹ וּכְיִי־רָחָו לוֹ אֲבִלִי יִשְׁעֵן הָאָה וַיִּהְיֶה :

καὶ ἐγένετο μεσημβρία, καὶ ἐμυκτήρισεν αὐτοὺς Ἡλίου ὁ Θεοβίτης, καὶ εἶπεν, ἐπικαλείσθε ἐν φωνῇ μεγάλῃ, ὅτι θεὸς ἐστίν, ὅτι ἀδολεσχία αὐτῷ ἐστί, καὶ ἅμα μὴ ποτε χρηματίζει αὐτὸς, ἢ μὴ ποτε καθέυδει αὐτὸς, καὶ ἐξαναστήσεται.

Au. Ver.—27 And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud [Heb., with a great voice]: for he is a god; either he is talking [or, he meditateth], or he is pursuing [Heb., hath a pursuit], or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

For he is a god.

Dr. A. Clarke.—He is the supreme God, you worship him as such, he must needs be such, and no doubt jealous of his own honour and the credit of his votaries! A strong irony.

Either he is talking, or he is pursuing.

Bp. Horsley.—Rather, either he is in deep thought, or he is absent. — absent, שָׁי, absent in thought.

Gesen.—I. פָּסַח m. (r. פָּסַח I to talk) 1. Speech, discourse, 1 Kings ix. 11. So perh. in irony of Baal, 1 Kings xviii. 27, וַיִּהְיֶה פָּסַח he is talking with some one; or perh. he is meditating, is in a brown study, so that he does not hear; see the root lett. c. [to talk with oneself, i. e., to meditate]. The first is more certain.

פָּסַח m. (r. פָּסַח) a withdrawing; 1 Kings xviii. 27 וַיִּהְיֶה פָּסַח he has withdrawn himself, sc. into his private apartments.

Prof. Lee.—פָּסַח. Shooting forth, uttering. (a) A plant, bush. (b) Speech, message, business. (c) A complaint. (d) Sorrow. (b) 1 Kings xviii. 27; 2 Kings ix. 11.

פָּסַח. Probably Retirement, 1 K. xviii. 27. Vulg. in diversorio est.

Houb.—...וְהָיָה אֲרִיאָה : Arias, aut qui insectio ei, quem cæteri novi Interpretes sequuntur, quasi ex radice פָּסַח, attingere; σήμερον ἐν πυρὶ, καὶ γνώτωσαν πᾶς ὁ λαὸς οὗτος, ὅτι σὺ εἶ κύριος ὁ θεὸς Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ ἐγὼ δοῦλός σου, καὶ διὰ σέ πεποίηκα τὰ ἔργα ταῦτα. 37 ἐπάκουσόν μου κύριε, ἐπάκουσόν μου, καὶ γνώτω ὁ λαὸς οὗτος, ὅτι σὺ εἶ κύριος ὁ θεός, καὶ σὺ ἔστρεψας τὴν καρδίαν τοῦ λαοῦ τούτου ὀπίσω.

Au. Ver.—36 And it came to pass at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel, and that I am thy servant, and that I have done all these things at thy word.

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me; that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again.

Ged.—36 And said. LXX read “and called toward the heavens.”

Let it be known. LXX read, Hear me, O LORD, hear me, to-day, by fire: let all this people know, that thou art the LORD, the God of Israel; and that I, thy minister, have, through thee, done all these things: Hear me, O LORD! hear me: and let this people know that thou art the LORD-GOD, who hath converted the hearts of this people. Such is the reading and arrangement of the LXX, at least, of equal probability with the present.

Pool.—That thou hast turned their heart: that they may feel so powerful and sudden a change in their hearts, that they may know it is thy work, and the effect of thy grace to them, and in them. Or, when thou hast turned, &c., or, because thou, &c. So the particle vau is oft used; and the sense is, That they may know thee to be the true God, by the effects of thy Divine power, in converting their hearts, and that in so miraculous a way, and in answer to my prayers.

Au. Ver.—43 And he said, Go again seven times.

44 And it came to pass at the seventh time, &c.

Ged.—And Elias [LXX] said, Go again seven times. 44 So the servant went again seven times [LXX]. And it came to pass at the seventh time, &c.

Houb.—44 בשבעה, septies. Quinque Codices בשבעה, plenè.

Au. Ver.—45 And it came to pass in the meanwhile, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

And it came to pass in the meanwhile. So Gesen.

Bp. Horsley.—Rather, And it came to pass that in every quarter the skies grew black [with] clouds and wind. Houbigant proposes a transposition of the words, which seems unnecessary.

Gesen.—ח 3 Partic. of time, now; עד־הַנִּיחַ until now, hitherto, Ex. vii. 16; Joshua xvii. 14. עד־הַנִּיחַ till now and till then, in the meantime, meanwhile, 1 Kings xviii. 45.

Houb.—45 Deinde extiterunt undique nubes ac venti, cælumque obscuratum est, et plurimi imbres extiterunt. Ahab, conscenso curru, ad Jezrahel iter fecit.

45 וַיְהִי עַד כִּהְיֶה הָעָרָב, et fuit usque huc et usque illuc. Hæc Arias, nihil dicens; nec cæteri Intt. animadvertère ordinem fuisse turbatum. Nam duo verba וַיְהִי עַד, nubes et ventus, nihil habent, ubi sunt, quod regant, aut à quo regantur. Nimirùm, postquàm dictum est, cæli obscurati sunt, non jam pertinere possunt nubes et ventus ad verbum וַיְהִי, quod in versu primum est. Verus ordo est, וַיְהִי עַד כִּהְיֶה הָעָרָב, et fuerunt nubes et ventus, ut sequatur והַשְׁמַיִם הִתְמַלְּוּ עָבִים, et cæli obscurati sunt. Veteres alii aliud dicunt, quia in suâ scripturâ non potuere acquiescere. Non vituperabat Clericus eos, qui convertunt עַד כִּהְיֶה הָעָרָב, interim quanquam id sine exemplo est.

Maurer.—עד־הַנִּיחַ] liberius redde: dum manum huc et illuc vertas h. e. citius quam manum vertas. “Scriptor divinus id agit ut indicet, brevissimo interjecto temporis spatio imbrem deciderisse; quæ quidem illarum particularum interpretatio e gestu manum cito huc et illuc vertentis petenda videtur; nigruit cælum nubibus et vento, dum manum vertas s. citius quam manum vertas.” Schäfer

(in programm. 1826. Onoldini ed. p. 14). cf. Lutheri; "und ehe man zusahe, ward der Himmel schwarz von Wolken un Wind." Consentit Fäsi.

And withal how he had slain.

And when he saw that, he arose.

Houb., Schulz, Dathe, Pilkington, Horsley, Ged., Booth.—And he was afraid [LXX, Syr., Vulg., 4 Heb., and 1 Chald. MSS.], and arose.

Au. Ver.—But he himself went a day's journey into the wilderness, and came and sat down under a juniper-tree: and he requested for himself [Heb., for his life] that he might die; and said, It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for I am not better than my fathers.

A juniper-tree.

Geen.—וַיָּבֵא m. 1 Kings xix. 4, (but fem. in Cheth.) plur. וַיָּבֵא, 1 Kings xix. 4, 5; Job. xxx. 4; Psalm cxx. 4; i.q. Arab. وَاْتَمَّ, collect. وَاْتَمَّ, genista, broom [so Prof.

On the coals.

Bp. Patrick.—It should be translated "upon hot stones," as Bochartus shows in his Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 33.

Geesen.—[רִצְפִּים to range stones artificially, e. g., in a pavement or inlaid work, to checker; hence רִצְפִּים m. 1 a stone which is heated in order to roast meat or bake bread upon it. 1 Kings xix. 6, וְרִצְפִּים a cake baked on hot stones. Au. Ver.—9 And he came thither unto a cave; and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, What doest thou here, Elijah?

10 And he said, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left; and they seek my life to take it away.

11 And he said, Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the LORD. And, behold, the LORD passed by, and a great and strong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake;

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a still small voice.

13 And it was so, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and stood in the entering in of the cave. And, behold, there came a voice unto him, and said, What doest thou here, Elijah?

9, 11 What doest thou here, Elijah? &c. 11 And he said.

Bp. Horsley.—9—11 —What doest—said. All this seems to be the conversation between God and the prophet, related in its proper place in the 13th and 14th verses, and by some error of the transcribers anticipated here. The word of Jehovah comes to the prophet in the cave, bids him go forth out of the cave, and gives him certain signs by which he is to be advertised of the presence of Jehovah.

11, 12 The Lord passed by—rent—brake in pieces, &c. [so Pool, Patrick, Dathe].

Bp. Horsley.—Rather, “passeth by—rendeth—breaketh in pieces.” These presents denote instant futurity. Jam mox transiturus est Jehovah [so Houb., Ged.].

Ged.—11 It was then said to him: “Go forth, and stand upon the mountain to meet the LORD: and, lo; while the LORD is about to pass, a great and mighty wind shall precede him; rending the mountains, and shivering the rocks: but the LORD will not be in the wind. The wind will be followed by an earthquake: but the LORD will not be in the earthquake. 12 The earthquake will be followed by lightning: but the LORD will not be in the lightning. But, after the lightning, there will be heard a calm, gentle voice; and there will the LORD be” [some copies of the LXX. Booth., And there was Jehovah].

I have, with the Greek and Arabic translators, made the description a part of the angel's speech; not a part of the historian's narrative.

Houb.—11 Tum ei dictum est; egredere, et sta in monte coram Domino; nam Dominus mox transiturus est. Erit autem ante Dominum ventus vehemens, qui vi magna quatiet montes, et franget scopulos, sed non erit in vento Dominus. Erit, post ventum, terræ motus, neque erit in terræ motu Dominus. 12 Erit, post terræ motum, ignis, neque erit in igne Dominus; sed erit, post ignem, sibilus auræ tenuis, ibique erit Dominus.

11 et 12 נַח וַיֵּרָא מִן הַמָּוֶה: Nos, nam Dominus mox transiturus est. Ita Græci Intt. ἰδοὺ παρελεύσεται κύριος, ecce transibit Dominus. Non recte plerosque convertere, ecce transivit... in Præterito tempore, ex eo probatur, quod Dei vocem Elias non ante audierit advenientem, quam spelunca egrederetur, ejusque in limine staret; quod quidem Eliam fecisse nondum dictum est, sed tantum postea narratur. Itaque hi duo versus 11 et 12 angeli sunt cum Eliâ loquentis, non autem sacri scriptoris Dei transitum, ut jam factum, narrantis. Maxime observandum, fuisse tunc Eliam in monte Horeb, quo, Deo jubente, venerat. Olim extiterant in monte Horeb venti et ignes et terræ motus, quibus Deus præsentiam suam in veteri lege manifestarat. Nunc significat Eliæ angelus, non sic olim fore; neque illum Deum, quem Elias cæterique veri Israelitæ expectabant, mediis ignibus, ventis et terræ motibus adfuturum, sed ejus adventum lenis auræ susurro similem futurum, talemque, qualem posthac Isaias propheta exhibebat, cum diceret (xlii. 3) arundinem quassatam non confringet, et linum fumigans non extinguet. Porro in fine versus 12 hæc edimus, ibi erit Dominus, ex Codice Alex. in quo legitur ἐκεῖ κύριος, et ibi Dominus. Nisi hæc diceret angelus, non doceretur Elias, quo signo Deum adesse cognosceret. Cur hæc verba נַח וַיֵּרָא מִן הַמָּוֶה, et erit ibi Do-

Pool.—I have left, or, I have reserved to myself; I have by my grace kept from the common contagion. Or, I will reserve, from the slaughters last mentioned, and from Jezebel's rage. Seven thousand; either definitely so many; or rather, indefinitely, for many thousands; the number of seven being oft used for a great number, as Leviticus xxvi. 18; Psalm xii. 6; Micah v. 5; Zech. iii. 9; Luke xvii. 4. For it is altogether improbable that all the Israelites except seven thousand did worship Baal; except Baal be here synecdochically put for all their idols, and the calves among others.

Ged.—Seven thousand men, &c.

Kissed him.

Pilkington's Remarks.—The word נשק, signified, either to kiss, or, to be subject to. It is generally rendered by φιλεω and καταφιλεω in the LXX: but they saw the necessity of rendering it, Gen. xli. 40. "And to thy word shall all my people be subject." And they have rendered, 1 Kings xix. 18, "Every mouth that hath not worshipped Baal;" instead of kissed him, as it is in our and other versions. Psalm ii. 12, "Kiss the son, lest he be angry, and ye perish," must imply a direction to submission and obedience; and consequently, the word should be here rendered, obey, or be subject to; as kiss cannot so properly be used, to express this metaphorically in our language. Most of the ancient versions have it receive instruction; and, the commentators have supposed, that there was a various reading in the former Hebrew MSS., but I see no sufficient reason to support such a conjecture.

Ver. 20.

וַיֵּאמֶר לוֹ לֵךְ שׁוּב בִּי קָדָה עֲשֵׂיתִי לָךְ׃

— kai elpen 'Hliou, anastrefe, sti pe-poiha soi.

Au. Ver.—20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, Go back again [Heb., Go return]: for what have I done to thee?

Pool.—And said; or, but he said; or, yet he said. Let me kiss my father and my mother, i. e., bid them farewell, by the usual ceremony. Go back again, and take thy leave of them, as thou desirest, and then return to me again. What have I done to thee? either, first, To hinder thee from performing that office. That employment to which I have called thee doth not require an alienation of thy heart from thy parents, nor the total neglect of them. Or, secondly, To make such a change in thee, that thou shouldst be willing to forsake thy parents, and lands, and all, and desire only this liberty to go and bid them farewell, that thou mayest follow me. Whence comes this marvellous change? It is not from me, who did only throw my mantle over thee; but from a higher power, even from God's Spirit, which hath changed thy heart, and consecrated thee to thy prophetic office; which therefore it concerns thee vigorously to execute, and wholly to devote thyself to it.

Au. Ver.—21 And he returned back from him and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them and boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose and went after Elijah and ministered unto him.

CHAP. XX. 1.

Au. Ver.—And Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horses, and chariots: and he went up and besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

Ged. and Booth. place this chapter after chap. xx. “I follow the order of Sept., which, I am convinced, is the true one. This, I think, every attentive reader will himself perceive on comparing the two arrangements.”—Ged.

Benhadad.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Ben-hadad] Several MSS., and some early printed editions, have Ben-hadar, or, the son of Hadar, as the Septuagint. He is supposed to be the same whom Asa stirred up against the king of Israel, chap. xv. 18; or, as others, his son or grandson.

He went up and besieged Samaria.

Bp. Patrick.—He did not actually besiege it; for his army was routed before he could do it. Therefore the sense is, “he went up to besiege Samaria,” and assault it. Which is like that speech, Gen. xxviii. 10, “Jacob went out from Beer-sheba and went to Haran.” Which Rasi interprets, “He went out to go to Haran.” For it presently follows, that God appeared to him in the way.

Au. Ver.—5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is pleasant [Heb., desirable] in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

Pool.—Although I did before demand not only the dominion of thy treasures, and wives, and children, as thou mayst seem to understand me, but also the propriety and actual possession of them, wherewith I would then have been contented.

6 Yet now I will not accept of those terms, but, together with thy royal treasures, I expect all the treasures of thy servants or subjects; nor will I wait till thou deliver them to me, but I will send my servants into the city, and they shall have free liberty and power to search out and take away all which they desire, and this to prevent fraud and delay.

Bp. Horsley.—Chap. xx. 5, 6. Although I—thou shalt deliver—Yet I will send, &c. Thou shalt deliver. He had sent no such message. His former message was simply the claim of the lord paramount. Encouraged by Ahab's ready submission, he now attempts a tyrannical exaction, artfully giving the sense of a demand to his former message, and reproaching Ahab with non-compliance. I am inclined to suspect that the word אֵל has been lost between וְ and וְהָאֵל, at the end of the 5th verse, "inasmuch as I sent unto thee, saying, Thy silver and thy gold, and thy wives and thy children are mine, and thou hast not given up. 9 Assuredly, therefore, I will send," &c.

Ged.—5 The message which I sent to you was, to deliver up to me your silver and your gold, and your wives, and your children: I, therefore, will, to-morrow about this time, send my servants [so Booth]; that they may search thine house and the houses of thy servants: when, whatsoever is the most desirable in thine eyes, they shall lay hands on, and take away.

Thine eyes. Sept., Syr., Vulg. read their, and this seems the more natural reading. So Booth.

Au. Ver.—7 Then the king of Israel called all the elders of the land, and said, Mark, I pray you, and see how this man seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I denied him not [Heb., I kept not back from him].

Ged.—7 On this the king of Israel convoked all the elders of the land, and said to them [Syr., Mark, I pray you, and see how that man seeketh mischief: although, when he sent to me for my wives and for my children, and for my silver and for my gold, I gave him no refusal.

Ver. 10.

Au. Ver.—10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, The gods do so unto me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me [Heb., are at my feet].

Bp. Patrick.—He wishes he may perish, if he did not bring such an army against the king of Israel, that if every soldier in it should take a handful of his country, nothing of it would be left remaining. Others explain it thus: I will not leave a bit of Samaria standing. But the other is most natural; and this is included in it.

Ver. 11.

Au. Ver.—12 And it came to pass when Ben-hadad heard this message [Heb., word], as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions [or, tents], that he said unto his servants, Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array [or, Place the engines: and they placed engines] against the city.

Set yourselves in array, &c. So Gesen. See notes on 1 Sam. xv. 2, p. 407.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Set yourselves in array.] The original word, שִׁמּוּ simu, which we translate by this long periphrasis, is probably a military term for Begin the attack, Invest the city, Every man to his post, or some such like expression.

Houb.—12 שִׁמּוּ: Nos, appropinquate, ex significatu Arabico. Nam Arabicè שִׁמּוּ vel שִׁמַּס habet, appropinquare homini et hosti in conspectum. Au. Ver.—14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by the young men [or, servants] of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall order [Heb., bind, or, tie] the battle? And he answered, Thou.

Pool.—By the young men of the princes of the provinces; not by old and experienced soldiers, but by those young men; either the sons of the princes and great men of the land, who were generally fled thither for safety; or their pages or servants that used to attend upon them, who are bred up delicately, and seem unfit for the business.

Bp. Patrick.—The "princes of the provinces" were the governors of the several provinces, into which the kingdom was divided. And their young men seem to signify their servants, or their pages (as we speak), that waited on them. As much as to say, Not by old experienced soldiers, but by youths; who, perhaps, had never seen a fight, but had always lived at court.

Ged.—The chiefs of provinces; who were then probably at Samaria. The Syriac and Arabic translators, with Symmachus, have given a different version: and render the chiefs, or, principal persons in the city. The young men here mentioned composed their retinues; and were no doubt the flower of the youth of their respective provinces.

Gesen.—In some passages נַעַר seems rather a name of condition, and denotes servant, like the Greek παῖς. Germ. Bursche, Junge, Engl. boy; Gen. xxxvii. 2 וַיֵּאמֶר נַעַר he was servant with the sons of Bilhah, i. e., he was herdsman's boy, shepherd's boy. 2 Kings iv. 12; v. 20; viii. 4; Ex. xxxiii. 11, al. Also of common soldiers, Germ. die Burschen, Engl. boys, men; 1 Kings xx. 14, 15; xvii. 19; 2 Kings xix. 6. Seq.

Like two little flocks of kids.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew word chasiph is nowhere found but in this place; which Kimchi and others translate a little flock. But there is no need to add the word little; for the flocks of goats are always small; never so great as those of sheep. For they love to ramble, and are scattered up and down as Bochartus observes, who translates these words, two flocks of young kids; denoting their contemptible number, and that they were weak, feeble, and timorous, like those fugacious creatures, as he speaks, Hierozoicon, par. i. lib. ii. cap. 51.

Au. Ver.—30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad fled, and came into the city, into an inner chamber [or, from chamber to chamber]. Heb., into a chamber within a chamber, ch. xxii. 25].

Pool.—The wall, or, the walls, (the singular number for the plural, than which nothing more frequent,) of the city; or of some great castle or fort in or near the city, in which they were now fortifying themselves; or of some part of the city where they lay. Which might possibly happen through natural causes: but most probably was effected by the mighty power of God, then sending some sudden earthquake, or violent storm of wind, which threw down the wall, or walls, upon them; or doing this by the ministry of angels. For if ever miracle was to be wrought, now seems to have been the proper time and season for it; when the blasphemous Syrians denied the sovereign and infinite power of God, and thereby in some sort obliged him, for his own honour, to give a proof of it; and to show that he was the God of the plains as well as of the mountains, and that he could as effectually destroy them in their strongest holds as in the open fields, and make the very walls, to whose strength they trusted for their defence, to be the instruments of their ruin. But it may be further observed, that it is not said that all these were killed by the fall of this wall; but only that the wall fell upon them, killing some, and wounding others, as is usual in those cases. Nor is it necessary that the wall should fall upon every individual person; but it is sufficient to justify this phrase, if it fell upon the main body of them; for the words in the Hebrew run thus, the wall fell upon twenty-seven thousand (not of the men that are left as we render it, but) which were left of that great army. Into the city; either, 1 Out of the fields as the rest of his army did; which is distinctly and particularly noted of him, because he was the most eminent person in it, and the head of it. Compare the title of Psal. xviii. Or, 2 At and from the noise and report of that terrible fall of the wall, or walls; which possibly might be in the outside or suburbs of the city; from whence he fled further into the city. Into an inner chamber: or, a chamber within a chamber.

Ken.—A WALL fell upon twenty-seven thousand men. If this passage will fairly admit any other construction, such construction will be readily accepted. The alteration, which I shall here offer, is founded on this—that חומה murus becomes a word very different in sense; when it is read without the vau, on the authority of 18 Heb. MSS., and the three first editions. Now the Heb. noun חמה, from חם, Castel explains by calor and sol: in Chaldee, by fervor, æstus, calor solaris: and in Arabic, by æstus meridiei, vehementia caloris, nomen venti. And the same noun, from חם, he explains by excandescencia, furor, venenum. These renderings all concurring to establish the sense of a burning Wind, eminently blasting and destructive; I shall now cite some other sacred passages, in which such a wind is mentioned; and then subjoin a few remarks. We read in Job xxvii. 21, the east wind carrieth him away: where the word קדם is καυσων in the Greek version, and in the Vulgat ventus urens. In Ezech. xix. 12, she was plucked up בדמה, she was cast down to the ground, and the east wind dried up her fruit, her strong rods were withered, the fire consumed them. Hosea (xiii. 15) mentions the desolation brought on by an east wind, the wind of the Lord. What in Amos (iv. 9) is I have smitten you with blasting, is in the Vulg. in vento vehemente; in the Syr. Lat. vento calido. Let us now apply ourselves to the history, in 1 Kings chap. xx. When Ben-hadad, king of Syria, was besieging Samaria the second time; the children of Israel slew of the Syrians one hundred thousand footmen in one day; and it follows, that when the rest of the army fled to Aphek, twenty-seven thousand of the men that were left were suddenly destroyed by הרומה, or החמה, a burning wind. That such is the true interpretation, will appear more clearly if we compare the destruction of Ben-hadad's army with that of Sennacherib, whose sentence is that God would send upon him a BLAST, רוח ruach, a wind; doubtless, such a wind as would be suddenly destructive. The event is said to be that in the night one hundred and eighty-five thousand Assyrians were smitten by the angel of the Lord, 2 Kings xix. 7, 35. The connexion of this sentence with this execution of it is given by the Psalmist; who says (civ. 4) God maketh his angels winds, or maketh רוחות THE WINDS his angels, i. e., messengers, for the performance of his will. In a note on Psalm xi. 6, Prof. Michaelis has these words, Ventus Zilgaphoth pestilens Euris est. Orientalibus notissimus qui obvia quævis necat. And Le Clerc says—Vox (kadm) orientalem ventum sonat, et quasi ventus adurens describitur.—Thevenotius memorat, anno 1658 und nocte fuisse occisa καυσων viginta millia hominum.—Again: Ventus calidus et urens vocatur in Oriente Samiel: anno 1665 (ait Thevenot.) interierunt 4000 homines, hoc vento adflati. See on Gen xli. 6; and Job. xxvii. 21. Upon the whole, I conclude, that, as Thevenot has mentioned two great multitudes destroyed by this burning wind, so has holy Scripture recorded the destruction of two much greater multitudes by a similar cause: and therefore, that we may translate the words in question thus—But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city: and a (OR THE, so Bp. Horsley) BURNING WIND fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left.

Pool.—Did hastily catch it: or, they took that word for a good token, and made haste and snatched it (i. e., that word) from him,
i. e., from his mouth; they repeated the word again, to try whether the king would own it, or it only dropped casually from him: or made haste to know whether it was from him, i. e., whether he spoke this from his heart, or only in dissimulation or design; for it seemed too good news to be true. *Thy that he inquired after, ver. 32.

Au. Ver.—34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant.

So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

Bp. Patrick.—The cities, which my father took from thy father, I will restore.] The word Ben-hadad not being in the Hebrew, Osiander and some others think that Ahab, who was so kind as to take him up into his chariot, made this speech to him when he came there, that he would not only give him his life, but his kingdom also, which he had now power to take from him; and be so far from diminishing his power, that he would restore all that had been taken from him by his father. Which senseless kindness was the thing that provoked God to pronounce that heavy doom upon him, ver. 42. But the next words do not well agree with this; therefore I take these to be Ben-hadad's words to Ahab [so most commentators].

Pool.—The cities which my father took from thy father; either, 1. From Baasha, chap. xv. 20, whom he calls Ahab's father, because he was his legal father, i.e., his predecessor. Or, 2. From Omri; in whose time, it seems, he made a successful invasion into the land of Israel, and took some more of the cities, and Aphek amongst the rest, though it be not elsewhere recorded in Scripture. Thou shalt make streets, or markets, &c., places where thou mayest either receive the tribute which I promise to pay thee, or exercise judicature upon my subjects in case of their refusal; or outlets (as the LXX render it) in or into Damascus, i.e., some strong fort near Damascus, which might curb the kings of Damascus, and keep them from attempting any other invasion into the land of Israel.

Bp. Patrick.—Some think by streets he means market-places, where commodities were sold, the toll of which should belong to Ahab. Others think he means "courts of judgment," where he should maintain a jurisdiction over Ben-hadad's subjects: others, that we now call a piazza, of which Ahab should receive the rents. But commonly interpreters think he means fortifications, whereby he might bridle the chief city of the kingdom of Syria; that they might not make new irruptions into the land of Israel: citadels, as we now speak, to keep them in awe, and to be a check to them, if they attempted anything destructive to the Israelites. Yet, after all, Gotf. Vallandus hath said a great deal to prove that the Hebrew word signifies palaces, which he being allowed to build, was a great token of subjection. We do not read of any such things that were built by the Syrian kings in Samaria: nor of any cities they took from the Israelites: unless those taken from Baasha (xv. 20), who was not Ahab's father.

Ged.—Outlets. So I render the word which is translated streets in our common version. Those outlets were, most probably, for pasturage: and the English word is a literal translation of the Hebrew.

Prof. Lee.—חַלְצוֹתָי, open places (not unlike our squares perhaps) thou shalt appoint (make) for thyself, 1 Kings xx. 34.

Gesen.—34 חַלְצוֹתָי, plateas fac tibi Damasci, sicut fecit pater meus Samariae, exstrue tibi domos integrasque plateas in urbe mea regia tanquam in proprio solo. (Al. fac tibi fora rerum venalium, unde vestigalia accipias: sed חַלְצוֹתָי distinguitur a חַלְצוֹת Prov. vii. 12. Grotius intelligit munitiones et præsidia militaria in agro Damasceno condenda, invito linguae usu: alii pascua, sed vix dicas: לַחֲצוֹתָי facere sibi pascua, pro: uti pascuis, præsertim quum חַלְצוֹת non tam pascua significet, quam deserta.)

Houb.—34 חַלְצוֹת: Legendum חַלְצוֹת, et plateas, in quibus esset præsidium hominum armatorum; vel, si mavis, vicos, ita ut vicos suos Damasci habiturus esset rex Israel. Græci Intt. ἔξοδους, exilus, ex scriptura חַלְצוֹת, minus bona. ... וְאִי, ego autem. Nos addimus, cui Achab; nam hæc, quæ sequuntur loquitur Achab. Non dubium, quin omissum fuerit, וְאִי, et dixit, ante וְאִי, quo verbo significetur transire à Benadad ad Achab sermonem.

Maurer.—חַלְצוֹת, ni fallor, pascua sunt, חַלְצוֹת vero de regno intelligendum videtur æque ac חַלְצוֹת. [חַלְצוֹת] inquit Achabus. חַלְצוֹת justo foedere facto. Alii, in his Dathius: his pacis conditionibus, cui interpretationi minus favent quæ sequuntur.

Ver. 38.

וְנָלַךְ הַנֶּבִּיאַת וַיַּעֲלֶה לְפָנָיו אֶת-הַחֲרָדִית וַיַּתְּחֶהּ עַל-עֵינָיו :

καὶ ἐπορεύθη ὁ προφῆτης καὶ ἔστη τῷ βασιλεῖ Ἰσραὴλ ἐπὶ τῆς ὁδοῦ, καὶ κατεδήσατο ἐν τελαμῶνι τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ.

Au. Ver.—38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

VOL. II.

Pool.—With ashes; whereby he changed the colour of it. Or, with a veil, or cloth, or band, (as the Hebrew doctors understand the word,) whereby he might seem to have bound up his wound, which probably was in his face; for it was to be made in a very conspicuous place, that it might be visible to Ahab and others.

Commentaries and Essays.—38 Disguised himself with ashes on his face. 41 Took the ashes away. Here seems to be an error in the Hebrew text. I should rather suppose a veil, or some other kind of covering to be meant. The Targum and Jewish critics understood the word here used to signify velamen. Buxt. in verbo חַרְדִּית. Probably then they did not read חַרְדִּית, nor the LXX, whose version is τελαμών, fascia, vitta. I suspect, therefore, that חַרְדִּית is a mistake for חַרְדִּית, amiclus, from חַרְדִּית, amicivil [so Houb., Dathe, Clarke, Ged.], cinxit. A Hebrew MS., No. 99, read primo, חַרְדִּית, in the 41st verse, which is probably the true reading. חַרְדִּית and חַרְדִּית are frequently interchanged. The proper version then may be, He disguised himself with a veil, or, garment on his face; he took the veil away.

Gesen.—חַרְדִּית m. a covering for the head, headband, turban, (r. חַרְדִּית, to cover.) 1 Kings xx. 38, 41. Sept. τελαμών. Chald. and Abulwalid by the help of their respective languages, employ for it almost the same word, the former חַרְדִּית, the latter مغفر, i. e., cap, helmet. The same word exists in Syriac, חַרְדִּית, i. e., the turban or tiara of the priests and bishops. Others make it by transpos. i. q., חַרְדִּית ornament of the head.

Prof. Lee.—A fillet or tiara for the head.

Ged.—A bandage, &c. The present Heb. text has ashes; but this is evidently a corruption. The bandage might be placed, also, to hide the wound, which he had received. See above, ver. 35.

Houb.—38 וַיַּתְּחֶהּ עַל-עֵינָיו, et mutavit se cinere super oculos. Non sine causa plerique deserunt interpretationem talem, et, pro cinere, ponunt velo. Nam parum intelligitur, quonam pacto ille propheta, cinere super oculorum orbes asperso, ita se se immutare potuerit, ut eum Achab sæpe antea visum, non agnosceret. Sed quanquam velo melius quadrat, tamen nullo exemplo persuadetur, esse חַרְדִּית, velum. Itaque melius Græci Intt., et ligavit fasciâ oculos suos.

5 R

Scilicet legebant, ut observat Lud. Cappellus. וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת, et ligavit se ipsum fasciā. Negat eos Buxtorfius sic legisse. "Putida est (inquit) hæc conjectura, qua asserit LXX pro וַיִּלְבַּשׁ legisse וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, ubi וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, velamen faciei, vel simile quid? Respexerunt ad eam significationem, quam Hebræi hęc vocis isti attribuunt communiter, quamque nostri quoque sequuntur. Quod vero וַיִּלְבַּשׁ reddiderunt katedēsaro, non aliter legerunt, sed ad sensum respexerunt, ut et paraphrastes, qui reddidit, וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, et involvit, obvolvitur: vel acceperunt pro וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, sive quod decepti fuerint similitudine affinium litterarum, uti alibi; sive quod alias existimarint idem cum eo esse, per transmutationem litterarum homogenearum." Buxtorfio respondetur, conjecturam aliquam esse, non putidam, sed probatam et liquidam, quæ descriptioni incommodæ scripturam commodam, eamque prope similem, ostendit, ut sunt hoc loco וַיִּלְבַּשׁ et וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, nec negari posse, deceptos fuisse Scribas similitudine affinium litterarum, ubi statuas, eodem modo fuisse deceptos paraphrastas et interpretes. Quod vero Buxtorfius sic interrogat, "ubi וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, velamen faciei, vel simile quid?" id non ferit Lud. Cappellum. Nam velabat oculos propheta stricta fascia, non velamine faciei; ita ut clausos haberet oculos, nec lumen videret. Propterea enim sistit se media in via regi transeunti, nec eum convenit. Est autem וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, fascia, unde וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, nomen, Ephod deductum; quod ipsum ducitur ab וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, verbo, vincire, redimire.

Dathe.—Verba textus וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת ex vulgari lectione et interpretatione mutavit cinere oculos suos non commodum sensum præbent. Quomodo enim cinerem oculis adperserit ille propheta, ut agnosci non posset ab Ahabo, et quomodo faciem sic conspurcatam statim purgare potuerit, non satis apparet. Sed οὐδ' οὐδ' οὐδ' et Chaldæus haud dubie veram lectionem nobis servarunt. Illi quidem vertunt: καὶ κατεδήσατο ἐν τελαμῶνι τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς αὐτοῦ, et ligavit fascia oculos suos. Nempe legebant וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת, uti jam Cappellus conjectavit (in crit. s. lib. iv., cap. iv., §. 12). Quod quidem Buxtorfius negavit, sed argumentis parum firmis. Nam vocabulum וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, quod in nostro loco legitur et ab interpretibus nonnullis per cinerem vertitur, qui tamen Hebraice וַיִּלְבַּשׁ dicitur, confert cum וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, quæ investigandæ significationis ratio ex litterarum transpositione a philologis recte improbat. Chaldæus in-terpres eandem lectionem exhibet, dum vertit וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת, involvit fasciæ. Tandem consilium quoque prophetæ id ipsum videtur fuisse, cum se feriri pateretur, ut sic in facie vulneratus obligare s. tegere posset vulnus. Alias nulla apparet ratio, cur illud fieri jussisset. Pulvere enim aut cinere conspergere faciem potuisset etiam sine vulnere.

Maurer.—38 וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת Winerus, alii: et stetit apud regem, coram rege, pr. conversus ad regem. Sed וַיִּלְבַּשׁ purus putus Dativus esse videtur: et constitit, se sistit regi in viam. וַיִּלְבַּשׁ אֶת-הַחֹשֶׁת et se dissimulavit velatis cidari oculis, pr. mit dem Turban über seinen Augen. וַיִּלְבַּשׁ pr. quæsiavit, וַיִּלְבַּשׁ queri se passus est, hinc se ipsum occultavit, dissimulavit, maxime mutato vestitu, cf. intra xxii. 30; 1 Sam. xxviii. 8; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22. וַיִּלְבַּשׁ = וַיִּלְבַּשׁ (cf. וַיִּלְבַּשׁ et וַיִּלְבַּשׁ, וַיִּלְבַּשׁ al. بَالٍ useless, without fruit, bad. See note below.—Hence blessed be Jehovah, i. e., praised, adored, Ex. xviii. 10, &c. Job ii. 9 בָּרַךְ אֱלֹהִים וְיָמָא bless God and die, i. e., bless and praise God as thou wilt, yet thou must now die; thy piety towards God is in vain. The language is that of an impious woman. For this use of two imperatives, one of which is concessive, while the other affirms, promises, threatens, see Heb. Gram. §. 127, 2 b.—More fully דָּרַךְ שֵׁם יְהוָה to bless the name of Jehovah, Ps. xcvi. 2, and דָּרַךְ שֵׁם יְהוָה (as דָּרַךְ שֵׁם יְהוָה) Deut. x. 8; xxi. 5. Once of the invocation of idols Isaiah lxvi. 3; also of self praise, Psalm xlix. 19.

1 Worthlessness, badness, wickedness, as בְּלִי a worthless man, i. e., wicked, abandoned, 1 Sam. xxv. 25: xxx. 22. בְּלִי Prov. vi. 12, and בְּלִי 1 Sam. xxv. 17, id. Plur. often בְּלִי 1 Sam. ii. 12, and בְּלִי אֲנָשִׁים בְּלִי, Deut. xiii. 14; Judg. xix. 22; xx. 13; בְּלִי a wicked woman, 1 Sam. i. 16;

2. Of men towards men, to bless, pp. to invoke blessings upon any one in the name of God, דָּרַךְ שֵׁם יְהוָה Psalm cxxix. 8. Constr. usually c. acc. rarely seq. לְ Neh. xi. 2.—Once of the consecration of a sacrifice, 1 Sam. ix. 13.

3. God too is said to bless men and other created things, Gen. i. 22; ix. 1. Often implying also the effect of the divine favour and blessing, i. q., to prosper, to make prosperous. Gen. xii. 2; &c.

4. Of men, to bless, i. q., to salute, to greet, implying the wish or invocation of every good, 1 Sam. xv. 13; comp. εὐφραίνω ὑμῖν, Arab. السلام عليك; &c.

5. In the sense of invoking evil, i. q., to curse, to invoke a curse from God, to wish destruction to any one; comp. Job xxxi. 30. This is one of the class of intermediate verbs, verba media, like Arab. أبترك, Ethiop.

ברך : to bless and to curse; הל VIII., to supplicate, also to wish one ill; see more in Thesaur., p. 241. — Spoken strictly only of men, but transferred also to curses and impious words uttered against God, 1 Kings xxi. 10; Psalm x. 3; Job i. 5, 11; ii. 5. Some interpreters, as Schulzens, are not fully satisfied that the sense of cursing belongs to this verb; they therefore derive from the idea of bidding farewell (see No. 4) a signif. to deny, to renounce, which they apply in the passages above cited; comp. Gr. χαίρειν ἔαν, χαίρειν φράσειν τινά. But the signif. of cursing is supported both by the words in 1 Kings xxi. 10, and by the analogy of the kindred languages as above exhibited.

Prof. Lee.—ברך. Arab. بَرَك, genua

flezit, et sic in pectore procubuit camelus, id Syr. et Æth. I. Knelt, worshipping, 2 Chron. vi. 13; Ps. xcvi. 6; Dan. vi. 11. II. Meton. Part. בָּרַךְ, f. בָּרַכָה, pl. m. בָּרַכִּים, constr. בָּרַךְ. Worshipped, blessed, often applied to God as the object of worship, Gen. ix. 26, &c., occasionally to men, by a further Meton. as hence receiving favours from him, 2 Sam. ii. 5, &c.

Niph. בָּרַךְ, They shall be, or become, blessed, Gen. xii. 3, &c. "Reflex...benedixit sibi," says Gesenius, which is groundless in grammar, and untrue in theology. The blessing was to come from God.

Pih. בָּרַךְ, pres. בָּרֶכֶת, Pronounced, or made blessed, holy, or prosperous, used either of God or man. Constr. immed. Gen. xxiv. 1, 35; xxviii. 3, 5; xlix. 28, &c. In Job i. 5; ii. 9; and 1 Kings xxi. 10, this word has been thought to signify cursing; but for this there is no good ground. For, Job i. 5, בָּרַךְ, may be taken to signify idols: and, if so, the verb בָּרַךְ, will retain its proper sense. The same may be said of Ib. ii. 9, and of 1 Kings xxii. 10, 13. Besides, if we allow בָּרַךְ, in this last place to signify the true God, yet the ascription of blessedness to the king by Naboth, could be nothing short of blasphemy. But, if we take בָּרַךְ, to signify heathenish deities, the act ascribed to Naboth will be truly heathenish. See my note on Job i. 5. To these passages Gesenius adds Job xxxi. 30: but the verb occurs not there. He also adds Ps. x. 3; but here no such sense as cursing is necessary, as a moment's inspection of the passage will shew. He cites likewise the Arab. أبترك, and Æth.

ברך : but in no such sense are these verbs to be found. The analogy of these languages, therefore, to which he appeals in the end of his article, will stand him in no stead. The senses, salutavit, valedixit, and the like, are often substituted for bless, &c., especially by the German lexicographers, which I think a great fault; because, I cannot think the terms the Lord bless thee, &c. by any means equivalent to our how do ye do? the Arab. سلام عليك, &c. Surely it is better, as certainly it is more honest, to retain with the use of ancient terms the ancient notions which accompanied them, and not to soften every thing, so as to make it square with modern or heathenish usages.

— διὰ τοῦτο τάδε λέγει κύριος, ἐν παντὶ τόπῳ, ὃ ἔλειξαν αἱ δεσ καὶ οἱ κύνες τὸ αἷμα Ναβουθαί, ἐκεῖ λείξουσιν οἱ κύνες τὸ αἷμά σου, καὶ αἱ πόρραι λούσονται ἐν τῷ αἵματί σου.

Au. Ver.—19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

Pool.—Quest. How was this prophecy fulfilled, when Ahab's blood was not licked in Jezreel, which was in the tribe of Issachar, but in the pool of Samaria, chap. xxii. 38, which was in the tribe of Ephraim?

Ans. First, This was done, though not in the same individual place, yet in the same general place, i. e., in the territory of Samaria, within which Jezreel was; and in a place of the same nature, a public and common place; for such was both the place of Naboth's execution, and the pool of Samaria. Secondly, this was particularly accomplished in his son Joram, as is affirmed, 2 Kings ix. 25, 26; whose blood is not improperly called Ahab's blood, because children are said to be born of their parents' blood. See John i. 13; Acts xvii. 26.

Object. These words, thy blood, even thine, show that it is meant of Ahab's person.

Ans. True, the threatening was so directed and designed at first; but afterwards, upon his humiliation, the punishment was transferred from him to his son, as is expressed, ver. 29. Object. This is said to be fulfilled in Ahab's person, chap. xxii. 38. Ans.

Either that may be referred to some other prediction or commination not elsewhere mentioned; or rather, it intimates that it was in part and in some sort fulfilled in him, though not so severely and opprobriously, nor with such characters of the curse, as it was in his son; whence he there mentions only the thing, without any regard unto the place here designed. But it may further be observed, that although upon Ahab's humiliation the curse here threatened might seem to be wholly translated from his person to his posterity; yet upon Ahab's return to sin, in the next chapter, he brings back the curse upon himself, and so it is no wonder if it be in some sort fulfilled in him also. Thirdly, The Hebrew word, rendered in the place where, may be, and is by some learned men, otherwise rendered; either thus, instead of this that; that being frequently said to be done in another's place which was only done in his stead; or, like as; or, because that. So it doth not design the place, but the cause and reason of this judgment. And in this sense the same word is used Zech. ii. 1.

Bp. Patrick.—In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.] He declares the cause of this judgment upon him, but doth not assign the place; for the dogs licked Ahab's blood in Samaria (xxii. 38.) Therefore these words should be translated, as the dogs licked or in like manner as they licked Naboth's blood, so shall they lick thine: mark what I say, even thine.

Dr. A. Clarke.—In the place where dogs licked, &c.] It is in vain to look for a literal fulfilment of this prediction. Thus it would have been fulfilled, but the humiliation of Ahab induced the merciful God to say, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in the days of his son, ver. 29. Now dogs did lick the blood of Ahab; but it was at the pool of Samaria where his chariot and his armour were washed, after he had received his death-wound at Ramoth-gilead;

but some think this was the place where Naboth was stoned: see chap. xxii. 38. And how literally the prediction concerning his son was fulfilled, see 2 Kings ix. 25, where we find that the body of Jehoram his son, just then slain by an arrow that had passed through his heart, was thrown into the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: and there, doubtless, the dogs licked his blood, if they did not even devour his body.

Au. Ver.—25 But there was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the LORD, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up [or, incited].

26 And he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

27 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly.

Sell himself.

Pilkington.—The general signification of the Hebrew verb מָכַר , is, to sell, but it sometimes signifies to give, or deliver up, without a price; or to give one's-self up to; as Judg. ii. 14. "The Lord sold his people into the hands of their enemies." And Judg. iii. 8, and iv. 2, 9, &c. And 1 Kings xxi. 25, we are told, that "There was none like unto Ahab, who did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord." 2 Kings xvii. 17? "They sold themselves to do evil." Now as מִכְרַשׁ was the word, by which מָכַר is commonly rendered in the Septuagint, the Apostle uses it in the same sense as the Hebrew writers did the other, Rom. vii. 14: "I am carnal, sold under sin." But as the English verb to sell, hath not properly such a latitude, given up to sin, would be the more intelligible to all persons; and the idiom of our language seems to require that the Hebrew verb should be so rendered in the passages above referred to.

25 But there was none, &c.

27 And it came to pass.

Ged.—25 Now, although there had been none like Ahab; who, seduced by his wife Jezebel, had sold himself to do evil, in the eyes of the LORD, 26 and committed the greatest abominations, by going after vile idols, according to all the doings of the Amorites, whom the LORD had expelled from before the children of Israel; 27 yet, when Ahab heard those words, he rent his garments, and put sackcloth on his body, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and walked with a downcast look.

Booth.—27 But when Ahab heard, &c.

Went softly.

Pool.—i. e., Slowly and silently, after the manner of mourners, or those who are under a great consternation, and in deep consideration.

Bp. Patrick.—27 All these were expressions of very great sorrow and heaviness; which were usual in mourning. And the last words the Chaldee paraphrast translates, he went barefoot. But it is rejected by the greater part of interpreters, who take it as we do, for such a slow pace as signified he was reduced to great weakness and feebleness of body, by fasting and grief; or that he had no heart to go about any business.

Dr. Adam Clarke.—And went softly.] Walked barefooted; so the Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic. The Vulgate has demisso capite, "with his head hanging down." Houbigant translates went groaning. Jarchi says that the word בְּלֵב , used here, signifies to be unshod. This is its most likely sense.

Gesen.— בְּלֵב (r. בְּלֵב [1. to utter a gentle sound; 2. to go gently]) subst. m. 1. A gentle sound.

2. A going softly, gentle motion; whence often adverbially, בְּלֵב , בְּלֵב , בְּלֵב , softly, gently, slowly, e. g. of the still slow gait of a mourner, 1 Kings xxi. 27; of water gently flowing, Isaiah viii. 6. בְּלֵב pp. in my slow gait, at my convenience, gradually, Gen. xxxiii. 14.—Also of the manner of acting and speaking; 2 Sam. xviii. 5. Officer.

Gesen.—סרס m. (ר. סרס) to root out, to extirpate, spec. the testicles, and hence, to castrate.

*A eunuch, one castrated, Isaiah lvi. 3, 4. Such persons oriental monarchs were accustomed to set over their harems, Esther ii. 3, 14, 15; iv. 5; and also to employ them in various offices of the court, Esther i. 10, 15; ii. 21; vi. 2; vii. 9. So סרס Dan. i. 3, סרס v. 7 sq. chief or prince of the eunuchs, who had charge of the king's sons, as at the present day in Turkey the Kishlar Aga or chief of the eunuchs has charge of the Sultan's children, called Itshoglan. Hence according to some, genr. a minister of court, court officer, though not castrated, Gen. xxxvii. 6; xxxix. 1. But these passages determine nothing; because many eunuchs are not wholly impotent, and sometimes live in matrimony, Ter. Eun. 4, 3, 24; Chardin Voy. III. p. 397. Of the other passages of the O. T. there are not a few where the proper sense is obviously to be retained, as Jer. xxxviii. 7; xli. 16; 1 Sam. viii. 15; 2 Kings xxiv. 12, 15; Isaiah xxxix. 7. On the other hand, there is no passage where the proper sense is not appropriate, as 1 Kings xxii. 9; 2 Kings viii. 6; ix. 32; xx. 18; xxiii. 11; xxv. 19; 1 Chron. xxviii. 1; Jer. xxxiv. 19; lii. 25. Sept. constantly εὐνοῦχος, twice σπάδων, Vulg., eunuchus. See more in Thesaur., p. 973.*

Ged.—The original word signifies a threshing-floor; which in Judea was usually in the open air. Here it might serve for two purposes: for a general threshing-floor; and for a court of justice, which was commonly administered at the city gate.

Gesen.—גֶּד. A place made level, an area. Spoken a) Of the area or open place around the gates of cities, called also גֶּד, 1 Kings xxii. 10; 2 Chron. xviii. 9. b) Mostly spoken of the area on which grain is trodden out or threshed in the open field, a threshing-floor, Ruth iii. 2, &c.

Ver. 12.

Ver. 15.

Au. Ver.—15 So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, Go, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

Pool.—He answered him; not seriously, but ironically, using the very words of the false prophets, in way of derision; as appears first, From his omission of that solemn preface, Thus saith the Lord, or, This is the word of the Lord, which the prophets generally used, and which himself useth when he comes to his serious answer, verse 19. Secondly, From Ahab's reply, ver. 16, which shows that he suspected Micaiah's sincerity in that answer, and gathered by his gesture or manner of speaking that he spake only mimically, as representing and traducing the false prophets for their answer. See the like ironical passages Gen. iii. 22; Judg. x. 14; 1 Kings xviii. 27; Eccles. xi. 9; Ezek. xx. 39; Amos iv. 4, 5; all which expressions are not used to lead men into mistakes, but to bring them to the sight of their sin and duty, which may be done sometimes most efficaciously in this way. So Micaiah's meaning is plainly this, Because thou dost not seek to know the truth, but only to please thyself, go to the battle, as all thy prophets advise thee, and expect the success which they promise thee, and try the truth of their prediction by thy own costly experience.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Go and prosper; for the Lord will deliver it into the hand of the king. These were the precise words of the false prophets (see ver. 6 and 12), and were spoken by Micaiah in such a tone and manner as at once showed to Ahab that he did not believe them; hence the king adjures him, ver. 16, that he would speak to him nothing but truth; and on this the prophet immediately relates to him the prophetic vision which pointed out the disasters which ensued.

It is worthy of remark that this prophecy of the king's prophets is couched in the same ambiguous terms by which the false prophets in the heathen world endeavoured to maintain their credit, while they deluded their votaries. The reader will observe that the word it is not in the original: The Lord will deliver it into the hand of the king; and the words are so artfully constructed that they may be interpreted for or against; so that, be the event whatever it might, the juggling prophet could save his credit by saying he meant what had happened. Thus then the prophecy might have been understood: The Lord will deliver (Ramoth-gilead) into the king's (Ahab's) hand; or, The Lord will deliver (Israel) into the king's hand; i. e., into the hand of the king of Syria. And Micaiah repeats these words of uncertainty in order to ridicule them and expose their fallacy.

Au. Ver.—21 And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

A spirit.

Ged.—The lying spirit. Lying is not in the original; but there is a letter prefixed to spirit equivalent, for the most part, to our definite article.

any design [so Houb., Dathe, Gesen., Lee, Maurer] or thought of reaching Ahab. Or, according to his perfection [so Clarke], i. e., with his perfect or utmost strength; which is mentioned as the reason why it pierced through the joints of his armour.

Prof. Lee.—מִן, m. Completeness. (a) Completeness, fullness, in number or degree. (b) Completeness in character, integrity. (c) מִן, variously rendered. [1] With his full strength. [2] With all his skill, with an accurate aim. [3] In his integrity, without any design to kill the king, (d) &c.

Between the joints of the harness.

Dr. A. Clarke.—“Between the cuirass and the lower part of the helmet;” and then the arrow must pass through the neck, just above the breast: or “between the cuirass and the cuissarts;” and then the arrow must pass through the abdomen, or just where the armour of the thighs joins to that which covers the breast and belly. The Vulgate has Inter pulmonem et stomachum; “Between the lungs and the stomach;” consequently, in the region of the heart.

Ged.—Between the joinings, &c. Although I have so translated the words, with most modern interpreters: I confess I am not quite satisfied with the translation. The Greek translator renders, between the lungs and the breast-plate: and Jerom, between the lungs and the stomach. What they read in their text I cannot readily conjecture.

Au. Ver.—35 And the battle increased [Heb., ascended] that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the midst of the chariot [Heb., bosom.]

Ged.—But the battle growing hotter on that occasion, the king was stayed up, in his chariot, against the Syrians, from morn to eve; the blood of the wound running down all the while into the bottom of the chariot; and in the evening he died.

Ib. From morn to eve, &c. I have not only followed the reading but also the arrangement of the Greek, which is evidently better than that of the present text [so Booth.].

Ver. 36, 37.

Au. Ver.—36 And there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 So the king died, and was brought [Heb., came] to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria.

37 So the king died.

Ged.—The Greek translator and Josephus make this a part of the proclamation, for that the king was dead.

Au. Ver.—38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria; and the dogs licked up his blood, and they washed his armour: according unto the word of the Lord which he spake.

See notes on xxi. 19.

Dr. A. Clarke.—38 The dogs licked up his blood.] Some of the rabbins think that this was in the very place where Naboth was stoned, see on chap. xxi. 19. The Septuangint translate this verse strangely: "And the swine and the dogs licked his blood, and the whores bathed themselves in his blood, according to the word of the Lord." It is certain that the Hebrew words והנה רחצו, "washed his armour," might be translated as the Septuagint have done; "and the whores (or public women) washed," &c. And so the rabbins seem to have understood the words; but then they suppose that Jezebel had made him two images of prostitutes, which he had with him in the chariot. See Kinchi and Jarchi.

Parkhurst.—והנה With a radical, (see Deut. xxxi. 16,) but mutable or omissible, ה final.

The primary idea seems to be, to encircle, encircle, fold, enclose, or the like. It occurs not however as a verb simply in this sense, but hence the Greeks plainly had their ζώνη a zone, girdle, and the V. ζώνω, ζώνωμι to gird, gird round.

1 As a n. with a formative א, אין, a belt, or girdle, occ. Deut. xxiii. 14.

2 As a n. fem. plur. והנה defensive armour encompassing or surrounding the body. Montanus translates it zonas, girdles; but it seems of more extensive signification, and is accordingly rendered in the Chaldee Targum by כסא דמלכא armour, in which sense והנה is often used in the Targums, occ. 1 Kings xxii. 38. It is evident from ver. 34 that Ahab went defensively armed into the battle, and therefore there is a peculiar emphasis in observing that the very armour in which no doubt he trusted, became one means of fulfilling Elijah's prophecy, ch. xxi. 19.

Gesen.—והנה scortum, meretrix, plur. והנה scorta, 1 Reg. iii. 16; xxii. 38, &c. See notes on Josh. ii. 1, p. 5, 6, 7.

Ged.—38 And when they washed his chariot, and rinsed his armour, in the pool of Samaria, the dogs licked up his blood, according to the words, which the Lord had spoken.

And rinsed his armour. In the present text the words seem to have been transposed. I have followed the order of the Syriac version. The Greek translator gives the words another turn, and renders, the harlots washed themselves in the blood, &c. Josephus says that it was afterwards the custom for harlots to wash in that pool.

Dathe.—38 Cum currum et arma abluerunt (a) ad piscinam Samariae, linzerunt canes ejus sanguinem quod Jova futurum esse praedixerat.

a) Verba textus והנה רחצו tantum of ל ex vulgari lectione et significatione vocis vertuntur καὶ αἱ πόρναι ἐλούσαντο. Sed omnino eorum versio h. l. valde corrupta videtur. Vulgatus vertit: et habenas laverunt. Chaldaeus vasa armorum laverunt. Syrus ordinem verborum transponit: cum lavissent currum in locis editis Samariae, et arma ejus lavissent, linzerunt canes ejus sanguinem secundum verbum Domini. Recte. Nam utique illa verba cum prioribus sunt connectenda. Arabs ea prorsus omisit, Explicandum esse vocabulum והנה non de scortis, sed de armis ex significatione Chald. et Syr. והנה, jam a pluribus est observatum.

Maurer.—והנה impersonaliter accipiendum. והנה רחצו et laverunt, abluerunt eum meretrices, sc. in gravissimam contumeliam. Contra Schulzius: "lavabant se meretrices. Spectatum veniunt, veniunt, spectantur ut ipsae. Qui והנה de currus lotionem a meretricibus facta interpretantur, ii non cogitant, tum והנה dicendum fuisse, והנה enim semper de corporis lotionem usurpatur."

Sed cum Arab. רחض etiam de vestium lavatione adhibeatur, והנה quoque latius patuit, opinor. Videtur autem de ablutione currus hic eo facilius dici potuisse, quod de curru sanguine hominis cruentato sermo est.

Au. Ver.—43 And he walked in all the ways of Asa his father; he turned not aside from it, doing that which was right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheless the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoshaphat made peace with the king of Israel.

45 Now the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and his might that he shewed, and how he warred, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

46 And the remnant of the sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.

47 There was then no king in Edom: a deputy was king.

48 Jehoshaphat made ships [or, had ten ships] of Tharshish to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber.

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat, Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships. But Jehoshaphat would not.

50 And Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

Pool.—43 The high places were not taken away. Object. It is said he did take them away, 2 Chron. xvii. 6. Ans. He took away those which were erected to idols; of which he seems to speak there, because the high places are there joined with groves, which were generally erected to idols, and not to the true God, as will appear to any one that shall compare all the scriptures where groves are mentioned; but he could not take those away which were erected to the true God, of which this place manifestly speaks; as also that parallel place 1 Kings xv. 14, where see the notes. Or he took them away, but not fully; or not in the very beginning of his reign.

48 Jehoshaphat made ships. See 2 Chron. xx. 36. Or, there were to Jehoshaphat ten ships; the ellipsis of the verb substantive, and of the prefix lamed, being frequent in the Hebrew language. Some render the words, he made ten ships; so joining both texts together, and out of both completing the sense. Of Tharshish; either, 1 Of the sea, as this word is thought sometimes to be used, Or rather, 2 To go to Tharshish, (as it is expressed, 2 Chron. xx. 36,) and thence to Ophir, as it here follows. See more on 1 Kings x. 22.

49 But Jehoshaphat would not. Object. It is said that he did join with Ahaziah herein, 2 Chron. xx. 35, 36. Ans. That was before this time, and before the ships were broken; for the breaking of the ships, mentioned here, ver. 48, is noted to be the effect of his sin, in joining with Ahaziah, and of the prophecy consequent upon it, 2 Chron. xx. 37. And good Jehoshaphat being warned and chastised by God for his sin, would not be persuaded to repeat it; whereby he showed the sincerity of his repentance.

Bp. Patrick.—48 Jehoshaphat made ships of Tharshish. These ships were not to go to Tharshish, but to Ophir. But they are called "ships of Tharshish" from their form: for they were made after the mould of those ships which traded to that place. And all such ships, wheresoever they were built, were called "ships of Tharshish." Thus Abarbinel. Which seems not to agree with 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37 (see there).

Pilkington.—In the 22d chap. of 1 Kings four verses are omitted in the Vatican copy; from ver. 45 to ver. 50, and, it may be thought that they were not in the original Hebrew because, omitting them, the style is exactly conformable to the other passages in this book, where the last actions, and death of a king are spoken of. See 1 Kings xvi. 27; xxiv. 40; 2 Kings x. 34; xiv. 28; xv. 21; xvi. 19, &c. Besides, what is here said, is not altogether consistent with the account of Jehoshaphat's designs, mentioned 2 Chron. xx. 35, &c.

Bp. Horsley.—48 Made ships. For עשו, read, with many of Kennicott's best Codd., עשו.

Dr. A. Clarke.—43 The high places were not taken away.] In 2 Chron. xvii. 6, it is expressly said, that he did take away the high places. Allowing that the text is right in 2 Chron., the two places may be easily reconciled. There were two kinds of high places in the land: 1 Those used for idolatrous purposes. 2 Those that were consecrated to God, and were used before the temple was built. The former he did take away; the latter he did not. But some think the parallel place in 2 Chron. xvii. 6 is corrupted, and that, instead of עשו הער, "and moreover he took away," we should read, לא הער, "and he did not take away."

47 There was no king in Edom.] It is plain that the compiler of this book lived after the days of Jehoshaphat, in whose time the Edomites revolted; see 2 Kings viii. 22. David had conquered the Edomites, and they continued to be governed by deputies, appointed by the kings of Judah, till they recovered their liberty, as above. This note is introduced by the writer to account for Jehoshaphat's building ships at Ezion-geber, which was in the territory of the Edomites, and which showed them to be at that time under the Jewish yoke.

48 Ships of Tharshish to go to Ophir for gold.] Some translate, instead of ships of Tharshish, ships of burden. See Houbigant, who expresses himself doubtful as to the meaning of the word.

49 But Jehoshaphat would not.] It appears from the above-cited place in Chronicles that Jehoshaphat did join in making and sending ships to Tharshish, and it is possible that what is here said is spoken of a second expedition, in which Jehoshaphat would not join Ahaziah. But instead of לא, "he would not," perhaps we should read לא, "he consented to him" [so Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth.]; two words pronounced exactly in the same way, and differing but in one letter, viz. an aleph for a vau. This reading, however, is not supported by any MS. or Version: but the emendation seems just. Critics have recommended the 48th and 49th verses to be read thus: "Jehoshaphat had built ships of burden at Ezion-geber, to go to Ophir for gold. 49 And Ahaziah the son of Ahab had said to Jehoshaphat, Let my servants, I pray thee, go with thy servants in the ships: to which Jehoshaphat consented. But the ships went not thither; for the ships were broken at Ezion-geber." This is Houbigant's translation, who contends that "the words of the 48th verse, but they went not, should be placed at the end of the 49th verse, for who can believe that the sacred writer should first relate that the ships were broken, and then that Ahaziah requested of Jehoshaphat that his servants might embark with the servants of Jehoshaphat?"

Ged.—43 He entirely followed the way of his father: from it he never deviated: doing what was right in the eyes of the Lord, 46 Nay, the remnant of catamites who had been spared in the days of his father, he expelled from the land.—Only the hill-chapels were not abolished: the people still sacrificed, and burned incense in hill-chapels.

44 Joshaphat having made peace with the king of Israel; 47 and there being no king in Edom, but a vice-king of the king of Judah; 48 Joshaphat buildeth ships of Tharshish, at Ezion-geber, to go to Ophir for gold. 49 Then said Ahaziah Ben-Ahab to Joshaphat: "Let my servants go, in the ships, with thy servants:" to which Joshaphat consented. But the expedition went not on: for the ships were wrecked, at Ezion-geber. 45 Now the rest of the acts of Joshaphat; all the valour he displayed, and the wars he was engaged in, are written in the chronicles of the kings of Judah. 50 And Joshaphat slept, &c. So in the main Boothroyd.

47 There being no king in Edom, &c. This gave Josaphat an opportunity of constructing a fleet without impediment at Ezion-geber: which was an Edomite port.

49 To which Josaphat consented. The present text, with all the ancient versions, has, But Josaphat would not consent. But this is totally irreconcilable with Chronicles; and the corruption is easily accounted for.

Booth.—43—50 These verses have, from some accident, been strangely misplaced. I have followed Geddes in the order adopted, which is consistent with itself and with the account in Chronicles.

Houb.—48 Interdum non erat rex in Edom, sed regis præfectus. 49 Josaphat in Asiongaber onerarias naves edificârat, Ophir ad aurum ituras; 50 Et Ochozias, filius Achab, dixerat Josaphat, eunt, quæso, in navibus servi mei cum servis tuis, petentique, annuerat Josaphat; sed classis non eò ivit; naves enim in Asiongaber fractæ fuerunt. 51 Decubuit Josaphat, &c.

48 נָבַח מֶלֶךְ, præfectus regis. Adde רַךְ, tantum, vel sed, ante נָבַח. Ita supplet contextum Chaldaeus, per adverbium Chald. אִלִּין, nisi. Sacra Historia hîc docet, cur Josaphat regi liceret classem ædificare in portu Asiongaber, qui erat in finibus Idumæorum: nempe non fuisse eo tempore reges Edom, ex quo David Idumæos sub jugum miserat, sed illuc missos fuisse à regibus Judæ præfectos, suæ potestatis vicarios. Veteres suam quisque habuere hujus loci interpretationem, quia in scriptione mutilatâ sententiam, ut poterant, reddebant.

50 וְלֹא אָבָה, et non acquievit. Tamen loco parallelo Josaphat à prophetâ objurgatur, quodd cum Ochoziâ, impio rege, societatem iniisset, ad classem ædificandam. Hunc nodum Interpretes ut solvant, multa movent. Nos quidem non aliter solvi posse credimus, quam si legitur, וְלֹא אָבָה, et illi acquievit. Nam ubi effectus narratur, causam necesse est non fuisse omisam. Propterea naves Josaphat tempestate fractæ sunt, quia societatem cum Ochoziâ junxerat. Ergo convenit Sacram Paginam affirmare junctam fuisse societatem, non autem fuisse recusatam. Pariter necesse est, hæc verba versus 49. וְלֹא אָבָה, et non ivit, usque ad finem versus, collocari in fine versus 50 quod et nos interpretando fecimus. Nam quis credat sacrum scriptorem narrasse, primùm naves fuisse fractas, deinde petiisse à Josaphat Ochoziam, ut servi sui, naves conscenderent simul cum servis Josaphat? Mendum וְלֹא dedit occasionem ordini perturbando, ut prius וְלֹא versus 49 et quæ sequuntur usque ad ejusdem versus finem, ponerentur ibi, ubi alterum וְלֹא, mendum jam factum, fuerat collocandum. So Dathe.

Ver. 51—53.

Au. Ver.—51 Ahaziah the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Israel.

52 And he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin :

53 For he served Baal, and worshipped him, and provoked to anger the LORD God of Israel, according to all that his father had done.

Au. Ver.—1 Then Moab rebelled against Israel after the death of Ahab.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was sick : and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron whether I shall recover of this disease.

Ged.—1 Now, after the death of Ahab, the Moabites revolted from Israel : 2 when Ahaziah, having fallen through the lattice of his upper chamber in Samaria, was sick, &c.

Through a lattice in his upper chamber.

Pool.—In his upper chamber ; in which the lattice might be left to convey light into the lower room. But the words may be, and are by some, rendered through the battle- ments (or through the lattice in the battlements) of the roof of the house ; where being first walking, after the manner, and then standing and looking through, and leaning upon this lattice, which was grown infirm, it broke, and he fell down into the court or garden belonging to the house.

Bp. Patrick.—2 Through a lattice, &c.] By this lattice, the Jews understand some net-work that was in the dining-room ; which being decayed, and he leaning upon it, it fell down, and he together with it.

Baal-zebub. See notes on Judg. ii. 11, p. 166.

Bp. Patrick.—Baal-zebub.] Many think this god was called Baal-semin, the Lord of heaven ; whom the Jews, by way of contempt, called Baal-zebub ; i. e., the lord of a fly, as a god that was nothing worth ; or rather, because his temple was full of flies : whereas the temple at Jerusalem, though so many sacrifices were offered there daily, never had a fly in it ; as the Jews relate in Pirke Avoth. But it is not likely, the king of Israel would have called this god, for whom he had a great reverence by a contemptible name; which signifies, therefore, no more than Μυιάδης μυίαγρος, ἀπόγυιος, among the Greeks; which were the titles of Jupiter and Hercules; because they were thought to free their countries from flies [so Pool], with which the Ekronites were pestered, lying in a moist and hot soil, near to the ocean. Theodore, Procopius, and others, think they worshipped this god in the image of a fly; but the latter of them doubts whether it was the name of a demon, or of an old woman canonized for a goddess. And after all, Mr. Selden thinks the reason of this name cannot be found. But the most probable conjecture is, that he was so called from the cure of a contagious disease. For Pliny tells us, that there being a great pestilence in Africa, which was brought among them by a multitude of flies, it was extinguished by the killing of them all after they had sacrificed to the god Achore. He should have said, the god worshipped at Ekron; from whence that word Achore plainly came (lib. x., Nat. Hist., cap. 27). And if this was the original of the name, it is no wonder that Ahaziah sent to inquire of him about his sickness, since he was thought so powerful as to cure the pestilence.

Au. Ver.—3 But the angel of the Lord said to Elijah the Tishbite, Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

Bp. Patrick.—There are two negatives in the Hebrew text which increase the sense, Is it not because there is no God, none in Israel? That is, do you not plainly declare, that you think there is no God, none at all, in Israel? that he knows nothing, nor can do anything? Which makes you send to Ekron, as if there was a more knowing and mighty, if not the only, God there.

Au. Ver.—8 And they answered him, He was an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

An hairy man.

Bp. Patrick.—8 Some think he is said to be “a hairy man,” because he had long hair on his head and his beard, like the Greek philosophers: but it is more probable, it was because he was clad with a hairy garment [so Pool], which the prophets were wont to use (Isa. xx. 2; Zech. xiii. 4; Matt. iii. 4). And, indeed, the leathern girdle shows what kind of garment he wore (see Dr. Hammond, upon the place last mentioned, annot. d.). This was the simplest and most ancient garment; and therefore the old heroes are said to have been clothed in the skins of lions, or tigers, or bears, &c. And, perhaps, by this rude habit the prophets expressed their great grief for the sad condition the Israelites were in when they came to call them to repentance.

Let fire come down, &c. So Houb., Dathe.

Commentaries and Essays.—Perhaps better; Fire will come down, as a prediction of the testimony God would bear to his prophet, rather than as a prayer of Elijah, asking fire from heaven; which savours too much of a cruel spirit, and is not becoming so holy a prophet. LXX, καταβήσεται—"will come down." So Bishop Law, Ged., Booth.

Au. Ver.—17 So he died according to the word of the Lord which Elijah had spoken. And Jehoram reigned in his stead in the second year [The second year that Jehoram was Prorex, and the eighteenth of Jehoshaphat, ch. iii. 1] of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, because he had no son.

Jehoram reigned.

Houb., Ged., Booth.—Jehoram his brother [LXX, Syr., Vulg.] reigned.

In the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah.

Ged.—In the second year, &c. Although I have retained these words in the text, I consider them either as an interpolation, or a manifest error contrary to the tenor of history, and contradictory to ch. iii. ver. 1.

In the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat: other passages of Scripture seem to clash with this, as that Ahaziah, who reigned but two years, begun his reign in Jehoshaphat's seventeenth year, 1 Kings xxii. 51; and therefore this Jehoram must begin his reign in Jehoshaphat's nineteenth year; and therefore before the reign of Jehoram, Jehoshaphat's son; and that Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat began to reign in the fifth year of Joram, Ahab's son, 2 Kings viii. 16. Ans. These difficulties are easily resolved by this consideration, that it was a usual practice among kings in former ages, to make their sons sometimes their viceroys and deputies in the administration of the kingdom; and sometimes formally kings in conjunction with themselves, and whilst they lived; whereof there are instances, both in profane history, among the Persians, Greeks, and Romans, and in the sacred Scripture, as in David, 1 Chron. xxiii. 1; xxix. 22, in Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 21, and (to come close to the point) in Jehoshaphat, 2 Kings viii. 16; who in his seventeenth year, when he went to Ahab, and with him to Ramoth-gilead, appointed his son Jehoram his viceroy, and (in case of his death) his successor. In the second year from that time, when Jehoram was thus made vice-king in his father's stead and absence, this Jehoram, Ahab's son, began to reign; and in the fifth year of the reign of this Joram, son of Ahab, which was about the twenty-fourth year of Jehoshaphat's reign, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat was formally made king of Judah, together with his father; or whilst Jehoshaphat lived, and was king of Judah also. And so all the places agree. To which some add, that this verse, or this part of it, wherein the difficulty consists is wanting in some ancient copies, and is omitted by the LXX interpreters; which is far more prudent and pious to grant, than upon such chronological difficulties to question the truth and divinity of the Holy Scriptures.

Bp. Patrick.—Jehoram reigned in his stead—because he had no son. Therefore this brother of his succeeded him. Who began to govern in this second year of Jehoshaphat's son: but was king before (iii. 1), only very young, and, as some of the Jews think, under the care of Jehoshaphat. But Kimchi seems to have better reconciled this seeming difference, That Jehoshaphat declared his son Jehoram king while he lived, and he reigned with him seven years. The occasion of which is intimated in 2 Chron. xx. 3, "He gave the kingdom to Jehoram, because he was the first-born," and gave gifts to the rest of his sons. Who being many, began to strive about the succession to the kingdom: which belonging to the first-born, Jehoshaphat, to quiet them all, declared Jehoram king together with himself, and he reigned with him seven years. When it is said therefore that Ahab's Jehoram reigned in the second year of Jehoshaphat's son Jehoram, the meaning is, the second year that he reigned with his father Jehoshaphat who was then living,

Houb.—17 רִמְכָן יֶהוֹרָם חֲדָשִׁי, et regnavit Joram pro eo. Lege יֶהוֹרָם אֲדָוִי חֲדָשִׁי, et regnavit Joram, frater ejus, pro eo. Nam propterea mox dicitur, quia non erat ei filius, quod antea dictum est fratrem ejus regnasse; ut constet non fuisse אֲדָוִי à Sacro Scriptore omissum. Adde, neque id omittit Syrum, nec Vulgatum, nec denique Græcos Intt. in Codice quidem Alex. vide Polyglotta. ... בְּשָׁנָה שְ�נִיָּה, anno secundo. Nunc Joram, rex Israel, regnasse dicitur anno secundo Joram, regis Juda. Capite autem viii. ver. 16, idem Joram, rex Israel, dicitur regnasse annis quinque antequam in Judam regnaret Joram, rex Juda; capite autem iii. ver. 1, dicitur regnasse anno 18 Josaphat. Hæc conciliare, salvâ utrâque scriptione, quicunque volunt, operam ludunt et ipsos Lectores. Verùm cautus Lector non facillè patitur sibi verba dari; nec videre non potest, cadere in eundem Sacrum Scriptorem non potuisse, ut unum regem Israel nunc diceret regnasse anno secundo, postquam regnare coeperat in Judam Joram, filius Josaphat, nunc regnasse annis quinque antequam regnaret idem Joram, rex Juda. Ergo assentimur Lud. Cappello sic statuenti: "Impossibile est omnino has duas temporis notationes simul consistere: itaque necesse est in alterutro loco esse mendum." Negat Buxtorfius Anticrit. Part. ii. cap. 13, p. 939, hæc non posse conciliari, quæ tamen non conciliat, sed confugit, ut solet, ad Rabbinos suos, quorum, ridiculos commentarios postquam exposuit, in medium profert Petrum Martyrem sic aientem: "Aliqui volunt Librarium errore mendum irrepsisse, sed hoc ego cuneo ad istos nodos dissolvendos minime utor." Verum Petro Martyre sapientior fuerat ille Conradus Pellicanus, cuius hæc verba Buxtorfius referebat: "Mihi nullum est dubium, Libri autorem verissimè scripsisse: sed pro temporum longitudine potuisse in numeris fuisse vitiatos Codices, maxime cum hic confusionis fenestram aperiat nomenclaturam similitudo in filiis tam Achab, quam Josaphat." Atque ille Conradus Pellicanus, postquam nodum solvere sic tentavit, "satis vero simile potest haberi, si dicatur Josaphat post occisum Achab administrasse regnum Israel, usque ad annum mortis suæ, cum filiis Achab; quo mortuo, solus regnaverit Ochozias filius Achab biennio, post quod uterque Joram, tam filius Achab, quam Joram filius, et Ochozias nepos Josaphat, suis præfuisse regnis, usque ad cladem utriusque per Jehu, qui utrosque occidit," videns quam vana hæc essent, ita concludit: "ignorantiam tamen malo fateri, quam aliquid definire contra Scripturam." Ut mirum sit eum fuisse à Buxtorfio iis annumeratum, qui hæc conciliare se putant posse. Nobis quidem videtur, errorem Scribæ fuisse, ut verba quædam omitteret, quæ cum absint, oritur hæc locorum pugna parallelorum. Certe in quibusdam Codicibus hæc verba, בשרו שנתו, à lineâ ponuntur, ut aliam sententiam ordiri videantur non perficere jam inceptam. Eodem Scribæ errore omissum fuit אחי, frater ejus, ut mox diximus: Vide Græcos Intt. in quibus non hæc leguntur, quæ pugnant cum locis parallelis. Au. Ver.—3 And the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away thy master from thy head to day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

Sons of the prophets.

Bp. Patrick.—By the "sons of the prophets" are meant the scholars of the prophets, whom they educated, and trained up in religion and piety; and God, by degrees, bestowed on some of them the spirit of prophecy. It seems to me very probable, that these sons of the prophets were such ministers to the prophets, as the evangelists were to the apostles: whom the prophets sent to publish their prophecies and instructions to the people, where they could not go themselves. And perhaps they taught them the law of God, and explained it to them; of which there was great need in those idolatrous times.

From thy head.

Pool.—From thy head, Heb., from above thy head; which phrase may respect, either, 1 The manner of sitting in schools, where the scholar sat at his master's feet, Deut. xxxiii. 3; Acts xxii. 3. Or, 2 The manner of Elijah's translation, which was to be by a power sent from heaven, to take him up thither.

They allude to their manner of sitting in their school, when they say God would "take away Elijah from his head:" that is, deprive him of his instructions. For, it is well known, that the scholars sat below at their master's feet, and the master above over their head, when they taught them.

Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.] Say no more of it: I would not be disturbed with the thoughts of it. Or, let not my master know that I understand it.

Ver. 8.

Au. Ver.—8 And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground.

Mantle. See notes on Josh. vii. 21, p. 43.

Bp. Patrick.—This mantle of Elijah's is mentioned five times in these books; thrice in this chapter, and twice in 1 Kings xix. 13, 19. In all which places it is called adareth; which is a word signifying a royal robe, as well as a prophetic (Jonah iii. 6). The LXX in all the five places now mentioned, translate it μηλωτή, which properly signifies the prophetic mantle to be made of lamb-skin: being an upper garment thrown over the shoulders, and some think coming down to the heels.

Ver. 9.

וַיִּחַרְגֵּם יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל
וַיִּחַרְגֵּם יְיָ אֱלֹהֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל

— γενηθήτω δὴ διπλὴ ἐν πνεύματί σου ἐπ' ἐμέ.

Au. Ver.—6 And it came to pass when they were gone, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask, what shall I do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Elisha said, I pray thee let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me.

A double portion.

Pool.—Either, 1 Double to what is in thee; which it seems not probable that he had confidence either to ask, or to expect. Or rather, 2 Double to what the rest of the sons of the prophets may receive at thy request upon this occasion. He alludes to the double portion of the first-born [so Houb., Patrick, Clarke], Deut. xxi. 17. But though Elisha desired no more, yet God gave him more than he desired or expected: and he seems to have had a greater portion of the prophetic and miraculous gifts of God's Spirit than Elijah had.

Ver. 12.

וַיִּשְׁתָּא וַיִּשְׁתָּא וַיִּשְׁתָּא

καὶ Ἑλισαίῃ ἑώρα, καὶ ἐβόα, πάτερ, πάτερ ἄρμα Ἰσραὴλ καὶ ἰππεὺς αὐτοῦ κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—12 And Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

The chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof; who by thy example, and counsels, and prayers, and power with God, didst more for the defence and preservation of Israel, than all their chariots and horses, or other warlike provisions. The expression alludes to the form of chariots and horses, which he had seen. So Patrick, Maurer.

Houb.—12 רכב ישאל וסוסי, currus Israel et equi ejus. Chaldaeus et Arabs abeunt ad paraphrasin, ut dicant, Eliam fuisse meliorem Israeli, quàm currus et equites, atque hanc sententiam Clericus in suo Commentario fecit suam, quanquam longè petitam. Verius creditur, Elisæum nominasse, currum Israel, currum eum, quo Elias in cælum ferebatur, quia videbat ex fide spem Israel futuram, quæ in raptu Eliæ adumbrabatur; nos rapiemur...in æra.

Au. Ver.—14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and smote the waters, and said, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? and when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over.

Pool.—Where is the Lord God of Elijah? who at Elijah's request divided these waters, and is as able to do it again; and hath given me his spirit and office: and therefore I humbly beg, and confidently expect, his assistance in this matter. They parted; but these words after [Where is the God of Elijah?] are by many rendered otherwise, and that agreeably to the Hebrew, even himself? or, even the same? (which words they join with the former, as an emphatical addition, or repetition, which is usual in fervent prayers. But they may be rendered without an interrogation, thus, Surely he is, to wit, here present, and ready to help me. Or, Surely he is the same, to wit, to me, that he was to Elijah, as able and willing to work for me as for Elijah. Then the following words they render, as they are in the Hebrew, and he smote the water, and it was divided. By which repetition it may seem that he smote it twice, and that at the first smiting, the success did not answer his desire and expectation; which God so ordered, partly to keep him in a humble sense of his own insufficiency, that he might not be puffed up with the great gifts which he had now received; and partly to stir him up to a more lively exercise of faith and prayer.

Bp. Patrick.—Where is the Lord God of Elijah?] That is, let him show his presence with me, and his power, as he did with Elijah. But we do not translate these last words exactly, two words being left out, viz., aphhu, which the LXX put into one, ἀφφῶ, of which I know not the sense. And the Chaldee translates it, receive my petition; without any reason; those words carrying in them nothing of that signification. The best account of them is that which I meet with in a short dissertation by Joh. Frischmuthus, De Orig. et Prosapia Eliæ, where he observes, that Elisha having asked this question, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" answers himself in these words, Aph-hu, etiam ille adhuc superest; "yea, he is yet in being." Thus Abarbinel expresses the sense: "Though Elijah be not here, yet his God is." The servant is wanting, but not the Lord. The blessed God is still present, and will supply his place.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The Vulgate gives a strange turn to this verse: Et percussit aquas, et non sunt divisæ; et dixit, Ubi est Deus Eliæ etiam nunc? Percussitque aquas, et divisæ sunt huc et illuc. "And he smote the waters, but they did not divide; and he said, Where is the God of Elijah even now? And he struck the waters, and they were divided hither and thither." The act of striking the waters seems to be twice repeated in the verse, though we get rid of the second striking by rendering the second clause, when he also had smitten the waters: which has the same Hebrew words as the first, and which we translate, he smote the waters. The Vulgate supposes he smote once in vain, perhaps confiding too much in his own strength: and then having invoked the God of Elijah, he succeeded. This distinction is not followed by any of the other versions; nor is the clause, et non sunt divisæ, "and they divided not," expressed by the Hebrew text.

Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth. — 14 And he took the mantle of Elijah which had dropped from him, and smote the waters, but the waters were not divided [Vulg. and some copies of LXX]; and he said, Where now is Jehovah, the God of Elijah? And again he smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither: and Elisha passed over.

Houb.—14 ... ויחַדּוּ אֶת־הַמָּיִם, et dixit, ubi est (Dominus Deus Eliæ?) Ante hæc verba hæc addimus, et (aquæ) non sunt divisæ, quæ habet Vulgatus, quæque etiam legimus in Editione Græcorum Intt. Complutensi. Nam sine his verbis, Elisæi hæc verba, ubi est, &c. cortex sine medullâ essent. Propter eam conqueritur Elisæus, quod aquæ, semel percussæ, non dividantur, quod id acciderat, Eliâ ipsas non plusquam semel percutiente. Ergo necesse est, ubi narratur conquestum fuisse de aquis Elisæum, ibi etiam narrari, propter causam causam Elisæus conquereretur, atque adeo non divisas fuisse aquas. Pronum fuit, ut, cum olim sic legeretur, ויחַדּוּ אֶת־הַמָּיִם, Scriba incautus saltum faceret ex priori דָּרְסִים, ad posterius. ... ויחַדּוּ אֶת־הַמָּיִם, nunc. Nam etiam ipse, peregrinum ac redundans; quod vitium Veteres cum sentirent, abierunt ad aliam alii sententiam: vide Polyglotta. So Dathe.

Maurer.—14 ויחַדּוּ אֶת־הַמָּיִם ויחַדּוּ אֶת־הַמָּיִם "Qui hæc verba attente legit, facile suspicari potest, aliquid deesse. Nam quæ sequuntur verba, ubi est deus Eliæ? sunt hominis conquerentis, et repetita aquarum percussio indicat causam, ob quam conquestus erat Elisa, nempe aquam non esse divisam. Atque hæc ipsa verba, quæ contextus requirit, supplet Vulgatus, qui habet: percussit aquas et non sunt divisæ. Eadem habent LXX in editione Compl. Dathius. Sed interrogatio 'וגו' non est querentis, nec, si esset, inde sequeretur, excidisse 'וגו' ולא נחזי, quippe quod ex contextu orationis facile possit cogitando suppleri, sed est precantis et excitantis = faveat, sit mihi propitius deus Eliæ! Quod autem 'וגו' ante et post interrogationem legitur: scriptor Elisam inter percutiendum dei opem invocasse indicat. Probe etiam tenendum est, non dici: 'וגו'—'וגו'—'וגו' [ille ipse, qui Eliæ adfuit. Dathius legi jubet 'וגו', quod ne per grammaticam quidem licet.

Till he was ashamed. See notes on Judg. iii. 25, p. 185.

Till he was ashamed, i. e., to wit, to deny them any longer, lest they should think his denial proceeded from a neglect of his master, or a contempt of the sons of the prophets, or a secret content he took in his master's loss, that he might have his honour and power. Or, till they were ashamed [so Gesen.], because he did so oft and so obstinately deny their request.

The ground is barren.

Au. Ver.—23 And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and said unto him, Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

Bp. Patrick.—23 He went up from thence unto Beth-el.] It is very properly said he went up thither, because it stood upon a hill, and there was an ascent from Jericho thither (Josh viii. 3, 17); though Elijah and he, going another way, are said to go down to Beth-el (ver. 2).

There came forth little children out of the city.] The word naarim signifies "grown youth," [so Pool, Clarke], as well as little children; for Isaac, when he was twenty-eight years old, is called naar (Gen. xxii. 5, 12), and Joseph, when he was thirty (xli. 12), and Rehoboam, when he was forty (2 Chron. xiii. 7). And this is to be understood here of adult persons, who had a hatred to the prophet.

Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.] When they call upon Elisha to go up, they flouted, as Abarbinel thinks, at the ascension of Elijah to heaven [so Pool, Clarke]; the news of which had been brought thither, and reported by the prophets of that place. Which the idolaters laughed at, and bade Elisha go up to heaven also, that they might not be troubled with him. Thus I find also the author of the questions and answers, and Orthodoxos, understands these words; which were spoken, πρὸς διασυρμὸν τῆς τοῦ Ἠλίου ἀναλήψεως, "to reproach the assumption of Elijah:" as if they had said, λαμβανέτω καὶ σε πνεῦμα, "Let the Spirit take thee also," and cast thee upon some inaccessible mountain, that we may be rid of thee, as we are of him (Respons. 80).

Ver. 24.

Au. Ver.—24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and cursed them in the name of the Lord. And there came forth two she bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Elisha cursed them, i. e., pronounced a curse upon them, in the name of the Lord, בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה beshem Yehovah, by the name or authority of Jehovah. The spirit of their offence lies in their ridiculing a miracle of the Lord; the offence was against Him, and He punished it. It was no petulant humour of the prophet that caused him to pronounce this curse; it was God alone: had it proceeded from a wrong disposition of the prophet, no miracle would have been wrought in order to gratify it.

Children.

Pool, Patrick, and Clarke.—Young men.

Pool.—Forty and two children: this Hebrew word signifies not only young children, but those also who are grown up to maturity, as Gen. xxxii. 22; xxxiv. 4; xxxvii. 30; Ruth i. 5.

Gesen.—וַיִּ 1 One born, a son, poet. i. q. בן.

The eighteenth year. See notes on i. 17.

Pool.—The eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat. Quest. How can this be true, when Ahaziah, Jehoram's predecessor, who reigned two years, began his reign in Jehoshaphat's seventeenth year, 1 Kings xxii. 51? Answ. Either Ahaziah reigned the greatest part of two years, to wit, of the seventeenth and eighteenth years of Jehoshaphat, (parts of years being oft called years in the computation of times, both in Scripture and other authors,) and Jehoram began his reign towards the end of his eighteenth year; or Ahaziah reigned part of this two years with his father, and the rest after him.

Au. Ver.—4 And Mesha king of Moab was a sheepmaster, and rendered unto the king of Israel an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

A sheepmaster.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The original is נָקַד, of which the Septuagint could make nothing, and therefore retained the Hebrew word νωκῆδ: but the Chaldee has נִדִּי, “a sheepmaster;” Aquila has ποιμνιστροφος; and Symmachus, τρεφῶν βοσκηματα; all to the same sense. The original signifies one who marks or brands, probably from the marking of sheep. He fed many sheep, &c., and had them all marked in a particular way, in order to ascertain his property.

נָקַד obsol. root. 1. to prick, to point, to mark with points. Chald. id. whence נָקַד one who points a manuscript, punctator.

Arab. نَقَط pupugit serpens, but نَقَط punctis notavit.

2. To mark, i. e., to select, to separate out, what is of a better quality than the rest, which is done by marking it with a point,

&c. Arab. نَقَد. Hence نَقْد (see Camoos p. 424) a species of sheep and goats, short-legged and deformed, but distinguished for the length of their wool and hair, نَقْد the shepherd of such a flock. Hence, نَقْد pp. i. q. Arab. نَقْد a shepherd of flocks called نَقْد from the excellence of their wool. Then in a wider sense of the keeper of any cattle, a shepherd, herdsman, Am. i. 1; a sheep-owner, cattle-breeder, 2 Kings iii. 4, spoken of the king of the Moabites. See Bochart Hieroz. tom. i. p. 441. Thesaur. p. 909.

Bp. Patrick.—An hundred thousand rams. Ludolphus hath observed two things for the illustrating this history of the king of Moab, which seem to be very considerable. First, that this was not annual tribute, but satisfaction for damages which the Israelites had sustained in the war with them, or by their revolt from them, as the LXX understand it. And then the word ajil should not be translated a ram, but a wether; for one ram will serve a great many sheep (lib. i. Comment in Histor. Æthiop. cap. 3, n. 30).

Dathe.—אִילִים h. l. sunt verveces, quod tot aries in gregibus ali non solent. Clericus.

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom, &c.

Pool.—The king of Edom, i. e., the viceroy under Jehoshaphat, 1 Kings xxii. 47, here called king; either because he was so called and accounted by his own people, or because that word is sometimes used for any prince or chief ruler [so Patrick]. Nay, for the Lord hath called, &c.

Bp. Horsley.—13 The Vulgate makes it a question: "Quare congregavit Dominus?" Their reading must have been וַל יִהְיֶה, instead of וַל י: unless וַל י, which would be nearer to the modern text, may interrogate.

Houb.—Cui rex Israel; noli sic, quæso, postquam Dominus reges istos tres in unum coegit, ut eos traderet in manus Moab.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Make this valley full of ditches.] The word נַחַל nachal may be translated brook, as it is by the Vulgate and Septuagint. There probably was a river here, but it was now dry; and the prophet desires that they would enlarge the channel, and cut out various canals and reservoirs from it.

Bp. Horsley.—Ditches; rather, banks.

Au. Ver.—19 And ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall fell every good tree, and stop all wells of water, and mar [Heb., grieve] every good piece of land with stones.

Ye shall smite, &c.

Pool.—This is either, first, A command; and then the last clause is an exception from that law, Deut. xx. 19, which being delivered by a prophet, might be obeyed. Or rather, secondly, a prediction of their success, that they should have so full and complete a victory, that they should be able to do all which is here expressed.

Every fine tree.

Ged.—Every fine tree; i. e., according to most interpreters, every fruit tree. This was forbidden by the law of Moses: but, in the days of the kings, the laws of Moses were not strictly observed. After all, the word fine or good may here mean every goodly forest tree; which the law allowed to be felled, in an enemy's country.

And mar every good piece of land with stones. So Gesen., Lee.

Gesen.—פָּאַר (see Syr. and Arab.) fut. פָּאַר to have pain, to be sore.

Sept. ἀρχειώσατε. By a similar figure land left untillied is said to die, Gen. xlvii. 19; and vines destroyed by the hail are poetically said to be killed, Psalm lxxviii. 47.—Simonis regards פָּאַר as by Syriasm for פָּאַר, from. r. פָּאַר Syr. כָּב to harm, comp. פָּאַר for פָּאַר Job vii. 5; but this is unnecessary.

Au. Ver.—21 And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they gathered [Heb., were cried together] all that were able to put on armour [Heb., gird himself with a girdle], and upward, and stood in the border.

הַמִּלְלִים וַיָּכּוּ אִישׁ אֶת־רֵעֵהוּ וְגו'

23 καὶ εἶπον, αἷμα τοῦτο τῆς ῥομφαίας· καὶ ἐμαχέσασατο οἱ βασιλεῖς, καὶ ἐπάταξεν ἄνθρωπος τὸν πλησίον αὐτοῦ· κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—23 And they said, This is blood: the kings are surely slain [Heb., destroyed], and they have smitten one another: Now therefore Moab, to the spoil.

This is blood, the kings are surely slain, &c.
Houb., Horsley, Ged.—It is blood shed by the sword: the kings have fought together, and have smitten one another.

Houb.—הַדָּם הַזֶּה, hic est sanguis gladii, puncto minori post הַדָּם sublato, et posito post הַדָּם. Ita Græci Intt. αἷμα τοῦτο τῆς ῥομφαίας, sanguis hic est gladii; sic etiam Vulgatus; atque id plus habet significantiæ, quàm si dicas, hic est sanguis, non addito, ex cæde manare sanguinem. Propterea non jungimus הַדָּם ad נִחָרְבֵנוּ, ut cum cæteris convertamus, pugnando pugnant (reges).

Ver. 24.

וַיָּבֹאוּ אֶל־מַתְנַח יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיִּקְרְאוּ
וַיָּכּוּ אֶת־מוֹאָב וַיִּגְמְסוּ מִפְּנֵיהֶם
וַיַּפְרִיזוּהָ וְהָפֹת אֶת־מוֹאָב :

καὶ εἰσηλθὼν εἰς τὴν παρεμβολὴν Ἰσραὴλ· καὶ Ἰσραὴλ ἀνέστησαν καὶ ἐπάταξαν τὴν Μωὰβ· καὶ ἔφυγον ἀπὸ προσώπου αὐτῶν· καὶ εἰσηλθὼν εἰσπορευόμενοι καὶ τύπτοντες τὴν Μωὰβ.

Au. Ver.—24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they went forward smiting [or, smote in it even smiting] the Moabites, even in their country.

But they went forward, smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

Bp. Horsley.—Read, with Houbigant, וַיָּבֹאוּ בָּאִם הַזֶּה אֶת מוֹאָב; and they went on, going on and smiting the Moabites.

Ged.—24 But when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up, and attacked the Moabites, who fled before them. So they smote the Moabites completely, and demolished their cities.

So they smote the Moabites, &c. In translating this very difficult passage, which is evidently corrupted, I have followed a conjectural emendation.

Houb.—24 וַיָּבֹאוּ בָּאִם הַזֶּה: Triplex mendum.

Masora prius emendat, ut sit יכדו, quia Chaldaeus יכדו, et percusserunt; nec emendat יכדו, quod nihil significat ad יכדו adjunctum. Ultimū mendum יכדו, et percutere, Grammatici novi excusant, ex mendo legem sancientes, tanquam Hebræi scripsissent, percusserunt et percutere, pro percusserunt et percuterunt, in redintegratione sermonis, quem falsum Hebraismum non semel confutavimus. Melius scriptum habuere Græci Intt. qui καὶ εἰσῆλθον εἰσπορευόμενοι, καὶ τύπτοντες τὴν Μοάβ, et intraverunt ingredientes et percutientes regionem Moab; Legunt ... רבאו באים והכים; nam eos sic legisse facile persuadet loquendi hæc forma, quam planè Hebraicam Græco sermone persequuntur. Non inferioris notæ sit altera hæc scriptura. ... רבאו במ להכיה, et ingressi sunt in eos, ut percuterent (regionem Moab). Tamen scriptio prior anteferenda, quanquam hodiernæ non tam similis, quia suam habet ex Codice Græcorum autoritatem.

Dathe.—24 Sed cum castra Israëlitarum invaderent, hi illos conciderunt et in fugam verterunt. Irruperunt in eorum terram a) eamque destruxerunt.

a) Lectio textualis est יכדו (littera κ deficiente ut 1 Reg. xii. 12) et venit sc. Israël in eam, nempe in terram Moabiticam, nisi potius legendum est יכדו. Pluralem enim expresserunt versiones antiquæ. Nimirum ὁι ὁι: qui pro יכדו legisse videntur בא; Vulgatus: venerunt igitur, qui vicerant, et percusserunt Moab; יכדו כנסו ingressi sunt in eos. Unus Chaldaeus habet lectionem marginalem f. Keri יכדו et percusserunt. Quæ tamen oppido falsa est, quanquam Kennicollus eam in compluribus codd. invenit. Nam de clade et fuga Moabitarum modo dictum est. Jam sequitur de invasione Israëlitarum in terram Moabiticam et ejus vastatione.

Ver. 25.

— וְכָל-עֵצִי שֹׁב וַיִּלְּוּ עִירָהֶשֶׁתָּאִר
בְּכִנְיָהּ בְּקִיר חֲרָשֶׁת וַיִּסְפּוּ הַקְּלָעִים
וַיִּשְׁבּוּ:

ב'נ'א'

— καὶ πᾶν ἔξυλον ἀγαθὸν κατέβαλον ἕως τοῦ καταλιπεῖν τοὺς λίθους τοῦ τοίχου καθηρημένων· καὶ ἐκύλωσαν οἱ σφενδονῆται, καὶ ἐπάταξαν αὐτήν.

Au. Ver.—25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they stopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees; only in Kir-haraseth left they the stones thereof [Heb., until he left the stones thereof in Kir-haraseth]; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

And felled all the good trees. See notes on ver. 19.

Only in Kir-haraseth, &c.

Ged.—25 The walls of Kir-haraseth now only remained: and it the slingers had surrounded, and assaulted: 26 when the king of Moab, &c.

Houb.—25 Omnem arborem bonam evertunt. Simul funditores urbem Charoseth obsessam tamdiu percusserunt, donec lapides superfuervunt.

עד השאד אנני בקד ודשה, donec relictis sunt lapides ejus in Charoseth. Liqueat ordinem fuisse turbatum. Nam lapides ejus de urbe Charoseth dicuntur, quæ non antecessit in oratione, sed subsequitur, et nihil tam alienum Hebraico ab sermone, quàm affixa suum antecedere antecedens. Verus ordo est: רסנו הקלעים בקד ודשה ירכה עד השאד אנני, et circumsteterunt funditores murum Charoseth, et percusserunt eam, tamdiu dum lapides superfuerunt. Mutamus אנני in אננים; quia lapides sunt funditorum, non urbis. Non erat munus funditorum urbem demoliri; nec urbis mœnia diruta sunt, ut apparet ex versu 27, sed funditores, circum mœnia sparsi, lapides in urbem coniecerunt, ut cives lapidibus obruerent. Nullus Veterum Codicem Hebr. ut nunc est, exsequitur: alii mutant hod. scripturam, alii quædam addunt.

Dathe.—25 Vastantes oppida, et agros optimos congestis in eos lapidibus obruentes, aquarum fontes obstruentes et arbores frugiferas dejicientes, donec tandem lapides Kirhaseseth a) reliqui essent, quod oppidum cinxerunt funditores et oppugnare cœperunt.

a) Est dictio Hyperbolica.

Ver. 27.

וַיִּקַּח אֶת-בְּנוֹ הַבְּכוֹר אִשְׁרֵי-מִלְכָּה
מִתְחַיֵּי וַיַּעֲלֶהוּ עָלָהּ עַל-תַּחֲמֶה וַיְהִי
הַקָּהָף גָּדוֹל עַל-יִשְׂרָאֵל וַיִּסְעוּ מִעָלָיו
וַיִּשְׁבּוּ לְאָרֶץ:

καὶ ἔλαβε τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ τὸν πρωτότοκον, ὃν ἐβασίλευσεν ἀντ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀνένεγκεν αὐτὸν ὀλοκαῖωμα ἐπὶ τοῦ τείχους, καὶ ἐγένετο μετὰ μέλος μέγας ἐπὶ Ἰσραὴλ· καὶ ἀπῆραν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἐπέστρεψαν εἰς τὴν γῆν.

Au. Ver.—27 Then he took his eldest son that should have reigned in his stead, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall. And there was great indignation against Israel: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

Bp. Patrick.—Then he took his eldest son—and offered him for a burnt-offering.] Hereupon the king of Moab took his eldest son, and made him a sacrifice before them all, as the last desperate remedy, hoping thereby to obtain powerful help from his god, through so precious a sacrifice of the dearest thing he had unto him.

Abarinel, indeed, thinks that he offered the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he took prisoner in the late sally. But it could not be said of him, that this son was to reign in his stead; for the king of Judah made whom he pleased his deputy over Edom. And this would not have made the three kings withdraw the siege, but prosecute it with greater fury. And Abarinel acknowledges, that their wise men in Persikta and the Sanhedrin understand it as I do: and that some of them think he offered him, in imitation of Abraham, to the God of Israel, hoping to move him to be favourable to him. Which no less man than Grotius follows. And indeed it is highly probable, that this custom of offering human sacrifices sprung from the offering of Isaac, from whence the Moabites, who were neighbours to Canaan, learnt it.

There was great indignation against Israel.] Or, as it may be translated, "great repentance upon (or in, or among) Israel." That is, they were extremely sorry and troubled at this barbarous sacrifice, and wished they had not pushed on the war so far; which ended in such a horrid action, which brought an odium upon them. So Pool.

Ged.—27 On this, he took his eldest son, who should have reigned in his stead, and offered him an holocaust upon the wall: at which the Israelites were so greatly affected, that they departed from him and returned to their own land.

To whom did the King of Moab offer up his son? is a question about which interpreters are divided. I think it was to the tutelar divinity of the city: and that divinity I suppose to have been the sun.

Houb.—27 ויד קצח גורל על ישראל, et fuit ira magna super Israel. Intellige iram divinam, quæ populum Israel aliquâ plagâ, aut calamitate affecit, quia victoriâ suâ immoderate abutebantur. Sæpe in Sacris Codicibus, tacetur אלהים, Dei, post ויד, ira. Idem usus est in vocabulo קצח. Sic 1 Paral. xxvii. 24, postquam Joab censum populi habuisset additur, ויד בואה קצח על ישראל, et fuit propter hoc ira super Israel, ut significetur Deum fuisse Israelitis iratum. Illud verò קצח solitariè positum, tam sæpe in Sacris Libris recurrit, ut mirum sit Interpretes plerosque convertisse, indignatio Israel; cùm præsertim obstaret præpositio על, quæ similibus in locis alium habere significatum non potest, quàm contra, adversus; vide, si juvat Concordantias Buxtorfianas in verbo קצח.

Maurer.—[יה קצח גדול ונו.] Hæc de gravi quadam calamitate Israelitis a deo inflicta videntur intelligenda, cf. Jos. ix. 20; xxii. 20; 2 Chron. xix. 10, al. Alii tamen, nec male, reddunt: et magnum in Israelitis odium exarsit. Schulzius, Dathius: et magna indignatione commoti sunt Israelitæ, quod ferri non posse videtur.

CHAP. IV. 8.

וְשָׁם אִשָּׁה בְּדוֹלָה וְנוֹ —

— καὶ ἐκεῖ γυνὴ μεγάλη, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—8 And it fell on a day [Heb., there was a day], that Elisha passed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and she constrained him [Heb., laid hold on him] to eat bread.

Pool.—Was a great woman; for estate, or birth and quality. See Gen. xxiv. 35; 1 Sam. xxv. 2.

Houb.—8 אשה גדולה: Nos. mulier magnæ staturæ, ut Græci Intt. μεγάλη, magna. Plerique convertunt, mulier dives, tanquam femina hæc esset potens, quia גדל in viris aliquandò id significat. Sed præterquàm quòd hæc, quæ hîc narrantur, nihil minùs indicant, quàm fuisse eam feminam divitem ac illustrem, non conveniebat feminam, quæ in potestate viri est, titulo eo illustrari, qui virorum est, non uxorum, marito ipsarum vivente.

Ver. 13.

וַתֹּאמֶר בְּתוֹךְ עַמִּי אֲנִכִּי יִשְׁכֶּבֶת : —

— ἡ δὲ εἶπεν, ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ λαοῦ ἐγὼ εἰμι οἰκῶ.

Au. Ver.—13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold thou hast been careful for us with all this care: what is to be done for thee? wouldest thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host? And she answered, I dwell among mine own people.

Bp. Patrick.—I dwell among mine own people.] Whatsoever vexation any might suffer by the soldiers upon the borders, she tells him she lived safely and quietly among her friends and good neighbours; being so free from want that she needed not petition the king for anything.

Houb.—13 In medio populi mei ego habito. Habet הָיָה, de populo dictum, mediam plebem Sic Lib. 1, xiv. 7, propheta dicit Jeroboamo, ex Dei verbis הָיָה כְּחֹךְ הָעָם, extuli te de mediâ plebe; nam Jeroboam humili loco natus fuerat. Significat mulier conditionis suæ tenuitatem, per quam non licebat vel à rege, vel ab exercitûs duce inire aliquam gratiam, nec non se esse ab ambitione longè remotam.

Maurer.—13 Inter populares meos mecum habito tranquilla, procul ab aula aulæque negotiis. Schulz.

Ver. 18.

וַיִּנָּחֵל הַיֶּלֶד וַיְהִי הַיּוֹם וַיָּצֵא אֶל-אָבִיו וְגו' καὶ ἡδρύνθη τὸ παιδάριον· καὶ ἐγένετο ἡνίκα ἐξῆλθε πρὸς τὸν πατέρα αὐτοῦ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—18 And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.

Maurer.—18 הַיּוֹם] non significat aliquo die, aliquando, sed hoc tempore (1 Sam. xii. 17) sc. cum puer jam adolevisset.

Ver. 23.

Au. Ver.—And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither new moon nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be well [Heb., peace].

It shall be well.

Bp. Patrick.—In the Hebrew, "It is peace." That is, she prays him to believe that she went for no hurt; but for his and her benefit.

Ged.—Let me go, however. There is but one word in the original, signifying peace. I have followed the turn of the Latin Vulgate. We might also say: Very well; no matter; never mind.

Houb.—23 ואֵין הַלֵּךְ, tu vadis. Masora ואֵין הַלֵּךְ: sic lego in quatuor Codicibus; quidam הַלֵּךְ, sine ו. Melius ואֵין, quàm ואֵין: nam ה non omittitur eo in pronomine, nisi culpâ Librariorum. . . וַיֹּאמֶר שְׁלֹמֹה, et dixit, pax. Idem responsionis genus recurrit infra ver. 25, quæ responsio tum usurpatur, ubi rem eam, quæ agatur silentio premere velis; quasi diceretur, omitte hæc interrogare; apud me est, quid dicam, vel quid faciam.

Ver. 31, 32.

Houb.—31 וַיִּזְחֹק, et Giezi. Legendum וַיִּזְחֹק, ut alibi passim, et ut hoc loco duo Codices Orat. in quibus inconstantia hæc nominum propriorum scribendorum rarior multò est quàm in hodiernis Impressis.

32 הַבֵּיחָה: Circulo superno animadvertunt Codices: legitima forma est, vel הַבֵּיחָה, vel בֵּיחָה, in domum.

Ver. 34.

וַיִּנָּחֵר עָלָיו וְגו'

— καὶ διέκαμψεν ἐπ' αὐτόν, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—34 And he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

He stretched himself.

Gesen.—וַיִּנָּחֵר to bow oneself down, to prostrate oneself; spoken of Elisha as labouring to raise the dead child, 2 Kings iv. 34, 35, and he bowed himself upon him. Also 1 Kings xviii. 42 וַיִּנָּחֵר אֶת-הָאֲדָמָה and he bowed himself down upon the ground. This signification is demanded by the context, and is also unanimously expressed by all the ancient versions and interpreters; except Chald. and Arab. in 2 Kings. The Syriac has the same word under the form. ܢܚܝܬܐ

Ethpe. with which corresponds Chald. ܢܚܝܬܐ; the letters נ and ܢ being frequently interchanged.

Houb.—וַיִּנָּחֵר עָלָיו, et ei incubuit, non autem contraxit se, ut quidam putant, quasi Elisæus totum corpus suum contraxerit ad pueruli mensuram; nihil enim tale sonat Hebraicum verbum. Illi Veterum, qui vertunt Græcè, ἐνεφύσησεν, legere videntur, וַיִּנָּחֵר, et insufflavit.

Ver. 38.

וַיִּבְנֵי הַתְּבִיאִים וְשָׂבִים לִפְנֵי וְגו'

— καὶ υἱοὶ τῶν προφητῶν ἐκάθητο ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ. κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—38 And Elisha came again to Gilgal: and there was a dearth in the land; and the sons of the prophets were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.

Sons of the prophets. See notes on ii. 3.

Were sitting before him.

Bp. Horsley.—Rather with Vulgate, and Queen Elizabeth's Bible, "dwelt with him." Compare chap. vi. 1.

Ver. 39.

וַיֵּצֵא אֶחָד מֵאֲלֵהֶם דָּוָד לִלְקֹט אֶרֶץ

שְׂדֵה מֵלֵא בְגָדוֹ וְגו'

39 καὶ ἐξῆλθεν εἰς τὸν ἀγρὸν συλλέξαι ἀρίωθ· καὶ εὗρεν ἄμπελον ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, καὶ συνέλεξεν ἀπ' αὐτῆς πολὺν ἀγρίαν πλήρης τὸ μάτιον αὐτοῦ, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

Ged., Booth.—And one went out to the field to gather mallows, and found a wild-gourd, and gathered his lap full of wild-gourd leaves, and came, &c.

Gesen.—אֶרֶץ f. 1. light.

2. Plur. אֲרוֹת greens, green herbs, 2 Kings iv. 39. The idea of brightness, splendour, is often transferred in the Semitic tongues to verdure and flowers.

אֶרֶץ, c. comm. a young and pendulous shoot, hence a plant having such shoots; espec. a vine, grape-vine, (comp. salix=עֲלִיץ, pp. a rod, switch,) which where greater accuracy is required, as in laws, is called fully אֶרֶץ, Num. vi. 4; Judg. xiii. 14. Rarely spoken of other similar plants, as אֶרֶץ 2 Kings iv. 39 a wild vine [so Prof. Lee], bearing wild cucumbers.

אֶרֶץ plur. f. wild cucumbers, cucumeres asinini, which are egg-shaped, bitter, and burst on being touched and scatter their seeds, 2 Kings iv. 39. See Celsius Hierob. 1, p. 393 sq.—Others: colocynthides, and so Vulg. but these do not thus burst.

Prof. Lee.—אֶרֶץ, m. אֶרֶץ f. pl. אֲרוֹת and אֲרוֹת. Arab. ^سأَرْدُ durus, torridus, de solo.

אוֹר ^אæstus ignis, solis, &c. Light, lightning, Gen. i. 3—5; Job xxxviii. 3, 11, &c.; meton. that which gives light, A luminary, the sun, i. q., אֶרֶץ instrument, or place, of light, Psalm cxxxvi. 7. It has been supposed from one or two passages, that this word also signifies certain green herbs, as 2 Kings iv. 39. But herbs can hardly be meant here, for the context tells us, that the person sent to gather the אֶרֶץ, whatever that was, gathered it from a vine, אֶרֶץ, &c. [See Lee's Lex. p. 14.]

As to אֶרֶץ, occurring in 2 Kings iv. 39, I take it to be the Arabic ^سأَرْت (אֶרֶץ), spinæ species; and the intention of the gatherer to have been, to collect either the leaves or berries of this; which is, perhaps, the Egyptian thorn, and the leaves of which are, according to Prosper Alpinus, collected when green, and boiled in the broth of fowls, &c. [See Lee's Lex., p. 15.]

Celsius makes the אֶרֶץ, and אֶרֶץ, alluded to, to be the cucumis sylvestris; but, how this can be styled a vine אֶרֶץ, I am unable to see. Hierobot., pt. I., pp. 393—459.

אֶרֶץ, pl. fem. once, 2 Kings iv. 39. According to some, Mushrooms, found under the wild vine. According to Celsius, cucumis agrestis. But more probably the fox-grape: عنب العلب. See אֶרֶץ, p. 15, and Hierobot., tom. i., p. 393.

Houb.—39 וַיֵּצֵא אֶחָד מֵאֲלֵהֶם דָּוָד לִלְקֹט אֶרֶץ, vineam agri. Omnino legendum, וַיֵּצֵא אֶחָד מֵאֲלֵהֶם דָּוָד, ut Græci Intt. ἄμπελον ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ, vineam in agro. Nam vinea agri non significat Hebraicè, ut nec Latinè, vineam agrestem.

Ver. 41.

Au. Ver.—41 But he said, Then bring meal. And he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people that they may eat. And there was no harm [Heb., evil thing] in the pot.

Bring meal.

Ged., Booth.—41 But Elisha said: "Take meal, and throw [LXX, Syr., Chald., Arab.] it into the pot: " which being done, he said, &c.

Which being done. Although I have put these words in Italics, I doubt not much of their having been once in the text. And they are still in some copies of the Greek version. The present text has, and he threw; and Vulg. renders thus: Bring meal. And they brought it; and he threw, &c. No improbable reading. Ged.

Ver. 42.

Au. Ver.—42 And there came a man from Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God bread of the firstfruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk [or, in his scrip, or, garment] thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

Bread of the first-fruits.

Ged.—As first-fruit-bread.

Full ears of corn. See notes on Levit. ii. 14, vol. i., p. 394.

Gesen.—פֶּרֶץ m. c. suff. 2 Kings xix. 23; from the noun פֶּרֶץ, with the ending el, which perhaps may have a diminutive force; see in l.

1. A garden, orchard, park.

2. Meton. most prob. garden fruits, the produce of gardens, as earlier and more valued than those of the fields: just as with us the finer species of fruits and herbs are cultivated in gardens, and are superior to those growing in the fields. Thus פֶּרֶץ grit, Lev. ii. 14, i. e., grits or polenta of early grain, and so, by an easy ellipsis in a word so common, simply פֶּרֶץ Lev. xxiii. 14; 2 Kings iv. 42. In both the passages in Leviticus פֶּרֶץ is offered on the altar along with the first-fruits, with which also it is coupled in 2 Kings i. c. and we may perhaps understand grits or groats, polenta, ἀλφίτα, made from the new and earliest grain, i. e., fresh wheat or barley groats; in preparing which as an offering to God, the best and earliest ears were selected from garden wheat or other grain.—The Jewish interpretation therefore is not absurd, but opens the way to the true sense, viz., בגלל רכה וחסד a young and tender ear of grain: not a green ear.

In the husk thereof.

פֶּרֶץ obsol. root, perh. i. q. עָצַר, to bind together, to tie. Hence פֶּרֶץ m. sack, bag, scrip, from being drawn up and tied; once 2 Kings iv. 42.—Talmud פֶּרֶץ sack for straining; comp. also Gr. δὺλακος sack.

Prof. Lee.—פֶּרֶץ. The word is omitted by the LXX. Vulg. perd. Syr. ܦܪܥܐ, God.

Ver. 6.

Au. Ver.—6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

Houb.—6 מִסִּדְּרִי מִסִּדְּרִי, ut à leprâ eum retrahas, sive ut mandante te, eum sanet is propheta, quem tu habes. Sæpe reges facere hæc dicuntur, quæ, ut fiant, imperant. Itaque in litteris Syriæ regis nihil erat ambiguitatis. Sed rex Israel litteris non ambiguis lusus est, quia Elisæum Prophetam homo vera expers religionis parum noverat, famâ miraculorum ejus forsan ad eum nondum perlata. Nam Elisæum si animo præsentem habuisset talemque, qualis erat, novisset, Syriæ regis litterarum, qualis sententia esset, probè intellexisset.

Ver. 8.

Au. Ver.—8 Let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

Ged.—A prophet. 1 MS. reads a God. Perhaps both words stood originally in the text; and should be rendered a prophet of God.

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 So Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

Houb.—9 בסר, cum equitatu suo. Malè id Masoretæ vituperant. Nam בסר, cum equis suis, quam scriptionem in hodiernæ locum supponunt, idem omnino est, ac בסר. Sed sic legebant in Codicibus iis, quos ut scribendi normam sequebantur: habet בסר Codex Orat. 56.

Houb.—הסר, lepram. Quatuor Codices הסר, sine י, quod præstat; nulla enim Grammaticæ lex est, ut littera י in eo verbo interseratur.

Ver. 13.

Au. Ver.—13 And his servants came near, and spake unto him, and said, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, &c.

Au. Ver.—15 — Now therefore, I pray thee, take a blessing of thy servant.

Bp. Patrick.—A blessing.] A reward, or rather, a token of his gratitude to him; for the Hebrews call all gifts a blessing: the Hebrew word barac signifying not only benedicere, but benefacere.

Genen.—ברכה, 1. A blessing, benediction.

3 A gift, present, as signifying kindness and good-will, usually offered with congratulations and good wishes, Gen. xxxiii. 11; 1 Sam. xxv. 27; xxx. 26; 2 Kings v. 15, ברך the liberal soul, i.e., a munificent man, Prov. xi. 25. Syr. ܒܪܟܐ, Ethiop. በጸሐር: id.

Au. Ver.—17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant, two mules' burden of earth? for thy servant will henceforth offer neither burnt offering nor sacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord.

Shall there not then.

Au. Ver.—18 In this thing the Lord pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy servant in this thing.

Rimmon.

Bp. Patrick.—This was the god of the Syrians, but no author informs us what god this was, nor whence so called. Only many conjecture, because Rimmon in Hebrew signifies a pomegranate, that Venus is hereby meant, to whom such fruit was sacred. But Scaliger understands this to be Jupiter, the thunderer, as they called him. And our Selden thinks it is derived from rum, which signifies high. Whence Heysichius saith ὁ Παμὰς signifies ὕψιστος θεὸς, the most high God.

Dr. A. Clarke.—2 The god Rimmon, mentioned ver. 18, we meet with nowhere else in the Scriptures, unless it be the same which Stephen calls Remphan [so Pool]. Acts vii. 43. Selden thinks that Rimmon is the same with Elion, a god of the Phœnicians, borrowed undoubtedly from the עֵלִיִּן Elion, the Most High, of the Hebrews, one of the names of the supreme God, which attribute became a god of the Phœnicians. Hezychius has the word 'Ραμᾶς Ramas, which he translates ὁ ὑψίστος Θεός, the Most High God, which agrees very well with the Hebrew רִמּוֹן Rimmon, from רָמָה ramah, to make high, or exalt. And all these agree with the sun, as being the highest or most exalted in what is called the solar system. Some think Saturn is intended, and others Venus.

Gesen.—Rimmon, pr. n. a) A Syrian idol, 2 Kings v. 18; comp. pr. n. רִמְמוֹן and רִמְמוֹן; perh. the exalted, from ר. רָם no. I. [to be high]. Heych. 'Ραμᾶς ὁ ὑψίστος Θεός.

On my hand. So Houb., Dathe, Booth.

On my hand; or, arm [so Ged.], as that word sometimes signifies, both in Scripture and other authors; or, shoulder [so Patrick]; upon which the king leaned, either for state or for support.

When I bow myself down.

Houb.—18 בִּשְׁחֻלָּי, Dum ego inclinor. Hæc verba jungi quidem possunt cum sequentibus rebus, dum ego inclinabor ... ignoscet mihi Dominus. Sed Græci Intt. et Vulgatus, בִּשְׁחֻלָּי, dum ille inclinatur, quæ scriptio melius notat mutuam operam, quam Naaman Regi Syriæ præstabat, ut inclinaret se, dum ille se inclinabat ... בִּרְבִי, ob eam igitur causam, seu, quia non alium Deum sum adoraturus, quàm Deum Israel.

Ver. 19.

וַיֹּאמֶר לוֹ לֵךְ לְשָׁלוֹם בְּנִיִּךְ כְּבָרְתָּ אִתּוֹ
וַיֹּאמֶר לוֹ לֵךְ לְשָׁלוֹם בְּנִיִּךְ כְּבָרְתָּ אִתּוֹ

καὶ εἶπεν Ἑλισαίῃ πρὸς Ναυμάν, δεῦρο εἰς εἰρήνην καὶ ἀπῆλθεν ἀπ' αὐτοῦ εἰς Δεβραθὰ τῆς γῆς.

Au. Ver.—12 And he said unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way [Heb., a little piece of ground, as Gen. xxxv. 16].

Go in peace.

Pool.—Go in peace: these words may contain an answer, either, first, To his last petition, ver. 18; and so the sense may be this, Be not too solicitous about this matter;

go, and the peace or blessing of God go along with thee. So the prophet both prays to God to bless and direct him in this and all other things, and intimates that God would do so. Or, secondly, To the former, ver. 17; Trouble not thyself about any of our earth, but go to thine own land, and I wish thee from God, and doubt not but God will give thee, peace, i. e., his favour and other blessings, which are oft contained in this word, if thou dost persist in this religion which thou hast now received. Or rather, this is only a farewell salutation, wherewith the prophet dismisseth him without any further answer to his requests, or instruction about his doubt; which he forbore by the motion of God's Spirit, which sometimes gives and sometimes denies instructions to persons or people, as he thinks fit. See Acts xvi. 6, 7. And the prophet by the Spirit's direction might forbear to give him particular answers, partly because these matters were not of such importance as to concern the essence or foundation of religion; and partly because he was yet but a novice, and not able to bear all truths, which was for a time the condition of the apostles, John xvi. 12, nor fit to be pressed to the practice of the hardest duties, which Christ himself thought not convenient for his disciples, Matt. ix. 14—17. And therefore he at present accepts of his profession of the true, and his renunciation of the false religion; and of this declaration, that what he did in the temple of Rimmon should not now be (as he had formerly intended and practised it) a religious action towards the idol, but only a civil respect to his master. And what was necessary for him to know further about the lawfulness or sinfulness of that action, the prophet might take another and a more convenient time to inform him.

Bp. Patrick.—Go in peace.] The prophet did not condemn this, but bade him not trouble himself about this matter; for he did not offend against God's law, which was not intended for such as he was: though there are some of the Jews who think that these words, Go in peace, relate to the verse foregoing; that he need not to trouble himself about carrying earth with him out of the land of Israel to make an altar (for it doth not appear he gave him any), and so left this matter of bowing in the house of Rimmon undetermined. And no less a person than Bochartus hath a large dissertation about this whole matter; wherein he endeavours to defend their opinion, who think Naaman begs pardon for what he had done in times past, not for what he should continue to do; and renders these words (as Dr. Lightfoot also doth), "when I have bowed," &c. But this seems to me altogether improbable; for then he would not have mentioned what he did as the king's servant; but simply the idolatry he had committed in worshipping Rimmon. Besides, the Oriental versions, as well as the Greek and the Vulgar, and the Hebrew doctors generally, as well as Christian interpreters, understand it as we do, that he speaks of the future act of bowing; which, being only a civil action, and he declaring himself publicly to be a worshipper only of the God of Israel, he hoped would not be imputed to him as a sin. And so the famous Buxtorfius in a letter to Theod. Hackspan saith, Omnes, quotquot vidi, interpretes referunt ad futurum, &c. "All interpreters, as many as I have seen, refer this to the future, and not to the time past." And so doth the Chaldee paraphrast himself: and I am very much of the same opinion.

Dr. A. Clarke.—19 And he said unto him.] There is a most singular and important reading in one of De Rossi's MSS., which he numbers 191. It has in the margin 'ק אל, that is, "read אל, not, instead of ו, to him." Now this reading supposes that Naaman did ask permission from the prophet to worship in Rimmon's temple; to which the prophet answers, No; go in peace: that is, maintain thy holy resolutions, be a consistent worshipper of the true God, and avoid all idolatrous practices. Another MS., No. 383, appears first to have written ו to him, but to have corrected it immediately by inserting an א aleph after the ו vau; and thus, instead of making it אל no, it has made it אל lu, which is no word.

Houb.—וְשָׁלוֹם, vade cum pace. Non ei interdictit Elisæus, ne manum regis Syriæ fulciat, et cum eo se in Templo Remmon inclinet; quia Naaman palam profitetur, se Dei Israel fore cultorem, neque dubitabat, Syriæ regi ingratum non fore, ut eum Deum sequeretur, per quem fuerat leprâ mundatus. Homines religionem, cujus essent, victimis et sacrificiis profitebantur. Pollicitus est Naaman se victimas Deo Israel sacrificaturum. Itaque ex eo, quodd Naaman regi Syriæ, se inclinanti ante Remmon, opem ferebat, colligi non jam poterat, Deum Rem-mon ab ipso coli, tum quia isti Deo non sacrificabat, tum etiam quia coram eo non se inclinabat proprio Marte ac solus, sed tantum regi opem ferens, et munus suum administrans. Qui convertunt Præterito tempore, ignosce...quodd adorantis regis manum sustinuerim, quasi Naaman veniam oret ab Elizæo, quodd Deum Remmon adorârît, à sententia et à verbis ipsis non uno modo aberrant. Nam 1o. venia delicti talis petenda erat ab ipso Deo, quem jam tum Naaman agnoscebat, ut infra, non ab Elizæo. 2o. Quoniam mox Naaman pollicitus fuit se non alteri Deo, quam Domino sacrificaturum, si veniam oraret pro pristina suâ idololatriâ, diceret ignosce...quodd sacrificaverim Deo Remmon, adhibito utrobique eodem verbo sacrificare, quo verbo tanquam notâ religioni designandæ propria usus fuerat. 3o. Quodd pertinebat ut diceret, rex inititur manu meâ, &c. Neque enim hæc præcipua pars erat idololatriæ, sustinere manum regis adorantis; atque aded inutiliter id Naaman commemoraret. Itaque ipsa verba Naaman declarant eum orare veniam, non pro idololatriâ præteritâ, sed pro re aliâ, quæ forte videri posset pars Idololatriæ, nec tamen futura esset in Naaman, qui jam tum Deum verum colebat. At, inquit, Edm. Calmet, datam-ne fuisse ab Elizæo licentiam ministrare regi idolum adoranti? Quantæ id fuisset infamiz in Dei veri cultore? Quam pronum fuisset ut Naaman, qui idololatriæ ministraret, in idololatriam relaberetur? Respondetur primò nihil causæ fuisse, cur Propheta licentiam talem Naaman denegaret, si videbat fore, ut ea Naaman non abuteretur; quod vidisse prophetam, nullâ certâ ratione negari potest. Secundò, nulla id fuisse infamia cum jam tum notum esset omnibus, Naaman sacra facere Deo Israel, non Deo Syrorum: Tertiò periculum non fuisse ne Naaman ad Idololatriam relaberetur, quoniam rex non impediabat ne Naaman Deum Israel coleret; quod regem non impedisse liquet ex eo, quodd curat Naaman asportare secum glebas ex terra Israel, quibus glebis altare conficiat, Deum Israel palam adoraturus: denique Naaman non ministrasse idololatriæ, cum regis manum fulciret; quoniam hoc suo munere ita defungebatur, ut nullam partem obiret falsæ religionis. Nec certe Dei Remmon cultor Naaman videri poterat ipsis Syris, si nullam aliam opem regi præstabat, qui victimas suas, non autem victimas Naaman, offerebat. Is enim adorare censebatur, qui victimas offerebat. Urget Edm. Calmet. : si licentiam talem dederat Elizæus, cur non ea licentia Daniel utebatur? Non-ne enim poterat Daniel statuum regis adorare, ut, si minus religiosum, saltem civile obsequium regi exhiberet. Petit similitudinem Edm. Calmet ex rebus longè dissimilibus. Jubebat Nabuchodonosor ut statua ipsa sua coleretur; non jubebat rex Syrorum, ut Deus Remmon adoraretur.

De Rossi.—19 וי. "Singularis est lectio, quam ad marg. exhibet codex meus 191 hispanus, p וי lege nequaquam, ut propheta non concedat, quod Naaman petebat. At vero versiones omnes legunt ei, nec lectionem hanc sistunt in textu hodierni codices, excepto meo 380, in quo videtur primo lectum וי."

23 καὶ εἶπε, λάβε, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, &c.

Be content.

Gesen.—II. אֵץ pp. to will, to desire. Found only in Hiph. וַיֹּאמֶר to will, but used in two senses, viz.,

1 Of one who undertakes that which he wills. See notes on 1 Sam. xvii. 39, vol. ii. p. 426.

2 Of one willing to yield to the request or entreaty of another, implying passive volition, i. q., to be content, to consent, to please, sc. to do anything. Job vi. 28 וַיֹּאמֶר כִּי, be content, look upon me. 2 Kings vi. 3. Spec. a) Of one who yields and accepts a kindness offered; Judg. xvii. 11, and the Levite consented to dwell, etc. b) Of one who yields to sin; Hos. v. 11, for he consented and went after vanity, i. e., idols. c) Of God, who in his clemency yields to prayer; Job. vi. 9, that it may please God, and he destroy me.

22, 23. Changes of garments. See notes on ver. 5, and on Gen. xlv. 22, vol. i., p. 117.

Ver. 24.

Au. Ver.—44 And when he came to the tower [or, secret place], he took them from their hand, and bestowed them in the house : and he let the men go, and they departed.

To the tower.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The Chaldee, Septuagint, Syriac, and Arabic understand the word עֶפְלָי ophel, which we translate tower, as signifying a secret, dark, or hiding place. He was doing a deed of darkness, and he sought darkness to conceal it.

Au. Ver.—26 And he said unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive-yards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?

27 The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever, &c.

Sons of the prophets. See notes on ii. 3.

With thee.

Pool.—With thee, or, before thy face, i. e., under thy inspection and direction; where thou dost frequently dwell with us. Or, to thy face; which may be joined with the following words; and so the sense may be this, It is apparent to thy view that this place is too strait for us.

For it was borrowed. So Houb., Dathe, Gesen., and most commentators.

Beware, &c.

Maurer.—וְהַשְׂאֵר. Schulzius, Dathius, alii: cave tibi, quo minus in illum locum venias, sc. secure, nihil mali timens. De Wettius: cave, tibi, quo minus illum locum prætereas h. e., negligas. καὶ εἶπεν, οὐ πατάξεις, εἰ μὴ οὐδ' ἡχμαλώτευσας, ἐν ῥομφαίᾳ σου καὶ τόξῳ σου σὺ τῦπτεῖς' κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword and with thy bow? set bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

Bp. Patrick.—Wouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword.] As much as to say, thou wouldest not be so cruel, as in cold blood to kill those whom thou thyself hadst taken prisoners in a battle. Much more then are those to be spared who are not thy captives, but God's. Thou hast not taken them with thy sword, or with thy bow; but he hath brought them to thee, and delivered them into thy hand, not that thou mayest kill them, but use them kindly. To this purpose Ralbag (see Selden, De Jure Nat. et Gent. p. 745).

Bp. Horsley.—Wouldest thou smite? rather, Art thou about to smite? The force of the question is this, Are they whom thou art about to smite captives made by thy own sword and thy own bow? The prophet would insinuate that the king of Israel had no right over these persons, and so the Vulgate takes it. "Non percuties; neque enim cepisti eos gladio et arcu tuo, ut percutias."

Ged.—22 Thou shalt not smite: art thou wont to smite those even, whom thou hast made captives by thy sword and by thy bow?

Houb.—Noli percutere. An tu eos, quasi gladio tuo et arcu captivos feceris, interficere paras? Verbum pro verbo, an quia captivos fecisti, quasi diceret Elisæus; cur tu eos occideres, quos non tuis armis cepisti? Nam jus belli est, interficere eos, quos armis ceperis. Plerique sic habent אִיכָה, ut relativum quos, et ita convertunt, an quos tu gladio et arcu cepisti, interficeres, et videre hic sibi videntur, cum Grotio, argumentum à majori. Parcerea, inquit, captivis tuis, quanto magis iis, quos Dei benignitas tibi in manus dedit? Sed non modo id obscurum et longè petatum, sed etiam fundamento incerto positum. Neque enim Sacra Pagina docet reges Israel captivis suis, vi armorum factis, non autem in hostium fidem se tradentibus, parcere fuisse solitos.

Maurer.—Clericus, Schulzius, Dathius; alii: "num quos gladio et arcu, i. e., in bello captivos fecisti, concidere soles?" i. e., cum captivis tuis soleas ignoscere, multo magis his, quos non cepisti, ut ignoscas æquum est." Quæ interpretatio nimis artificiosa et coacta videtur. Suspicio mihi oritur, ante אִיכָה librarium incuria ortum esse ex præcedenti תִּנְחָה, quam conjecturam si probaveris, optimum sensum habebis hunc: Quos gladio et arcu captivos fecisti, hos cedis sc. cedito sc. ex jure belli Mosaico Deut. xx. 13. Atqui Syri illi non belli jure capti sunt, sed dei ductu ignari in hostium potestatem pervenerunt. Ergo iis parcendum est. Eandem hanc interpretationem etiam de Wettius in vers. secutus est. Hic autem ה, voci דָּבָהּ præmissum cum Gesenio Gr. ampl. p. 754, min §. 122, 2, pro articulo habuisse videtur, nam ne verbulo quidem tetigit hanc litteram, quum aliis in locis de mutata lectione soleat lectores admonere. Au. Ver.—25 And there was a great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until an ass's head was sold for four-score pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung for five pieces of silver.

Pool.—Pieces of silver, supposed to be shekels; and the common shekel being valued at fifteen pence of English money, this amounts to five pounds [so Patrick]. A cab; a measure containing twenty-four eggs [so Patrick]. Dove's dung; which they used not for fire, (for he is speaking here only of the scarcity of food,) but for food; which, if it seem incredible, it must be considered, first, That famine hath constrained people to eat things as improper and unfit for nourishment as this, as dry leather, and man's dung, as is implied Isaiah xxxvi. 12, and affirmed by grave historians. Secondly, that some creatures do usually eat the dung of others. Thirdly,

That dove's dung, though it be hotter than ordinary, might in other respects be fitter for nourishment than other, as being made of the best and purest grains, and having some moisture in it, &c. Fourthly, That this Hebrew word being of an obscure and doubtful signification, and no where else used, may be, and is by learned men, otherwise rendered and understood; either, first of the corn which is found in the crops of doves; or, secondly, of the guts and other inwards of doves; or rather, thirdly, of a sort of cicer [so Houb., Schulz., Dathe, Maurer, Clarke], or pease, which in the Arabic language (which is near akin to the Hebrew, and from which many words are explained) is called dove's dung; for this was a food much in use amongst the poorer Israelites, and was by all esteemed a very coarse food, and therefore fit to be joined with an ass's head; and a cab was the usual measure of all sorts of grains and fruits of that sort.

Bp. Patrick.—Fitches or lentiles.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The piece of silver was probably the drachm, worth about seven pence three farthings of our money; the whole amounting to about two pounds nine shillings. The cab was about a quart or three pints.—Dove's dung, דבונים. Whether this means pigeon's dung literally, or a kind of pulse, has been variously disputed by learned men. I shall content myself with asserting that it is probable a sort of pease are meant, which the Arabs to this day call by this name. "The garvanços, cicer, or chick pea," says Dr. Shaw, "has been taken for the pigeon's dung, mentioned in the siege of Samaria; and as the cicer is pointed at one end, and acquires an ash colour in parching, the first of which circumstances answers to the figure, the second to the usual colour of dove's dung, the supposition is by no means to be disregarded."

I should not omit saying that dove's dung is of great value in the East for its power in producing cucumbers, melons, &c., which has induced many learned men to take the words literally. Bochart has exhausted this subject, and concludes that a kind of pulse is meant. Most learned men are of his opinion.

Ged., Booth.—The fourth part of a kab of vetches at five shekels of silver.

Gesen.—חֲצִי יֹנִים לְחֶמֶשׁ יֹנִים (ר. חֲצִי cacavit) dove's dung [so Lee, Maurer], 2 K. vi. 25, Cheth. This may be taken literally; since it is not incredible that persons oppressed by severe famine should devour even the excrements of animals; comp. Celsii Hierobot. ii., p. 32. Rosenmüller ad Bocharti Hieroz. ii., p. 573. Still, it is not improbable, that some kind of vegetable food is to be here understood; just as the Arabs call the herb Kali, sparrows' dung, حرو العصفار; and as in Germ. asafœtida is called devils' dung. See Bochart Hieroz. ii., p. 580 sq. compared with Celsius l. c. p. 233, who shows that Bochart was mistaken in affirming that among the Arabs, doves' or sparrows' dung is a common epithet for chick peas or vetches fried. In Keri 2 Kings l. c. is רְבִיכִים q. v.

Prof. Lee.—רְבִיכִים, for רְבִיכִים, followed by יִכְיִם, kethiv, 2 Kings vi. 25, r. רְבִיכִים, pigeons' dung; which, it is probable enough, might have been sold as food during a close siege. Bochart, "non minus probabile,—," says Gesenius,—imagined that this was the name of some vegetable, Hieroz. ii., lib. i., p. 31; which Celsius, Hierob. ii. 30, seq. has shown to be groundless. It might have occurred both to Bochart and Gesenius, that it was not very likely to get any sort of vegetable in a closely besieged city.

Houb.—רְבִיכִים, conjuncte. Quidam Codices, רְבִיכִים, separate; alii רְבִיכִים conjuncte, cum uno י. Porro inepte Masora רְבִיכִים, quasi honestius id esset, quam רְבִיכִים, cum crederent significari stercus columbarum; de quo non agitur, sed de ciceribus, ut multis probat Sam. Pool.—If the Lord do not help thee [so Dathe], or, let not God help thee, as some both ancient and late interpreters render the words. So they are words of impatience, and rage, and a formal curse, wishing that God would not help her, as he could not, as Josephus, amongst others, understand it; which agrees too well with the character of the man, an infidel, and an idolater, and a wicked man, and at this time in a great rage, as appears from ver. 31. Or, they may be rendered thus, No; (as this Hebrew particle is sometimes used, as Job xx. 17; Psal. xxxiv. 5; xli. 2; l. 3; Prov. iii. 3, 25; xxxi. 4;) let the Lord help thee. So it may be taken, either, first, As a direction: No; do not cry to me, but to God, for help: God help thee, for I cannot. Or rather, secondly, As a profane scoff: No, come not to me, but go to him to whom Elisha directs you; pray to the Lord: you see how ready he is to help you, by his suffering you to come to this extremity; wait upon God for relief, as Elisha adviseth me; but I will wait no longer for him, ver. 33, and I will take a course with Elisha for thus abusing both me and my people with vain hopes. Or thus, The Lord (on whom forsooth thou and I are commanded to wait for help) will not help thee, as he could easily do, and would do, if he were so good as Elisha pretends; whence then shall I help thee? Out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-press? Dost thou ask of me corn or wine, which I want for myself?

Au. Ver.—31 Then he said, God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house, and the elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, See ye how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not the sound of his master's feet behind him?

Bp. Horsley.—31, 32, "Then he said, God do so and more also to me, if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day. And he sent a man from before him. 32 But Elisha was sitting in his house, and the elders were sitting with him. Then ere the messenger came to him, he said," &c. See Houbigant.

Houb.—31 Dixit autem rex, Propetius sit mihi Deus, caput Elisæi, filii Saphat, hoc ipso die super eum non stabit. 32 Simul misit hominem qui sibi adstabat. Interea domi sedebat Elisæus, sedebantque una seniores, antequam satellites ad eum veniret. Tum senioribus dixit, &c.

32 ...וַיֹּאמֶר: Sic habet hod. Contextus:

Elisæus domi sedebat, et senes sedebant cum eo, et misit virum a conspectu suo, antequam veniret nuntius ad eum; ille autem dixit senibus... Ordinem fuisse turbatum lectori diligentius consideranti perspicuum erit, ordinemque eum esse restituendum, quem nos in versione sequimur, ut postquam dixit Joram, non stabit caput Elisæi super ipsum, continuo subdatur, et misit a conspectu suo virum, nempe interfectorem. Quod si quis ordinem, quem nunc habemus, tueri conabitur, ex eo quæro, quid hæc sibi velint, et misit virum a conspectu suo, antequam adveniret ad eum nuntius. Elisæum liquet non esse eum, qui mittat. Quod si rex est, qui mittit, qui tandem mittere hominem dicitur, antequam ille homo, qui idem est nuntius, veniat ad Elisæum. Luce clarius est, tò antequam pertinere ad Elisæum, qui sedebat domi, antequam nuntius a rege missus adveniret; itaque illud antequam, post sedebat, esse collocandum, et hæc, quæ intercedunt, misit hominem e conspectu suo, esse in superioribus locanda post וַיִּשַׁב, sive ante וַיִּשַׁב. Ordinis permiscendi occasionem habuerit scriba in vocabulis duobus וַיִּשַׁב et וַיִּשַׁב, nonnihil similibus, ut poneret וַיִּשַׁב, et quæ sequuntur usque ad וַיִּשַׁב, ubi scribendum fuerat וַיִּשַׁב et duo verba subsequencia. Græci Intt. pro וַיִּשַׁב, legunt וַיִּשַׁב, ante se, quasi Joram ad Elisæum postea esset venturus; similiter Syrus, qui quidem, ut ordinem expediret, addidit conjunctionem ante וַיִּשַׁב, ut וַיִּשַׁב, esset, antequam autem, pertineretque וַיִּשַׁב ad ea, quæ subsequuntur; quomodo et apud Vulgatum. Verum non quadrat in seriem וַיִּשַׁב, ubi sequitur וַיִּשַׁב, ille autem dixit... Quippe idem esset ac si Latine diceret, antequam autem veniret nuntius, ille autem dixit.

Au. Ver.—33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, this evil is of the Lord; what should I wait for the Lord any longer?

Ged.—While he was yet talking with them, lo! the king himself came down to him, and said: "Since from the Lord is all this evil, what have I, henceforth, to expect from the Lord?"

King. All the copies and versions have messenger: but it is an evident corruption, to me at least; and the true reading is king. So the author of Commentaries and Essays.

Dathe, Booth.—33 And while he was yet talking with them, the messenger came, and the king who had followed him, and he said, Behold, &c.

Et rex qui cum secutus fuerat. Hæc splendida esse, et regem, quem fortasse jussi sui pœnitebat, nuncium illum, quem miserat, esse subsequutum, apparet partim ex sequentibus verbis, quæ non possunt esse nisi ipsius regis, partim ex sequentis capitis septimi versu 17 et 18.—Dathe.

Houb.—33 וְנִשְׁלַח, et dixit, nuntius. (Quid amplius Dominum expectem.) Ex quibus verbis, colligere licet antea dixisse Elisæum, expectate Dominum, aut quid simile. Nescio cur Syri Latinus Interpres, dixit Elisæus, addito Elisæus; neque enim hæc verba conveniunt in Elisæum. Convenirent potius in regem, quam ejus in satellitem, וְנִשְׁלַח. Atque haud scio an legendum וְנִשְׁלַח, rex. Nam cum mox dixerit Elisæus, en sonitus pedum ejus post eum, apparet regem venisse ad Elisæum. Forte quædam perierunt quæ inter וְנִשְׁלַח et וְנִשְׁלַח, olim legerentur, quæque docerent, venisse ad Elisæum, post satellitem, ipsum regem, ut infra narratur vii. 17. Jusserat Elisæus, ne sinerent satellitem intrare; sic ut non videretur, satellitem potuisse adire ad Elisæum.

Bp. Patrick.—33 Some imagine that the messenger being come, spake these words in the king's name; but it seems more reasonable to think the king, who was also come, spake them himself [so Bp. Horsley], in a fit of raging despair. He could not but acknowledge that the Lord had brought them into this distress. Upon which Elisha exhorted him to wait till he would please (who only could do it) to deliver them. But he impatiently answered, he had waited so long in vain, that he had no hope left, since they were driven to such extremity that women ate their own children. Or these words may be thus interpreted (taking the former part of them to be spoken by the prophet, and the latter by the king), And he said (that is, the prophet said), Acknowledge the hand of God in this evil, which comes from him. To which the king replied, And what else can I expect from the Lord, unless it be such plagues? No, saith Elisha in the very next words, ye shall have plenty here to-morrow.

The kings of the Hittites.

Bp. Patrick.—Those people of the land of Canaan called Hittites, who dwelt about Hebron and Beer-sheba, were rooted out by the Israelites. But either some of them fled, and settled themselves in some neighbouring country, and there grew very populous; or else, we are to understand by the kings of the Hittites (as Josephus doth), the kings τῶν νήσων, of the isles, lib. ix. Antiq. cap. 2. As if chittim was the same with cetim, as all isles, he saith, are called. Au. Ver.—13 And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in the city [Heb., in it], (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel that are left in it: behold, I say, they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

Pool.—So the sense is, We may well venture these horses, though we have no more, because both they and we are ready to perish through hunger; and therefore let us use them whilst we may for our common good, or to make the discovery. But the repetition of the phrase seems to imply something more emphatical and significant than the saving of four or five horses, for which it is not probable they would be so much concerned in their circumstances. The words therefore may be rendered otherwise, Behold, they are of a truth (the Hebrew prefix caph being not here a note of similitude, as the other translations make it, and as it is commonly used; but an affirmation of the truth and certainty of the things, as it is taken Numb. xi. 1; Dent. ix. 10; Hos. iv. 4; v. 10; John i. 14) all the multitude of the horses of Israel that are left in it (to wit, in the city); behold, I say, they are even all the multitude of the horses of the Israelites which (i. e. which multitude) are consumed, i. e. reduced to this small number, all consumed except these five. And thus the vulgar Latin, and some others, understand it. And this was indeed a memorable passage, and worthy of a double behold, to show what mischief the famine had done both upon men and beasts, and to what a low ebb the king of Israel was come, that all his troops of horses, to which he had trusted, were shrunk to so small a number.

Ken.—Several instances have been given of words improperly repeated by Jewish transcribers; who have been careless enough to make such mistakes, and yet cautious not to alter or erase, for fear of discoveries. This verse furnishes another instance, in a careless repetition of seven Hebrew words, thus:

1 הנשארים אשר נשארו בה חנם
נשארו בה חנם
2 ככל החמון ישראל אשר
2 ככל חמון ישראל אשר תמו

The exact English of this verse is—And the servant said, Let them take now five of the remaining horses, which remain in it; behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel, which [remain in it; behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel, which] are consumed: and let us send, and see. Whoever considers, that the second set of these seven words is neither in the Greek, nor Syriac versions; and that those translators who suppose these words to be genuine, alter them, to make them look like sense; will probably allow them to have been at first an improper repetition—consequently, to be now an interpolation strangely continued in the sacred text. The preceding remarks are strongly confirmed by our oldest Hebrew MS. with thirty-five others, in which these seven words are found but once only. So Horsley, Clarke.

Commentaries and Essays.—On this verse I would make the following remarks:—

First. There are seven words repeated here by mistake, which, as Dr. Kennicott observes in his Diss. Gen., Sect. 89, are not in seventy-six Hebrew MSS.; and these seven words omitted, the verse will be as follows. “And one of the servants answered and said, Let them take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left in it; behold they are, as all the multitude of Israel, that are consumed?” Still, however, of this I can make no sense. It may be asked, What are as all the multitude of Israel, that are consumed? The five horses, that were to be sent? or, all the horses, that remained? or how any horses that remained were like a multitude, that was consumed? Here seems no meaning; at least one difficult to find out. Some other correction therefore seems necessary.

Secondly. It is said, “Let them take five of the horses, that remain.” We are not told, however, how many horses did remain, which yet seems intended. One MS. hath אחד, instead of חמשה; another had אחד אחד, instead of חמשה אחד.

Thirdly. Instead of ככל many MSS. read בכל, “in,” or, “of,” which may give a better sense. Vulgate, “in universa.” LXX have προς παν; they did not then read ככל, but might read בכל, as well as the Vulgate.

Fourthly. הנם is a particle of attention, or confirmation, and may be sometimes translated, “even, indeed, surely,” so Gen. vi. 7, ואני הנני I, even I.

With the help of these corrections the verse might be thus arranged.

ויקחו נא אחד מן חמשה חסוסים
הנשארים אשר נשארו בה חנם ככל
חמון ישראל אשר תמו

“Let them take, I pray thee, one of the five remaining horses, that are left in it” (הי perhaps “the city;” LXX, αδς), even they alone (i. e., are left) out of all the multitude of Israel, that are consumed.” ב often signifies, “of, out of,” 1 Sam. xi. 11, “so that two together were not left of, or, out of them” (נשארו בם) 2 Sam. ii. 31, “of Benjamin and Abner’s men” (ובנאשי אבנר). Or, as הנם may be here transferred from its usual place, for the sake of greater emphasis, the version might run more naturally in our idiom thus—“Let them take, I pray thee, the five remaining horses; lo! they (only) are what are left in it, out of all the multitude of Israel, that are consumed.” N. B. לכד, “alone, only,” is many times implied, where it is not expressed, as Ezek. xiv. 14, 20, compared with verses 16, 18, especially when there is an emphasis in the expression, as here, "lo! or, even, they only;" and Ruth i. 17, המות, Death alone. Whether anything here offered may tend to clear this obscure passage, I presume not to determine.

Dr. A. Clarke.—These seven words are wanting in more than forty of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS. In some others they are left without points; in others they have been written in, and afterwards blotted out; and in others four, in others five, of the seven words are omitted. De Rossi concludes thus: Nec verba hæc legunt. LXX, Vulg., Syrus simplex, Syrus Heptaplaris Parisiensis, Targum.

That are consumed.] The words אשר רצו should be translated, which are perfect; i. e., fit for service. The rest of the horses were either dead of the famine, killed for the subsistence of the besieged, or so weak as not to be able to perform such a journey.

Ged.—13 One of his servants answered, and said: "Let us take two of the five horses that remain here (for of the many that were in Israel these only remain unconsumed), and let us send to see."

Booth.—And one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, two of the five horses which remain (for, behold, they only remained, of all the multitude which were in Israel, unconsumed), and let us send and see.

בה ... והמון. The corrections proposed seem to be necessary. There is nothing said before to which the ה can refer as a relative, nor is it suitable to the idiom to insert the ה as an article, in such a construction as המון; בכל המון; The ה is wanting in the repeated clause. "Whoever considers, that the second set of these seven words is neither in the Greek nor Syriac versions; and that those translators, who suppose these words to be genuine, alter them, to make them look like sense; will probably allow them to have been at first an improper repetition—consequently, to be now an interpolation strangely continued in the sacred text." Though we omit the words noticed, the text seems corrupted. It is said, &c. והמון. "We are not told, however, how many horses did remain, which yet seems intended. One MS. hath אחד instead of המון; another had אחד primo; another hath אחד

Houb.—13 Sed enim ejus servorum unus; sine, quæso, inquit, ut de equitatu, qui nunc superest, quini equi abducantur. Non aliter eis eveniet, quam vel cætera plebi Israel, quæ nunc superstes est, vel plebi Israel, quæ jam interiit. Mittamus igitur, et habeamus rem exploratam.

Who spake.

Bp. Horsley.—Three of Kennicott's Codd. omit the two words וַיָּמָת וְגו'. Another, for וַיָּמָת, repeats the expression וַיָּמָת of the preceding clause. And this I take to be the true reading,—"as the man of God had said, as he said when," &c.

Then spake Elisha, &c.

Ged., Booth.—Before this period, Elisha had spoken, &c.

Pool.—Then: this particle of time may be understood either particularly and definitely of the time next following the former history, or more generally and indefinitely (as it is frequently used) of the time in which Elisha and this Shunammith woman lived. Possibly this might happen before the history of Naaman, chap. 5., or at least before the siege of Samaria, chap. vi.; but this is not certain.

Au. Ver.—10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover: howbeit the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die.

Pool.—Here is no contradiction; for the first words contain an answer to Ben-hadad's question, ver. 8, Shall I recover of this disease? To which the answer is, Thou mayest or shalt recover, i. e., notwithstanding thy disease, which is not mortal, and shall not take away thy life. The latter words contain the prophet's explication of or addition to that answer, which is, that he should die, not by the power of his disease, but by some other cause. But it is observable, that in the Hebrew text it is lo, the adverb, which signifies not [so Ken., Bp. Horsley]; which though most affirm to be put for lo, the pronoun, signifying to him; yet others take it as it lies, and translate the words thus, Say, Thou shalt not recover; for the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die. Or, according to the former reading, the first words may be taken interrogatively, Say unto him, Shalt thou indeed recover? (as thou dost flatter thyself:) no; (which negation is implied in the very question, and gathered from the following words;) for the Lord hath showed me that he shall surely die.

VOL. II.

Bp. Horsley.—Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover. According to the Cetib, the sense is just the reverse: "Go, say, Certainly thou shalt not recover." Dr. Kennicott prefers the Cetib, and I agree, notwithstanding the consent of the ancient versions in the sense given by the Keri. Houbigant's observation, that the repetition of the verb in the phrase וְהָרִאנִי הָיָה is a form never used but in affirmation, is erroneous. See Gen. iii. 3.

Houb.—10 חַזַּאֵל וְהָרִאנִי, dic, non convalescendo convalesces. Recte Masora וְ, ei, non וְ, non. Sic legebant omnes Veteres. Sed Judæaster quidam scripserit וְ pro וְ, ne mentiri videretur Elisæus, et cum non sentiret in his verbis, dic ei, certissime vives, contineri Elisæi exprobrationem tacitam, cum non nesciret Elisæus hominem de aula regia suo regi adulaturum. Qui tumentur scripturam וְ, ita exhibent Elisæum loquentem, tanquam diceret, convalescet Benadad, sed alio fato morietur, quia futurum erat, ut Hazael regem suum stragula madida suffocaret. Verum ne sic quidem non mentitur Elisæus; neque enim ex hoc morbo convaleuit Benadad. Etenim ægrotum regem Hazael stragula injecta suffocavit. Denique reintegrationis hæc וְ, vivendo vives, excludit negationem; neque enim talis scribendi forma unquam venit, nisi quando aliquid affirmatur.

Dathe.—Lectioni textuali s. ῥῶ Cetib marginalis s. Keri sine dubio præferenda est, quam etiam exhibent versiones antiquæ et complures codd. Kennicotti. Neque adeo magna mihi videtur difficultas, quam nonnulli interpretes in his verbis invenerunt, quasi nempe propheta non verum dicat, si Hasaëlem jubeat domino suo renunciare, eum convalesciturum esse, et tamen statim addat, eum esse moriturum. Nempe dicit Elisa, quod haud dubie factum fuisset, Benhadadi morbum non futurum esse lethalem, sed eum moriturum esse vi oppressum ab Hasaële. Priora verba igitur hic ad illum referre debebat; posteriora autem huic prædicebant, quid esset eventurum.

Maurer.—10 מִן־הַיּוֹם i, dic ei. מִן־K'ri (ut Lev. xi. 21; 1 Sam. ii. 3; 2 Sam. xvi. 18, al. cf. ad Exod. xxi. 8), quod ipsum exhibent complures libri et versiones antiquæ. מִן ita esse capiendum, nec tanquam negationem ad sequentia trahendum, cum ex eo patet, quod מִן non infinitivo absoluto, seq. verb. fin., rarissime tantum præponitur (E Gr. min., p. 236, ex.), tum maxime colligitur ex comm. 14, ubi Hasael, Elisæ verba referens dicit: הִנֵּנִי הָיָה. Ex morbo (cf. הָיָה הָיָה vs. 8, 9) utique evadere poteris, morbus tibi minime letalis erit. Sed ostendit mihi Jova, eum certo moriturum esse. Vates, divinitus edoctus, regem violenta morte moriturum esse (cf. vs. 15), ad quæstionem, num ille ex morbo, quo laboret, evasurus sit, respondet, morbum minime letalem fore; præterea vero de suo addit, se certo scire, regem nihilo secius moriturum esse. Sua sponte intelligitur, regi non nisi priora verba referenda fuisse. Schulzius sensum ita expedit: "Interrogas me nomine regis; equidem vero jam scio, quid ei responsi daturus sis, sive vitam sive mortem prædixero. Meo illi nomine vitam promittere statutum est tecum. Mihi vero ostendit Deus, eum certo moriturum esse." Ex hac interpretatione verba liberius ita vertenda essent: per me licet eas renunciatum regi, eum ex morbo evasurum esse. Mihi vero ostendit cet.

וַיַּעֲמֵד אֶת־פָּנָיו וַיִּשָּׂם עַד־גֵּשׁ וַיִּבְרַךְ אִישׁ הָאֲלֹהִים

καὶ παρέστη τῷ προσώπῳ αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἔθηκεν ἕως αἰσχύνῃς· καὶ ἔκλαυσεν ὁ ἄνθρωπος τοῦ Θεοῦ.

Au. Ver.—11 And he settled his countenance stedfastly [and set it], until he was ashamed: and the man of God wept.

Until he was ashamed. See notes on ii. 17, p. 880.

Pool.—He settled his countenance stedfastly; the prophet fixed his eyes upon Hazael. Until he was ashamed; either till the prophet was ashamed to look any longer upon him; or till Hazael [so Patrick] was ashamed, as apprehending that the prophet suspected or discerned something extraordinary and of an evil and shameful nature in him. The Hebrew words are ambiguous, and may indifferently be referred to either of them; but they seem more properly to belong to Hazael, because it follows, by way of distinction, the man of God wept.

Dr. A. Clarke.—He settled his countenance stedfastly. Of whom does the author speak? Of Hazael, or of Elisha? Several apply this action to the prophet.

The Septuagint, as it stands in the Complutensian and Antwerp Polyglots, makes the text very plain: Καὶ ἐστή Ἀζαὴλ κατὰ προσώπον αὐτοῦ, καὶ παρεθηκεν ἐνώπιον αὐτοῦ ὄντα, ἕως ἡσυχνέτο· καὶ ἐκλαυσεν ὁ ἄνθρωπος τοῦ Θεοῦ, And Hazael stood before his face, and he presented before him gifts till he was ashamed; and the man of God wept.

The Codex Vaticanus, and the Codex Alexandrinus, are nearly as the Hebrew. The Aldine edition agrees in some respects with the Complutensian; but all the Versions follow the Hebrew.

Ged., Booth.—Then looking [Booth., having looked] him stedfastly, and long, in the face, the man of God wept.

Houb.—11 וַיַּעֲמֵד פָּנָיו, et firmavit vultum suum. Hæc de Hazael dicuntur, quomodo et hæc, וַיַּעֲמֵד, et obstupuit diu multumque. Sed וַיַּעֲמֵד, pertinet ad Elisæum, ut liquet. Non esset Hebr. consuetudinis, ut tria verba de eodem homine acciperentur, nominativo eorum ad finem rejecto. Obstupuit Hazael in responso Elisæi, vel stuporem simulavit, cum celare vellet Elisæum, sui regis mortem non sibi fore ingratam.

Ver. 12.

וַיִּהְיֶה הָיָה הַבָּקָע: —

Au. Ver.—12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth my lord? And he answered, Because I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strong holds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

Rip up their women with child. So Gesen. and most commentators.

Bp. Patrick.—12 This last expresses the highest degree of barbarous cruelty; for which there was no occasion, if he did but kill the women with child, for the child in the womb would die with them, without ripping them up. Therefore, a late learned man, looking on this as a thing unheard of, will have the word haroth not to signify women with child, but castles or fortified places which he should demolish: though he cannot but acknowledge, that the cutting up women very naturally follows slaying their young men, and dashing their children, which goes just before. And he should have taken notice, that the very first evil he mentions that Hazael should do to them, is setting their strongholds on fire (Gousset, Comment. Linguæ Hebraicæ, p. 216).

Ver. 13.

וַיֵּאמֶר הַחֹזֶה לְכִי מָחָר עֲבָדְךָ הַגָּדֹל כִּי יַעֲשֶׂה הַדָּבָר הַגָּדֹל הַזֶּה וְגו' καὶ εἶπεν Ἀ(α)λ, Τίς ἐστὶν ὁ δοῦλός σου, ὁ κύων ὁ τεθνηκώς, ὅτι ποιήσει τὸ ῥῆμα τοῦτο; κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—13 And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, The Lord hath shewed me that thou shall be king over Syria.

Dr. A. Clarke.—But what, is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing? I believe this verse to be wrongly interpreted by the general run of commentators. It is generally understood that Hazael was struck with horror at the prediction; that these cruelties were most alien from his mind; that he then felt distressed and offended at the imputation of such evils to him; and yet, so little did he know his own heart, that when he got power, and had opportunity, he did the whole with a willing heart and a ready hand. On the contrary, I think he was delighted at the prospect; and his question rather implies a doubt whether a person so inconsiderable as he is shall ever have it in his power to do such great, not such evil things; for, in his sight, they had no turpitude. The Hebrew text stands thus: “But what! thy servant, this dog! that he should do this great work!” Or, “Can such a poor worthless fellow, such a dead dog [ὁ κύων ὁ τεθνηκώς, Sept.] perform such mighty actions? thou fillest me with surprise.”

And that this is the true sense, his immediate murder of his master on his return fully proves. “Our common version of these words of Hazael,” as Mr. Patten observes, “has stood in the front of many a fine declamation utterly wide of his real sentiment. His exclamation was not the result of horror; his expression has no tincture of it; but of the unexpected glimpse of a crown! The prophet’s answer is plainly calculated to satisfy the astonishment he had excited. A dog bears not, in Scripture, the character of a cruel, but of a despicable animal; nor does he who is shocked with its barbarity call it a great deed.”—David Vindicated.

Houb.—13 עבדך הכלב, servus tuus canis. Nos, non canis, sed homuncio, ne canis plus diceret Latine, quàm Hebraicè.

Ver. 14.

Au. Ver.—So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master: who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, He told me that thou shouldest surely recover.

That thou shouldest surely recover. See notes on ver. 10.

Booth.—That thou mayest assuredly recover.

Ver. 15.

וַיְהִי כַמָּחָרֶת וַיִּקַּח הַמַּכְבֵּד וַיִּטְבֹּל
בַּפִּימִים וַיִּפְרֹשׁ עַל־פָּנָיו וַיָּמָת וַיִּמָּלֶךְ
הַחֹזֶה לְכִי מָחָר :

καὶ ἐγένετο τῇ ἐπαύριον, καὶ ἔλαβε τὸ μαχβαρ καὶ ἔβαψεν ἐν τῷ ὕδατι, καὶ περιέβαλεν ἐπὶ τὸ πρόσωπον αὐτοῦ, καὶ ἀπέθανε· καὶ ἐβασίλευσεν Ἀ(α)λ ἀντ' αὐτοῦ.

Au. Ver.—15 And it came to pass on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, so that he died: and Hazael reigned in his stead.

Ged.—But, on the next day, having taken a fly-net dipped in water, and put it upon his face, he died: and Hazael reigned in his stead.

In rendering this verse I have departed from all the ancient versions, and most modern interpreters. They ascribe this action to Hazael, and make him smother the king. I am convinced that the text admits of no such meaning. Ben-hadad, encouraged by the reported answer of Elishah, makes use of a violent remedy to allay the heat of his fever; and claps on his face a wet net. This stops the perspiration; and he dies in consequence. So Booth.

Booth.—According to Josephus, this king was greatly beloved by his subjects; and if Hazael had murdered him, would he have been raised to the throne? We are not informed that Ben-hadad had any children; and Hazael might succeed him by the choice of the people.

Gesen.—מַכְרִי m. (r. כְּרִי no. 1) coarse cloth, i. e., of a coarse texture, perh. hair cloth, cilicium, 2 Kings viii. 15.—The idea of κωνωπίον, fly-net, proposed by J. D. Michaëlis, does not seem adapted to the context.

Prof. Lee.—מַכְרִי, carpet, or other coarse cloth. We find a similar thing recorded in the Persian history, entitled, Kholasat El Akhbar. (In my copy, p. 162, verso). The words are these, The Malik ordered that they should place a carpet on Abdallah's mouth, so that his life was cut off.

Maurer.—[יָשַׁם הַמֶּלֶךְ — רַחֵם] et sumsit Hasael velum culicare (sec. al. stragulum), immersit in aquam, et expandit in ejus (regis) faciem cet. h. e., tum Hasael ope reticuli (straguli) madefacti regem suffocavit. Ita interpretes numero plurimi. "At, inquit Schulzius, falso parricidii reus agitur Hasael, qui certe sub commatis nostri initium Subiectum propositionis neutiquam esse potest, alias enim nomen ejus non sub finem, sed sub initium versus nostri ponendum fuisset neque etiam patet ratio, cur stragulam (σπάργανον vertit Theodoretus Hebræum סכר veteribus interpretibus usus) aquis intingi et madefieri oportuisset, si Hasael ejus injectu suffocandi regis consilium cepisset." Verum enim vero, qui sub finem commatis 14 subiectum est, is utique etiam sub initium commatis 15, subiectum esse poterit! Atqui subiectum verbi יָשַׁם vs. 14. est Hasael. Quod autem attinet ad reticulum (stragulum?) madefactum, notissima res est, pannos aqua intinctos multo solidiores et aëri impervios fieri. Ex quo intelligitur, argumenta illa e diverso allata nullius esse momenti. Ceterum Schulzius hanc nobis proposuit interpretationem: postridie vero rex læto Hasaelis nuntio confirmatus stragulam sumtam aquis intinxit et faciei suæ maxime sine dubio sudanti obvelavit, ut refrigerio levaretur, ita vero evaporatione nimis cito impedita mortuus est.

Ver. 16.

Ἐν ἔτει πέμπτῳ τῷ Ἰωράμ υἱῷ Ἀχαάβ βασιλεῖ Ἰσραὴλ, καὶ Ἰωσαφὰτ βασιλεῖ Ἰούδα, ἐβασίλευσεν Ἰωράμ υἱὸς Ἰωσαφὰτ βασιλεὺς Ἰούδα.

Au. Ver.—16 And in the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah began to reign [Heb., reigned. 892. Began to reign in consort with his father].

See notes on ver. 17, and on i. 17.

Bp. Patrick.—16 All the seeming contradictions between this verse and chap. i. 17, and chap. iii. 1, are thus briefly reconciled by Huetius:—Jehoram beginning to reign with his father Jehoshaphat in his seventeenth year, and Joram king of Israel in his eighteenth, the first year of Joram king of Israel will fall out in the second year of Jehoram, king of Judah: whose father dying in the twenty-second year of his reign, Jehoram, king of Judah, began to reign alone in the fifth year of Joram king of Israel (see Demonstr. Evang. propos. iv. p. 204).

Ken.—16 This verse, when exactly rendered, is, And in the fifth year of Joram, the son of Ahab, king of Israel, and of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, Jehoram, the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, began to reign. In my General Dissertation, p. 44, notice was taken of the confusion here introduced (as Vignoles, Jackson, and other chronologers have remarked) by the interpolation of three Hebrew words, signifying et Jehosaphati regis Judæ. 'Tis certain, that Jehoshaphat reigned twenty-five years; and that Jehoram his son reigned but eight years; (1 Kings xxii. 42; 2 Kings viii. 17; 2 Chron. xx. 31; and xxi. 5); so that he could not have reigned during his father's life, without being king twenty years and eight years. I also specified several copies of the Vulgate, both written and printed, which are free from this interpolation. It was observed likewise, that these words are wanting in two Heb. MSS.; and lastly, that the Hexaplar Syr. MS., above 1000 years old, made from the Greek (now preserved at Paris), has not these words, though they are found in the Vat. and Alexand. MSS. So Luther, Dathe, Bp. Horsley, Clarke, Ged., Booth, Maurer.

Dr. A. Clarke.—These words, And of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, are wanting in three of Kennicott's and De Rossi's MSS., in the Complutensian and Aldine editions of the Septuagint, in the Peshito Syriac, in the Parisian Heptaplar Syriac, the Arabic, and in many copies of the Vulgate, collated by Dr. Kennicott and De Rossi, both printed and manuscript; to which may be added two MSS. in my own library, one of the fourteenth, the other of the eleventh century, and in what I judge to be the Editio Princeps of the Vulgate. And it is worthy of remark that in this latter work, after the fifteenth verse, ending with Quo mortuo regnavit Azahel pro eo, the following words are in a smaller character, Anno quinto Joram filii Achab regis Israel, regnavit Joram filius Josaphat rex Juda, Triginta, &c. We have already seen that it is supposed that Jehoshaphat associated his son with him in the kingdom; and that the fifth year in this place only regards Joram king of Israel, and not Jehoshaphat king of Judah. See the notes on chap. i. 17.

Houb. — 16 Anno quinto Joram, filii Achab, in Israel regnantis, regnavit in Judam rex Joram, filius Josaphat, regis Juda.

16 יהושפט מלך יהודה, et Josaphat, regis Juda. Hæc omittunt Syrus et Arabs, et Græci Intt. in Editione Complutensi, multi etiam Latini Codices. Certe habet id manifestam repugnantiam, ut annus quintus regni Joram, filii Achab, fuerit idem annus quintus regni Josaphat. Capite iii. versu 1, dictum est illum Joram initium regnandi fecisse anno regni Josaphat decimo octavo, et ipsa ex historia perspicuum est, Josaphat regem multo ante, quam illum Joram, regnare cœpisse. Vim faciunt verbis sacris, qui sic convertunt, anno quinto Joram, filii Achab, regnaverunt autem Josaphat in Judam, regnavit Joram, filius Josaphat. Nam talis scribendi forma peregrina est, et sine altero exemplo. Quod si convertas, regnabat etiam Josaphat in Judam, vel dum regnabat Josaphat, regnavit Joram, quasi Josaphat filium suum Joram fecisset regni socium, non minus vim facies his verbis, יהושפט מלך יהודה, quæ significant, et Josaphat regis Juda, non autem, Josaphat regnabat in Judam. Ergo sapientius hæc verba omittuntur ex autoritate Codicum multorum. Nos tamen tollimus tantum nomen יהושפט, legimusque מלך יהודה, regnavit in Judam, ne sine necessitate hæc duo verba omittantur; quanquam non difficile fuit, ut tria verba, quæ lineâ inferiore recurrunt, oculo Scribæ aberrante, fuerint iterata in linea superiore. Superest explicandum, quomodo Joram, filius Achab, regnaverit annis quinque, antequam regnaret Joram, filius Josaphat. Edm. Calmet, turbam sequens, ita interpretatur, regnavit annis quinque, antequam Joram, filius Josaphat, solus regnaret, existimans, fuisse Joram, filium Josaphat, in regni societatem vocatum, de qua societate altum silet pagina sacra, ut mirum sit eam adhiberi, annis regnorum computandis. Sed neque, si Joram cum patre Josaphat regnavit, nodus solvitur. Nam si fuit Joram rex factus anno patris Josaphat decimo sexto, ut credit Edm. Calmet, nec sic quidem demonstratur, quomodo Joram, filius Achab, regnaverit, antequam Joram, filius Josaphat, regnaret solus, annis tantum quinque. Quippe Josaphat regnavit viginti quinque annos. Ab anno decimo sexto regni Josaphat, usque ad annum ejusdem vigesimum quintum, intercedunt anni novem. Ergo regnaverit Joram, filius Josaphat, comite patre, annos novem. Utitur Edm. Calmet his annis novem, ut explicet, quomodo Joram, filius Achab, regnaverit anno secundo regni Joram, filii Josaphat, ut cap. i. 17, narratur. Nempe, inquit, regnavit filius Achab, anno secundo postquam Joram, filius Josaphat, fuerat in regnandi societatem vocatus, sive anno decimo octavo regni Josaphat; nec videt se in alios induci laqueos. Nunc enim quomodo planum faciet, filium Achab regnasse annis quinque, antequam filius Josaphat, solus regnaret? Nam ab anno Josaphat regnantis decimo octavo, usque ad vicesimum quintum quo Joram, filius Josaphat, solus regnavit, intercedunt anni septem, non autem quinque. Ergo hæc male consociantur, et facilius est errasse Scribas, quam Sacrum Scriptorem computasse annos, nunc ab eo, tempore, quo filius Josaphat solus regnavit, nunc ab eo, quo, patre consorte, regnavit, ubi præsertim de isto regni consortio nihil quidquam memorant Sacri Scriptores. Vide quæ diximus ad caput i. 17. Vide etiam præfationem de regnandi initio utroque Joram filii Achab, et Joram, filii Josaphat.

Ver. 17.

Au. Ver.—17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

See notes on ver. 16.

Bp. Patrick.—17 Part of which was his father, as I now observe, and the rest by himself. Dr. Lightfoot observing three dates of the beginning of his reign gives this account of it:—The first was when he was made viceroy with his father, at the time he went out of the land for the recovery of Ramoth-gilead. The second was when his father went upon his expedition with Jehoram, king of Israel, against Moab (chap. iii. of this book), from which time, he thinks, the beginning of his reign is fixed here, and in 2 Chron. xxi. 20. For after this time, Jehoshaphat was little at Jerusalem, but abroad either in his own land (which he perambulated that he might reduce the people to the true religion), or in Moab, to bring them into subjection (2 Chr. xix. 20). And lastly, at his father's death he was completely king of Judah 2 Chron. xxi. 1 (see Harm. of the Evang. Prolegom., sect. 6). So that the clearest solution of the difficulty mentioned in the foregoing verse is this (as Dr. Alix, a great man in this learning, and all others, hath observed to me), that Jehoram had three beginnings of his reign. One in the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat, when his father designed him to be king; the second in the twenty-third year of his father, when he was crowned; and the last when his father (after he had reigned five-and-twenty years) died; and he reigned alone a little more than four years. Thus Solomon was made king before his father died, and again after his death, as Abarbinel observes (see 1 Kings ii. 12).

Dr. A. Clarke.—He reigned eight years in Jerusalem.] Beginning with the fifth year of Joram, king of Israel. He reigned three years with Jehoshaphat his father, and five years alone; i. e., from A.M. 3112 to 3119, according to Archbishop Usher.

In the twelfth year of Joram.

Pool.—Object. It was in the eleventh year of Joram, chap. ix. 29. Ans. Either, first, He began to reign in the confines of Joram's eleventh and twelfth year, in the very end of his eleventh year, or towards the beginning of the twelfth, whence it is indifferently ascribed to the one or the other. Or, secondly, The one year of Ahaziah did concur with the latter half of Joram's eleventh year, and the former half of his twelfth year: and if he could not be said to begin to reign in both these years, yet he might unquestionably be said to reign in both of them; and the Heb. word, both here and chap. ix. 29, properly signifies he reigned, and not he began to reign, as it is translated. Or, thirdly, Ahaziah began to reign with his father, and during his life, according to the late examples both in Judah and Israel, there being also special occasion for it, by reason of Joram's cruel and long sickness, 2 Chron. xxi. 18, &c.; and this was in Joram's eleventh year, and then his father died, and he began his single reign in Joram's twelfth year.

Au. Ver.—13 Then they hasted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu is king [Heb., reigneth].

On the top of the stairs.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The Chaldee, the rabbins, and several interpreters understand this of the public sun-dial; which, in those ancient times, was formed of steps like stairs, each step serving to indicate, by its shadow, one hour, or such division of time as was commonly used in that country. This dial was, no doubt, in the most public place; and upon the top of it, or on the platform on the top, would be a very proper place to set Jehu, while they blew their trumpets, and proclaimed him king. The Hebrew סֻלָּה is the same word which is used chap. xx. 9, 10, 11, to signify the dial of Ahaz; and this was probably the very same dial on which that miracle was afterwards wrought: and this dial סֻלָּה from סָלָה, to go up, ascend, was most evidently made of steps; the shadows projected on which, by a gnomon, at the different elevations of the sun, would serve to show the popular divisions of time.

Au. Ver.—14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.)

Pool.—Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead; which interpreters conclude to have been taken by Joram before this time, though the taking of it be not mentioned. This they gather, first, from the mention of the inner chamber, ver. 2, and of the top of the stairs here; secondly, from ver. 15, Let none go forth out of the city. But these arguments seem not to be cogent. And if the city was taken, why should all Israel be there to keep it, for which a strong garrison was sufficient? The words therefore may be otherwise rendered, exactly according to the Hebrew, Joram had kept, or did keep (to wit, by his army left there,) or put guards, or laid siege at, or to, (for so the particle beth is oft used,) Ramoth-gilead. And therefore he had all Israel, i. e., all the military force of Israel, with him, that he might both maintain the siege, and withal oppose Hazael, who sought to relieve it.

Ged. — 14 Thus Jehu Ben-Joshaphat-Ben-Nimshi conspired against Joram ; while king Joram (who had, with all the Israelites, come to defend Ramoth-gilead against Hazael king of Syria) was gone back to Jezreel to be healed of the wounds, &c.

Au. Ver.—15 But king Joram [Heb., Jehoram] was returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians had given him [Heb., smote], when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, if it be your minds then let none go forth nor escape [Heb., let no escaper go, &c.] out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

Pool.—When he fought with Hazael ; when he came with an army, either to retake the city taken by Joram, or to raise the siege. Out of the city ; or, from the city ; either from within the city, or from before it, from the siege or army.

Au. Ver.—20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving [or, marching] is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously [Heb., in madness].

The son of Nimshi.

For he driveth furiously.

Bp. Patrick.—He was noted, it seems, for fierceness and eagerness in pursuing his designs. But the Chaldee paraphrast takes it quite otherwise, that "he drove slowly;" as if he would entice Joram to come out of the city and meet him, having no mind to engage in an assault or siege of Jezreel.

Gesen.—שָׁנַע in Kal not used, Arab. شَجَّ

Au. Ver.—22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many.

Bp. Horsley.—Is it peace, Jehu?—ἐπνυ- θανετο εἰ πάντα ἔχοι παλὼς τα κατὰ τὸ στρατοπέδον. Joseph. lib. ix., cap. vi., sec. 3. In the same manner he takes this expression in verses 17 and 18. And that this is the true sense of it, appears from verse 23, which seems to intimate that Jehu's reply to this salutation gave the king of Israel the first suspicion of treachery. Instead of Is it peace? therefore the English should be, Is all well?

What peace? rather "How well?"

Ged.—22 As soon as Joram saw Jehu, he said, "Jehu! comest thou peaceably?" Jehu answered, "How peaceably? so long as the idolatries of thy mother Jezebel and her numerous sorceries remain unpunished."

Ver. 24.

Au. Ver.—24 And Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he sunk down [Heb., bowed] in his chariot.

Au. Ver.—25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelhite: for remember how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, the Lord laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the blood [Heb., bloods] of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, saith the Lord: and I will requite thee in this plat [or, portion], saith the Lord. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the Lord.

25 Captain. See notes on Exod. xiv. 7, vol. i., p. 267.

For remember, how that, when I and thou rode together after Ahab.

Bp. Patrick.—In the Hebrew the words are exactly thus: "Remember, thou and I were among those who rode two and two together after Ahab," &c. That is, he was attended by his guard, who were wont to ride in pairs, two and two, and Jehu and Bidkar rode at that time together, and heard Elijah's words.

The Lord laid this burden upon him: This punishment, which is frequently by the prophets called a burden, Isaiah xiii. 1, &c., was denounced against Ahab, and extended to his son, 1 Kings xxi. 19, where these very words are not recorded, but Elijah said more than is there set down, which Jehu well remembered.

26 Surely.

Ged.—26 Saying, As surely, (saith the Lord) as I have seen the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his sons, recently shed here, so surely (saith the Lord) will I requite thee, on this same spot.—Therefore, &c. So Booth.

Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so, &c.

Houb., Horsley.—Read גם אחר הכר ורדו אל הכריתה; "smite him also; and they smote him in the chariot."

He fled to Megiddo and died there.

Pool.—Quest. How doth this agree with 2 Chron. xxii. 9, He sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, for he was hid in Samaria, and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, &c. Ans. Either, first, Samaria is there to be understood, not of the city, but of the kingdom or territory so called, 1 Kings xiii. 32, and elsewhere, in which Megiddo was. Or, secondly, If Samaria be the city, then the city is briefly and imperfectly described here, and the defects supplied there; (the Book of Chronicles being in great part written for that end, to supply things omitted in the Book of Kings;) and out of both the history may be thus completed: He fled first to Megiddo, and thence to Samaria, where he was caught, and thence brought to Jehu, and by his sentence was put to death at Megiddo, either because Jehu was there at that time upon some occasion, or for some other reason, which at this distance of time we cannot understand.

Bp. Patrick.—To Megiddo.] He could not get to his own country, and so sheltered himself at Megiddo, which was not far from Samaria, whither his servants carried him, as a safer place (for he was not mortally wounded), and there he hid himself for fear of Jehu, as we read 2 Chron. xxii. 9.

And died there.] Not at Megiddo; but being searched for and taken in Samaria, he was brought to Jehu at Jezreel, where he commanded him to be slain. Which seems to be beyond his commission; but as he was an idolater, so he was of the bloody house of Ahab by his mother's side, who was Ahab's daughter (viii. 18): and this destruction was of God (as the author of the second Book of Chronicles observes, xxii. 7), who prompted Jehu thus to understand his command. Thus Abarbinel understands those words, he died there. Not in Megiddo, mentioned before, but in that execution of God's judgments on the house of Ahab.

Dr. A. Clarke.—27 Fled by the way of the garden.] The account of the death of Ahaziah, as given in 2 Chron. xxii. 8, 9, is very different from that given here: When Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab—he sought Ahaziah; and they caught him (for he was hid in Samaria) and brought him to Jehu; and when they had slain him, they buried him. "The current of the story at large is this," says Dr. Lightfoot: "Jehu slayeth Joram in the field of Jezreel, as Ahaziah and Joram were together; Ahaziah, seeing this, flees, and gets into Samaria, and hides himself there. Jehu marcheth to Jezreel, and makes Jezebel dog's meat: from thence he sends to Samaria for the heads of Ahab's children and posterity; which are brought him by night, and showed to the people in the morning. Then he marcheth to Samaria, and by the way slayeth forty-two of Ahab's kinsmen; and findeth Jehonadab, the father of the Rechabites. Coming into Samaria, he maketh search for Ahaziah: they find him hid, bring him to Jehu, and he commands to carry him up towards Gur, by Ibleam, and there to slay him. It may be, his father Joram had slain his brethren there, as Ahab had done Naboth, in Jezreel. They do so; smite him there in his chariot; and his charioteer driveth away to Megiddo before he dies. The story in the Book of Kings is short; but the Book of Chronicles shows the order." Lightfoot's Works, vol. i., p. 88.

Ver. 29.

Au. Ver.—29 And in the eleventh year of Joram the son of Ahab began Ahaziah to reign over Judah [2 Chron. xxii. 9, about 886. Then he began to reign as viceroy to his father in his sickness, 2 Chr. xxi. 18, 19. But in Joram's 12th year he began to reign alone, ch. viii. 25, about 884.]

See notes on viii. 25.

Dr. A. Clarke.—In the eleventh year of Joram.] The note in our margin contains as good an account of this chronological difficulty as can be reasonably required: *Then he began to reign as viceroy to his father in his sickness; 2 Chron. xxi. 18, 19. Were with the great men of the city.

Maurer.—6 — וַיִּכְנֹס הַמֶּלֶךְ לְשִׁבְעִים אִישׁ. — Vulgo vertunt: proceres civitatis eos educaverant. Ita וַיִּכְנֹס ex sequi Hebraismo nominativo præpositum est, ut vi. 5, al. Fortasse tamen verti potest: cum proceribus civitatis, h. e., ita ut horum consuetudine uterentur, eos educaverant (hatte man sie erz., cf. ad Ex. v. 16.).

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, Ye be righteous: behold, I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

Pool.—To all the people; either, first, To the promiscuous multitude met there to gaze upon this sad and strange spectacle. So the sense is, Be not ye troubled nor affrighted: if anything be amiss in these actions, I do here publicly and solemnly acquit you as righteous and innocent; do not you therefore fear any vengeance from God or men for it: if there be any guilt, it is in me, and in those who cut off these heads. Or, secondly, To those who cut off and brought the heads; for the same persons did both, and were here present, as Jehu commanded them, ver. 6: to them he speaks in the audience of all the people; or by all the people may be meant all those who brought the heads, and were there waiting for Jehu, according to his order. So the speech is in part ironical, to this purpose, You are righteous in your own eyes, and you look upon me as a traitor, and rebel, and murderer, because I have risen against and slain my master, which I acknowledge I have done. But if I am guilty, you are not innocent, and therefore cannot accuse me; for I have killed one, but you a great number. This explication seems probable; only the Hebrew word ham being generally used of the common people, may seem not so fitly to agree to these rulers and great men, who had brought the heads; and that expression, to all the people, implies that Jehu did not direct his speech to some particular persons, but to the whole body of the people then present, whom he clears from all blame, and to whom he appeals as witnesses between him and these persons.

Ver. 11.

Au. Ver.—11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks [or, acquaintance], and his priests, until he left him none remaining.

His priests. See notes on 2 Sam. viii. 17, pp. 559—566.

Pool.—His priests; his domestic priests, which had waited upon Ahab and Jezebel in their idolatrous services, and were fed at the king's table. Compare 1 Kings xviii. 19. Or, his chief officers of state, as that word is sometimes used; of which see 2 Sam. viii. 18, compared with 1 Chron. xviii. 17. Object. These were included in his great men mentioned before. Ans. Yet may they well be mentioned apart, as a distinct and the most eminent sort of them. He left him none remaining, to wit, in that place and kingdom; for he did leave some of the royal seed of Judah, chap. xi. 1, 2.

Au. Ver.—12 And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the shearing house [Heb., house of shepherds binding sheep] in the way, 13 Jehu met [Heb., found] with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down to salute [Heb., to the peace of, &c.] the children of the king and the children of the queen.

Shearing house.

Pool.—Where they used to shear sheep, and then to feast, after their manner, 1 Sam. xxv. 36; 2 Sam. xiii. 23. Or this may be the name of a place, Beth-heked of the shepherds; or, Beth-heked-rohim.

Bp. Patrick.—At the shearing house in the way.] In the Hebrew the words are, “in the house of the shepherds’ binding [so Dathe].” For they bound the feet of their sheep when they sheared them; and this was the place where the shepherds of Samaria were wont to do it.

13 Brethren.

Pool.—The brethren; not strictly so, for they were killed before this, 2 Chr. xxi. 17; but his brethren's sons, as they are called, 2 Chron. xxii. 8, or others of his near kinsmen, such being oft called brethren in Scripture; as Gen. xiii. 8.

Au. Ver.—15 And when he was departed thence, he lighted on [Heb., found] Jehonadab the son of Rechab coming to meet him: and he saluted him [Heb., blessed], and said to him, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, give me thine hand, &c.

Bp. Horsley.—Is thine heart right? literally, is right with thy heart; i. e., Art thou a warm friend to justice? But I would read the whole passage thus,

הֵשֶׁךְ אִתְּךָ לֵבָבְךָ כַּאֲשֶׁר אִתְּךָ לֵבָבִי
וַיֵּאמֶר יְהוֹנָדָב יֵשׁ לִבִּי עִם
לֵבָבְךָ: וְיֵשׁ תְּנָחָה &c.

“Is justice in thy heart as in my heart? And Jonadab said, It is; my heart is with thy heart. Since it is, give thy hand,” &c.

Houb.—15 וַיֵּאמֶר אֵלָיו הֲיֵשׁ אִתְּךָ לֵבָבְךָ כַּאֲשֶׁר אִתְּךָ לֵבָבִי עִם־לֵבָבְךָ, num est cum corde meo cor tuum rectum? Omissum fuit לִבִּי ex similitudine ejus cum corde, לֵבָבְךָ; neque id omittunt Græci Intt. qui, καρδιά σου μετὰ καρδίας μου, cor tuum cum corde meo. Manifestum est, quoniam cor in posteriori membro bis legitur, similiter id bis legendum in priori. ... est igitur, idem ac, quoniam est. Hæc loquitur Jehu, Jonadabo respondens.

Dathe.—15 Hinc progressus occurrit Jonadabo, Rechabi filio, quem, ubi salutavit, interrogat, num animo a) sit tam benevolo in se, quam ipse in eum?

a) Clericus conjectat, approbante Hubigantio, post לְבָבִי לְבָבִי excidisse לְבָבִי. Sic sequenti membro melius respondet, et sic ol ó habent: Sed defendi potest lectio vulgaris, cum constet, לְבָבִי quoque nominativo præponi, et sic Vulgatus: numquid est cor tuum rectum? Item reliqui.

Maurer.—15 Præter necessitatem post Cler. Hubig. legi jussit (עַם) לְבָבִי לְבָבִי. LXX, liberius verterunt.

It is.

Bp. Patrick.—It is.] The expression is double in the Hebrew Yes, yes; to signify a vehement affection. Or, as a late learned writer (Gousset, in his Comment. Hebr. Linguae) will have it, the former is spoken by Jehonadab, who said It is: and the other by Jehu, who answered, "Is it? then give me thy hand," &c.

Pool.—Give me thine hand. These may be the words, either, 1. Of Jehu; and so here is an ellipsis, If it be, for And Jehu said, If it be. Compare 1 Kings xx. 34. Or, 2. Of Jehonadab, who having said, It is, adds, If it be, i. e., if thine heart be with mine, as thou sayest it is, give me thine hand. But this the ellipsis is larger than the former. And it seems not so decent and proper for Jehonadab, a stranger and subject, to speak thus to the king, as for the king to say so to him.

Ver. 16.

Houb., Ged., Booth.—So he made him ride.

Au. Ver.—25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt offering, that Jehu said to the guard and to the captains, Go in, and slay them; let none come forth. And they smote them with the edge [Heb., the mouth] of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

Captains. See notes on Exod. xiv. 7, vol. i., p. 267.

Dr. A. Clarke.—To the guard and to the captains.] To the couriers or runners, and the shalashim, the men of the third rank; those officers who were next to the nobles, the king and these being only their superiors. The runners were probably a sort of light infantry.

Gesen.—PART. פָּרָא a runner, courier, Jer. li. 31; Job ix. 25. Plur. רָצִים and רָצָן 2 Kings xi. 13, runners, couriers, i. e. a) The servants who ran before the chariot of a prince, q. d. running footmen, 2 Sam. xv. 1; 1 Kings i. 5. So Lat. cursores Suet. Pool.—As soon as he, i. e., the chief priest of Baal: see 2 Chron. xxiii. 17. Cast them out, i. e., cast their carcasses out of the city. But that was not proper work for the guard; nor could they so soon have done it; nor would they stay to do it, when they were going in haste to other work; nor indeed was it necessary to be done, because they intended to pull down the house and bury them in its ruins, and turn it into a draught-house, as it follows. This word therefore is and may be joined with the next, and both rendered, they went hastily and eagerly; properly, they flung themselves out, (hiphil for hithpahel, which is not unusual in the Hebrew language,) and went. The like expression is used Esth. vi. 12, hasted, Heb., pushed himself on, or flung himself, i. e., went with great haste; and in the Greek text, Mark xiv. 72. To the city of the house of Baal; either 1. To some city near to Samaria, where another eminent temple of Baal was erected. But this seems not to agree with the context, there being but one house or temple of Baal mentioned, both in the foregoing and following verses. Or rather, 2. To some buildings belonging to this house of Baal, which may be here called the city, either for some particular reason now unknown, or because they were very numerous and capacious. For as there were divers chambers and rooms built without the temple, belonging to it, for the use of the priests and Levites, &c.: so it may properly be conceived that this famous temple of Baal had many such buildings, in some of which the priests of Baal, or of the groves, (whereof there were great numbers belonging to the king's court, 1 Kings xviii. 19,) peradventure might dwell; and others of them might be for divers uses belonging to the house and service of Baal. And into these buildings the guard might go, and that hastily, to surprise and kill those inferior ministers of Baal, who were there employed in preparing things for the sacrifices which were to be offered, or in other services belonging to that house, or that solemnity.

Bp. Patrick.—They smote them—and the guard and the captains cast them out.] There is nothing in the Hebrew that answers to the word them: nor is it likely that the captains and soldiers troubled themselves to cast their bodies out of the temple; where they were rather buried in its ruins. But the meaning is, having done this execution, the guard and captains rushed out of the temple in great haste, and immediately ran to the city of the house of Baal, as it here follows.

Au. Ver.—2 But Jehosheba [2 Chron. xii. 11, Jehoshabeath] the daughter of king Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took Joash [or, Jehoash] the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain; and they hid him, even him and his nurse, in the bedchamber, from Athaliah, so that he was not slain.

Pool.—Joash the son of Ahaziah: either, 1. His adopted and legal son, who was to succeed him, though he was of another house, and of Nathan's family, as many think; such persons being sometimes called the sons of their predecessors. Or rather, 2. His proper and natural son; for not only he, but the rest who were slain, are here called the king's (i. e., Joram's) sons. From among the king's sons which were slain: either, 1. From amidst the carcasses, where this infant was laid, and supposed by her to be killed, though it was not quite dead. Or, 2. Out of that apartment of the palace which was allotted for the king's children. They hid him; Jehosheba and her husband Jehoiaha. In the bed-chamber; which was in the house of the Lord, as is affirmed in the next verse. So that it was one of those chambers adjoining or near to the temple, which were for the uses of the priests and Levites, and for them only; which made it more proper for this purpose.

And stole him.

Ged., Booth.—Whom she had stolen.

Au. Ver.—5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do ; A third part of you that enter in on the Sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the king's house.

Pool.—A third part of you; either, 1. A third part of you, (i. e., of the whole number, including those that come in and those that go out on the sabbath,) even they that enter in on the sabbath; and so the two other third parts were to consist of those that went out on the sabbath, as some gather from ver. 6, 7. Or rather, 2. A third part only of those that enter in on the sabbath [so Houb.], who seem to be plainly divided into three thirds here, and ver. 6, as those that went forth on the sabbath are expressly distributed into two parts, ver. 7. That enter in on the sabbath, i. e., that come into the temple on the sabbath day. For the understanding of this matter, you must know that the Levites were, in and from David's time, distributed into twenty-four courses, which were to do the work of the temple successively, and by turns; each course consisting of about a thousand men for his week; of which see 1 Chron.

xxiii., xxiv. The watch of the king's house; either, 1. Of that bedchamber where the king now was. But it is unlikely, and without example, either that one bedchamber, or the temple, or any part of it, should be called the king's house. And besides, the king's person is secured by other persons, ver. 7. Or rather, 2. Of that part which leadeth to the king's palace, which Athaliah now possessed, and whence they might expect opposition.

Bp. Horsley.—Houbigant's transposition of the 8th verse is plausible; he subjoins it to this 5th verse.

Houb.—5 דִּמְכָךְ בֵּית הַמֶּלֶךְ, domus Regis. Post hæc verba, quæ absolvunt vers. 5, proximè collocamus versum 8 totum, in quo Joiada ea dat mandata, quæ in eos conveniunt, de quibus vers. 5, qui custodiunt ædem Regis, non verò in eos, qui versibus 6 et 7 memorantur, quique custodiunt portas duas, et domum Domini: ut omninò incommode veniat post versum 6 et 7 ille versus, qui nunc est octavus. Etenim hoc mandatum, circum regem eritis, ad eos solos pertinebat, qui ædem Regis custodiebant, quique ver. 5, memorantur, non autem ad illos qui versibus 6 et 7, quorum partes erant, utmox diximus, ad portas atrii excubias agere, non ipso in Templo latus Regis circumstipare. Nimirum sic dispositæ erant stationes militum. Illi qui sabbato intrant, in tres catevas dividuntur. Una excubias agit apud ipsum regem, circum exedram in qua rex erat; duæ aliæ ad duas atrii portas; illi autem, qui sabbato exire solent agminibus duobus, manent apud ipsum Templum ex utroque latere, positi inter Templum et exedras. Illi sunt qui memorantur versu 7. Sed versu 8, dicitur de illis qui comitantur regem intran-tem et exeuntem, sive qui apud exedram regiam excubias agunt, quique iidem memorantur vers. 5, ut planum sit versum 8, adungi debere ad versum 5. Ordini perturbando locum dare potuit vocabulum דִּמְכָךְ, in quo desinunt versus 5 et 7, oculo Scribæ ex unâ columnâ, in qua erat unum דִּמְכָךְ, ad alteram deerrante, in qua erat alterum. Cæterum ושמר, legendum ושמרו, ut versu 7.

Au. Ver.—6 And a third part shall be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down [or, from breaking up].

Guard. See notes on x. 25.

Pool.—Behind the guard; either, 1. The king's guard; or, 2. The guard of the temple; for such a guard there was, and a captain of the guard, called the captain of the temple, Acts iv. 1; v. 24. This gate was in the south side; and, as some think, is that which is called sippim, or the threshold gate, 2Chron. xxiii. 4. So shall ye keep the watch of the house, that it be not broken down, i. e., so you shall guard all the gates or entrances into the house or temple of God, that neither Athaliah nor any of her soldiers may break into the temple, and defile it, or destroy it; as she will doubtless endeavour to do. Or, and ye shall keep the watch of the house Massach, as the LXX and other interpreters render it: who think this was the name of a house not far from the temple; in which, or against which, they were to keep a guard.

Bp. Patrick.—6 A third part shall be at the gate of Sur;] That is, the east gate of the temple, towards the city; which was the principal (and, at the first, the only) entrance into the house of the Lord. This is called, "the gate of the foundation," 2Chron. xxiii. 5 (and by five other names, if we may believe the Talmudists), where another part were ordered to guard it. Abarbinel thinks this eastern gate was called Sur, being as much as to say, go back: because no unclean person durst enter into this gate: and the "gate of the foundation," because it was, as he speaks, the "gate of the first sanctuary."

That it be not broken down.] They were to take special care, that the house of the Lord was not any way profaned; suffering none to come nearer to it than they ought; and particularly watching those out of the palace, that they did not defile it. So De Dieu thinks the word massach (which we translate "be not broken down") ought to be understood, being as much as be massach, by pulling away those that shall dare to pollute the holy place, and would come into hurt the king. Or, as other learned men have interpreted it, they were to keep "the watch of the house at the breach:" which the wicked sons of Athaliah (which she had by another man) had made, as we read 2 Chron. xxiv. 7. Dr. Lightfoot thinks that, besides these three parts for the design which Jehoiada intended, there were three more (six in all) for the ordinary service of the temple. For he would not have that neglected, while he took care of the affairs of the kingdom (see his book of the Temple, ch. 20).

Gesen.—3 Sur, pr. n. of a gate of the temple, only 2 Kings xi. 6. In the parallel passage 2 Chron. xxiii. 5, it is ~~top of~~ gate of the foundation; and this is preferable.

Bp. Patrick.—By the ranges is to be understood, if not the ranks of men that stood about the mountain of the house of the Lord, the rank of trees that grew on either side of the causeway, or the rails that were set on either side of it, for the stay and safety of those that passed upon it (see Dr. Lightfoot in the same place).

The cherethites—is not in the text, but I am persuaded it once stood there: and there is still a vestige of it in some copies of the Greek version.

Au. Ver.—12 And he brought forth the king's son, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the testimony; and they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands, and said, God save the king [Heb., Let the king live].

The testimony.

Bp. Patrick.—i. e., the book of the law [so Pool, Clarke, Lee] into his hand, according to Deut. xvii. 18, 19, which is called the testimony, because God therein testified what he would have the king and them all to do. But there is a doubt what is meant by eduth, which we translate testimony; supposing it comes from the root, which signifies to testify. But there are those, particularly Forsterus, Avenarius, and others of greater note, who derive it from the Hebrew word adah, which signifies to clothe, put on, and adorn: and so take eduth for some royal ornament, which was a mark of kingly dignity: and that, it is probable, might be a bracelet which Jehoiada put upon the young king, together with the crown. This conjecture is countenanced by what we read of the Amalekite, who brought the bracelet on Saul's arm to David, as well as the crown that was on his head (see Fortunatus Scacchus Myrothec. iii. cap. 41).

Dathe, Bp. Horsley.—And put upon him the crown and the ensigns of royalty. "Insigne regium."—Houbigant. See 2 Chron. xxiii. 11.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The testimony.] Probably the book of the law, written on a roll of vellum. This was his sceptre. Some think that it was placed upon his head, as well as the diadem. The diadem, the testimony, and the anointing oil were essential to his consecration.

By a pillar.

Bp. Patrick.—Some of the Jews, and many a great man among Christian writers, understand by this pillar the brazen scaffold which Solomon erected at the dedication of the temple (2 Chron. vi. 13). But the plainest meaning seems to me, that he stood by the posts of the east gate in the inner court, where the station of the king was. Which Vitringa hath made probable in his Synagoga Vet., p. 31, &c., where he observes, that the king alone entered at the east gate on the sabbath and the new moons; but on the other days at the south or north gate, where the people entered; which he gathers from Ezek. xli. 1, 2.

The Vulgate, in this place, has "super tribunali;" in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 31, "in tribunali suo;" in chap. xxiii. 3, and in 2 Chron. xxiii. 13, "super gradum." Tremellius thinks that this pillar was Solomon's brazen scaffold, mentioned in 2 Chron. vi. 13.

Au. Ver.—4 And Jehoshaphat said to the priests, All the money of the dedicated things [or, holy things; Heb., holinesses] that is brought into the house of the Lord, even the money of every one that passeth the account, the money that every man is set at [Heb., the money of the souls of his estimation, Lev. xxvii. 2], and all the money that cometh into any man's heart [Heb., ascendeth upon the heart of a man] to bring into the house of the Lord.

Pool.—All the money of the dedicated things: this may be, either, first, The general designation of the money, the particulars whereof here follow. Or rather, secondly, A special branch of it, the money which had been either formerly or lately vowed or dedicated to the use and service of God and of his house, either by the former kings; of which see below, ver. 18, and compare 1 Kings vii. 51; xv. 15; 2 Kings xii. 18; 2 Chron. xv. 18; or by this king or his people. That is brought, or rather, that shall be brought; for though the people might vow to bring it thither in convenient time, yet it is not likely they would bring much money thither in the tyrannical and idolatrous reign of Athaliah; or if they did, that Athaliah would not seize it for her own use. The money of every one that passeth the account, i. e., the half shekel, which was paid for every one that was numbered from twenty years old and upward; of which the very same phrase is used Exod. xxx. 13; compare 2 Chron. xxiv. 5, 6, 9. The money that every man is set at, Heb., the money of souls, or persons, according to his taring, i. e., the money which every man that had vowed his person to God paid according to the rate which the priest put upon him; of which see Lev. xxvii. 2, &c. All the money that cometh into any man's heart; all that shall be freely offered. See Exodus xxv. 2; xxxv. 5.

Bp. Patrick.—All the money of the dedicated things that is brought.] That had been, or should hereafter be brought and dedicated to the service of God and of the temple.

Even the money of every one that passeth the account.] This and the following money he commandeth the priests and Levites to go through the kingdom, and gather for the repair of the temple, as we are told, 2 Chr. xxiv. 5. They were not to expect till the people should bring it in, but go and gather it, every man of his acquaintance, where he knew it to be due. And so the foregoing words are to be translated, not "that is brought," but "to be brought" into the house of the Lord. Which money arose three ways; the first is here mentioned, "the money of every one that passeth" (for the words the account are not in the Hebrew), which some understand of the offering which pious people of other nations made, who came to worship at Jerusalem (1 Kings viii. 41): or rather, of those who were come to twenty years of age, and being past that, were to pay half a shekel. This had been much neglected in the time of Athaliah (as the Jewish doctors think), but now being carefully gathered, there was enough to maintain the daily sacrifice (which was supported out of this money), and to carry on also the reparation of the temple. Though Abarbanel thinks it was wholly applied to the reparation; and the people voluntarily offered for the maintaining of the daily morning and evening sacrifice.

The money that every man is set at.] This was the second way: by the money that every man who had vowed himself to God, was to pay, by the estimation that the priest should make for his redemption; according to that law, Lev. xxviii. 2, 3. For so the words are here in the Hebrew, "the money of a man whose taxation is the money of his soul:" that is, who is taxed such a sum of money, whereby his soul might be freed from the vow wherewith he had bound himself. For till this money was paid, his life was not his own, but God's.

Bp. Horsley.—All the money, &c. In the second Book of Chronicles, chap. xxiv. we are told that the priests and Levites were sent through the country to collect a tax, which seems to have been the half-shekel tax paid by every one who attained the age of twenty. The money mentioned here is what was paid for the redemption of vows (Levit. xxvii.), or given as an offering of free will. The chest, with the hole in the lid, in Chronicles, is set at the gate, on the outside. The chest here was to contain the redemption money and the voluntary offerings. It should seem therefore that, in this place, and in 2 Chron. xxiv. we have different parts of the story, and that the whole progress of the business was after this manner:

First, the king sent the priests and Levites through the country to collect the poll-tax, and gave in charge to apply the money raised to the reparation of the temple. The priests and Levites embezzled the money, and nothing was done to the temple in the space of almost twenty-three years. The king, therefore, took the business out of their hands. He contracted with architects for the repairs, and he prepared two boxes, each with a hole in the lid, to receive the money. The one was placed at the entrance of the gate of the temple to receive the poll-tax, which the people were ordered by proclamation to bring thither. The other was placed within the temple, near the altar of burnt-offering, on the right hand of those who were entering to receive the money payable to the priests for the redemption of vows, and any voluntary vows. Each priest was to put into this box the money which he received from every bargain of redemption, and every voluntary gift, as each sum came in, and not to keep it to accumulate in his own hands.

Even the money of every one that passeth the account; rather, the money which every one maketh over; by virtue of the bargain of redemption made with the priest.

Ged.—A JOASH, having a mind to repair the house of the Lord, had, early in his reign, said to the priests and Levites: "All the hallowed money, that should come into the house of the Lord; the money which, by ordinance, each man should pay for the ransom of his life; and whatsoever money, besides, any man may voluntarily bring into the house of the Lord."

All the hallowed money, &c. This was of two sorts. 1st. The redemption money; namely, half a shekel of silver for every male twenty years old. 2dly. All voluntary gifts; or votive offerings. Some interpreters think three sorts of money are here designated; but I believe them to be wrong. So Booth.

Booth.—And Joash said to the priests, All the hallowed money which is brought into the house of Jehovah, the money of every one numbered, the ransom money which every one is to pay, besides the money which any one chooseth to bring into the house of Jehovah.

Houb.—4 Joas autem sacerdotibus hoc fecit mandatum: omnem pecuniam sacram, quæ in domum Domini afferetur, seu pecuniam prætereuntium, seu pecuniam, quo quisque redimet animam suam, omnem denique pecuniam, quam cuique domum Domini afferre videbitur.

Similiter recusat אש ne cum כסף annectatur, cum ordo Hebraicus sit, pecunia viri, non vir pecunia. Itaque alibi collocari אש non potest, quàm post כסף. Veteres hunc locum, ut poterant reddidere, quia mendum odorabantur.

Secundi generis est ea, quam quisque solvebat, si votum fecerat, se datum, quantum æstimatus esset a sacerdote, Levit. xxvii. 2. Terti generis est, quæ ex liberalitate Israëlitarum dabatur. Sic Vatablus. Sed cf. omnino locus parallelus 2 Chr. xxiv. 4, sqq., qui in nonnullis differt.

Bp. Horsley.—For כסף, LXX seem to have read כסף, every man from his sale. By the sale, I understand the bargain made for the redemption of a vow. Each priest was to have the custody of the money arising from the bargains which he made.

Houb.—5 אש מאר כסף: *Nos, à suis quisque contribulibus, ex radice, רי, fodere, habitare, unde כסף, mansio, residentia, ut rectè Castellus, in verbo כסף. Au. Ver.—7 Then king Jehoash called for Jehoiah the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

No more money of your acquaintance.

Bp. Horsley.—No more money from your sales, LXX. See verse 5.

Maurer.—8 — וְנָאִם. Scilicet pecuniam ad suum commodum avertisse videntur. In eadem sententia est Schulzius, qui “sacerdotes, ait, pecuniam, quam quisque a notis sibi Israelitis collegerat, sibi propriam vindicant, nec ad instaurandum templum adhibuerant.”

Au. Ver.—8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

Bp. Patrick.—8 They submitted to the king's new orders, and wholly committed the business to those whom he thought fit to employ. So Pool.

Ged.—8 The priests consented to collect no more money, on condition that they should not repair the house.

Dathe.—9 Obsecuti sunt sacerdotes, neque pecuniam a populo acceperunt, neque templi ruinas refecerunt.

Au. Ver.—9 But Jehoiada the priest took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the Lord; and the priests that kept the door [Heb., threshold] put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the Lord.

Pool.—Beside the altar, in the priests' court. Object. It was placed without at the gate of the house of the Lord, 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. Ans. Either, first, It was first placed by the altar, and afterwards thence removed to the gate of the court, for the people's greater satisfaction [so Dr. A. Clarke], that they might come thither, and put in their money with their own hands. Or, secondly, That place 2 Chron. speaks of the gate of the temple strictly so called, nigh unto which the altar of burnt-offerings was. Or, thirdly, It was placed near the entrance into the priests' court, which was over against the altar, and not far from it; so as the people standing in their own court might either put their money into it, or see when the priests put it in. The priests that kept the door; the door of the priests' court, which, together with the temple and all its utensils, was committed to the charge of the priests and Levites, Num. xviii. 4; 1 Chron. ix. 26, &c.

Bp. Patrick.—Set it beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the Lord. On the right side of the gate that went into the court of the priests: not far from the altar which was within the court, as appears from 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. Dr. Lightfoot thinks these two texts do not relate to the same time. For at the first the chest was set in the very court of the priests near to the altar, as it is here said in this place: so that the money still passed through the priests' fingers; who took it of the people and put it into the chest which was in their court, where the people could not come at it. But the money not coming in so fast as was expected this way, he removed the chest, or made another, and set it without the court, at the entrance of it, where every one might have access unto it.

Au. Ver.—10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that the king's scribe [or, secretary] and the high priest came up, and they put up in bags [Heb., bound up], and told the money that was found in the house of the Lord.

Trumpets.

Gesen.—וְהָיָה and וְהָיָה f. a trumpet, Num. x. 2; 2 Kings xii. 14, &c. This was the straight trumpet, different from the וְהָיָה buccina or horn, which was crooked like a horn; see Joseph. Ant. 3, 12, 6. Hieron. ad Hos. v. 8. Buxtorf. Lex., p. 816.—The etymology has occasioned various conjectures. With most interpreters, I have formerly referred it to וְהָיָה, Arab. حَصْر to be present, Conj. X. to call together, to convoke; whence then the form וְהָיָה after the analogy of Arab. conj. xii. i. q., to convoke sc. with the trumpet; and hence וְהָיָה trumpet, so called as used for convoking an assembly. Others, as recently Ewald, Heb. Gram., p. 242, suppose the trumpet to be so called as being narrow and slender; a meaning which is not found in the root either in Hebrew or Arabic. But there can be little doubt, that this is an onomatopoeic word, imitating the broken pulse-like sound of the trumpet, like the Lat. taratantara in the verse of Ennius ap. Serv. ad Virg. Æn. ix. 503. Germ. trarara. Similar to this is the Hebrew word, especially if pronounced in the Arabic manner, حَضَارَة hadâderah. Hence the denom. verb.

Prof. Lee.—וְהָיָה, and וְהָיָה, f. pl. וְהָיָה, redup. וְהָיָה. Arab. حَصْر, arctè circumdedit; whence, حَصْر, angustus animo; status venti a re cohibens; gravis difficilis loquela. Where the Arab. conj.

xii. would make, as a verb, حَصَر; and eliding the h, which has no vowel of its own, and adding ê, in order to form a noun, we have حَصْرَة, which is as near as possible to our word. A trumpet, as seen in the engravings of the Arch of Titus in Reland's Palestine, &c.: and so differs from וְהָיָה, which was a curved horn. See Joseph. Antiq. lib. iii., 12, 6, who says, στενὴ δ' ἐστὶ σύριγξ, sed fistula ejus angusta est; and from this circumstance it probably received its name.

Of the money that was brought into the house of the Lord.

Bp. Horsley.—By the money brought into the house of the Lord, I understand what was collected in the box within the temple. The whole of this was expended on the repairs, and part of the poll-tax collected in the box without the gate. But of this there was a remainder, which was laid out upon the furniture of the sanctuary. See 2 Chron. xxiv. 14.

Pool.—In the house of Millo; either in that strong and famous place in Jerusalem called Millo; of which see 2 Sam. v. 9; 1 Kings ix. 15, 24; xi. 27; into which he possibly retired for his security, being afraid even of his own subjects and servants; or in some other place called by the same name, for some resemblance it had with it. Which goeth down to Silla, i. e., which standeth upon the descent to Silla, or upon that descending causeway which leadeth from Millo to the king's house. Some refer this to Joash, and render the place thus, they slew him at or near the house of Millo, descending, or as he was going down to Silla, to escape their hands.

Bp. Patrick.—20 The Syrians had left him labouring under great diseases at this place called Millo, where his servants slew him in his bed, as we read 2 Chron. xxiv. 25. There was another place called Millo, hard by the king's palace at Jerusalem; therefore, to distinguish this from that, this is called “Millo that goeth down to Silla;” as Abarbinel thinks.

Dr. A. Clarke.—The house of Millo.] Was a royal palace, built by David (see 2 Sam. v. 9); and Silla is supposed to be the name of the road or causeway that led to it. Millo was situated between the old city of Jerusalem, and the city of David.

Gesen.—מִלּוֹ (twig, basket) Silla, pr. n. of a town near Jerusalem, 2 Kings xii. 21.

CHAP. XIII. 2.

Au. Ver.—2 In the three and twentieth year [Heb., the twentieth year and third year] of Joash the son of Ahaziah king of Judah Jehoahaz the son of Jehu began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned seventeen years.

Bp. Patrick.—Some have raised a doubt about this account, because Joash began to reign in the seventh year of Jehu (xii. 1), who reigned but twenty-eight years (x. 36); from whence if seven years be deducted, there remains no more than one-and-twenty, not three-and-twenty, as is here said. To which Kimchi and Abarbinel answer, there were two incomplete years: for when it is said Joash reigned in the seventh year of Jehu, it must be understood of the beginning of his seventh year; and in like manner, when he speaks here of the three-and-twentieth year of Joash, it must be understood of the beginning of the same year. And so they are called three-and-twenty, when they were but one-and-twenty perfect years. But it is better to say (as my worthy friend Dr. Alix thinks) that there was an interregnum of a year between the death of Jehu and the first of Jehoahaz.

Bp. Horsley.—In the three and twentieth year of Joash, &c. Hence it appears that Jehu reigned twenty-eight years complete, and died in his twenty-ninth. For the seventh of Jehu was the first of Joash. See chap. xii. 1; and compare chap. xi. 3, 4, and 2 Chron. xxii. 12, and chap. xxiii. 1. Therefore the twenty-third of Joash was the twenty-ninth of Jehu.

Bp. Horsley.—5—7 The text here has suffered some disarrangement, for the 7th verse connects not at all with the 6th. It were better that they stood in this order, 7, 5, 6. But what I should like best of all would be, that these verses should be removed to another part of the chapter; the 7th inserted between 22 and 23, and the 5th and 6th between 24 and 25.

Dr. A. Clarke.—5 And the Lord gave Israel a saviour.] This was undoubtedly Joash, whose successful wars against the Syrians are mentioned at the conclusion of the chapter. Houbigant recommends to read the seventh verse after the fourth, then the fifth and sixth, and next the eighth, &c. So Dathe, Ged., Booth.

7 Neither did he leave.

Houb., Dathe, Ged., Booth.—For he only left.

Pool.—Neither did he, i. e., the king of Syria, ver. 4, with which this verse is to be joined; ver. 5 and 6 being put within a parenthesis, as it is in our translation. But this verse may be translated otherwise, Although he (either the king of Syria, ver. 4, or the Lord, ver. 5, to whom judgments are oft ascribed, even when wicked men are the instruments of executing it) had not left, &c. And so it may be joined with the next foregoing verse, as a great aggravation of their impiteny, and obstinate continuance in their idolatry, notwithstanding such terrible judgments, which in all reason should have driven them from it. Leave of the people, i. e., of his army, or men of war, as the following words evince.

Houb.—7 כִּי לֹא הִשָּׁתַח. non enim reliquit. Ordinem vitiosum frustra parenthesi obvolvunt plerique Interpretes, cum ea, quæ versibus 5 et 6 narrantur, non dicta sint ex occasione eorum, quæ habet versus 4. Quod si parenthesim non adhibebis, qualem dicemus esse ordinem talem: non recessit à peccato domus Jeroboam...etiam erat Samariae lucus, quia non reliquerat Joachazo nisi quinquaginta equites... Num enim Joachaz à peccato Jeroboam propterea non recesserat, quia Rex Syriæ ipsi non reliquerat plus, quam quinquaginta equites? Et quanquam כִּי non convertes quia, ne sic quidem ordinem bonum reperies, quoniam sententiæ, quæ extant versibus 5 et 6, ad sententiam, quam habet versus 7, annecti non possunt. Itaque ordo sic constituendus, ut eum nos, interpretando, exsequimur; nimirum ut post versum 4, sequatur versus 7, deinde quintus et sextus, postea octavus. Quo in ordine, post וַיֵּשֶׁב, quo verbo absolvitur versus 7, legitur continenter וַיֵּשֶׁב, quod inchoat versum 5 non וַיֵּשֶׁב, quod versum 8. Atque ex similitudine verborum וַיֵּשֶׁב et וַיֵּשֶׁב potuit oriri perturbatio, quanquam ejus aliæ causæ esse potuerunt, non satis cognitæ. Porro meliùs וַיֵּשֶׁב, plenè, quam וַיֵּשֶׁב: Plenè scriptum reperio in Codicibus duobus Orat.

Dathe.—4 Tunc Joahasus Jovam implovavit, qui quoque eum exaudivit, respiciens calamitatem, qua Israël a rege Syriæ affligebantur. a)—7 Nam non reliquerat Joahas milites, nisi quinquaginta equites, decem currus et decem millia peditum. Reliquos rex Syriæ perdiderat, et instar pulveris contriverat.—5 Sed dedit Jova Israelitis defensorem, ut ab Syrorum imperio vindicati in tentoriis suis tuto uti antea habitare possent. 6 Atque tamen non recesserunt a peccatis Jerobeami, qui eos seduxerat; iis inhæserunt adeo, ut lucus Samariae exstaret.

a) Placuit h. l., trajectio versuum, septimi nimirum post quartum, quam Houbigantius ausus est. Quæ admissa non solum particula כִּי, quæ versum 7 incipit, apte connectit, quæ præcedunt, sed etiam reliquorum versuum nexus est facillimus. In verbis ipsis nihil mutatur. Ordinis autem perturbatio ex similitudine verborum וַיֵּשֶׁב et וַיֵּשֶׁב, quæ versum quintum et octavum incipiunt, facile oriri potuit.

Maurer.—7 Hic vs. multum sudoris fecit interpretibus. Dathius eum post quartum inserendum putavit, quæ trajectio jam Houbigantio placuit. “Ita non solum particula כִּי apte connectit quæ præcedunt, sed etiam reliquorum versuum nexus est facillimus. In verbis ipsis nihil mutatur. Ordinis autem perturbatio ex similitudine verborum וַיֵּשֶׁב et וַיֵּשֶׁב quæ versum quintum et octavum incipiunt, facile oriri potuit.” Sed hoc est dissecare nodum. De Wettius ante כִּי cogitando supplet: J. non amplius potuit subvenire, quod itidem duriusculum videtur. Schulzius “כִּי plane abundare” dicit! Sententiarum nexus hic esse videtur: vs. 6, tamen non recesserunt a peccatis Jerobeami cet. tamen constanter neglexerunt Jovam, vs. 7, nam Jova facta facere infecta non poterat, Israelitis tantum imbecillum auxilium tulerat. וַיֵּשֶׁב] non reliquerat sc. Jova. Igitur non opus est, ut cum Fä시오 aliisque וַיֵּשֶׁב intransitive capias cf. ad Num. xxi. 35; Deut. xxviii. 51.

Ver. 10.

Au. Ver.—10 In the thirty and seventh year of Joash king of Judah began Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz [in consort with his father, ch. xiv. 1] to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned sixteen years.

Bp. Patrick.—10 A difficulty seems to arise by comparing this verse with the first, where it is said Jehoahaz king of Israel began to reign in the twenty-third year of Joash king of Judah, and reigned seventeen years: from whence it follows, that Jehoash began to reign not in the thirty-seventh, but in the thirty-ninth or fortieth year of Joash king of Judah. But this only shows the truth of what I said upon ver. 5, that he reigned with his father three years; after God was so gracious as to raise up a deliverer to them, who was this son of his, by whom peace was restored to them. This we note in the margin, he reigned in concert with his father (xiv. 1).

Bp. Horsley.—In the thirty and seventh; Read, with the Aldine LXX, thirty and ninth. Compare chap. xiii. 1, and xii. 1, and xiv. 1.

with he fought against Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

13 And Joash slept with his fathers; and Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

Ged. and Booth. place these verses after verse 25.

Ged.—13 Joash slept with his forefathers, and was buried at Samaria, among the kings of Israel: and his son Jeroboam sat upon his throne, and reigned in his stead.

Dathe.—Anno sequenti.

Pro בָּא שָׁנָה legendum fortasse בָּא שָׁנָה vel בָּא שָׁנָה. Sic Chaldaeus: in adventu anni. Vulg.: in ipso anno, et sic quoque Syrus. Legerunt igitur בָּא שָׁנָה. Kennicottus observat, in cod. 1, a esse erasum.

Maurer.—בָּא שָׁנָה [בָּא שָׁנָה] Locus difficilioris explicationis, quem Ewaldus Gr. crit. p. 528, ita expedit: venire solebant in terram quotannis, propr. "sie pflegten zu kommen ein Kommen (אָב) des Jahrs, ein jährliches Kommen," nescio an non audacius. Fortasse verti potest sine ulla mu-tatione: veniebant in terram veniente anno propr. kam das Jahr, ut פָּנָה מָא omissa conjunctione sit pro פָּנָה מָא. Vulg. et Syrus: in ipso anno, ut suspicetur aliquis, hos legisse פָּנָה. Ita in פָּנָה מָא aurum error subesset.

Au. Ver.—1 In the twenty and seventh year of Jeroboam king of Israel began Azariah [called Uzziiah, ver. 13, 30, &c.; and 2 Chron. xxvi. 1] son of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.

In the twenty and seventh year, &c.

Houb.—In the fourteenth year.

Maurer.—In the fifteenth year.

Pool.—In the twenty and seventh year.

Quest. How can this be true, seeing Amaziah, the father of this Azariah, lived only till the fifteenth year of Jeroboam's reign, chap. xiv. 2, 23? Ans. This might be either, first, Because Jeroboam was made king by and reigned with his father eleven or twelve years, and afterwards reigned alone; and so there is a twofold beginning of his kingdom; by the former this was his twenty-seventh year, and by the latter his fifteenth year. Or, secondly, Because there was an interreign [so Dr. Lightfoot] for eleven or twelve years in the kingdom of Judah; either through the prevalency of that faction which cut off Amaziah the father, and kept the son out of his kingdom; or because Azariah was very young when his father was slain, and the people were not agreed to restore him to his right till his sixteenth year, chap. xiv. 21; 2 Chron.
xxvi. 1. And yet these eleven or twelve years of interreign, in which he was excluded from the exercise of his regal office, some think to be included in those fifty-two years which are here ascribed to Azariah's reign,
ver. 2, which may well be doubted. Azariah, called also Uzziiah here, ver. 13, 30. Began Azariah to reign; solely and fully to exercise his regal power.

Dr. A. Clarke.—There are insuperable difficulties in the chronology of this place.
There is probably some mistake in the numbers.

Houb.—1 Anno vigesimo septimo Jeroboam... (regnavit Aziarius). Hæc temporum ratio stare non potest cum antedictis. Dictum est capite sup. ver. 23, regnasse Jeroboam anno Amasiae, patris Azariae, decimo quinto. Dictum fuerat eodem capite ver. 2. Amasiam, patrem Azariae, regnasse annos viginti novem. Jam ab anno Amasiae decimo quinto, quo Jeroboam regnavit, usque ad annum ejusdem Amasiae vigesimum nonum, quo expleto regnavit Azarias, intercedunt tantum anni quatuordecim. Ergo Jeroboam, cum Amasias mortuus est, non regnat, plus quam annos quatuordecim, atque adeo Azarias, mortuo Amasiae succedens, initium regnandi habuit anno Jeroboam decimo quarto, non autem ejusdem vigesimo septimo. Ergo ut temporum ratio hæc constet, quam vidimus capite sup. ver. 2 et 23, legendum, non עשרים ושבע, vigesimo septimo, sed עשרה וארבע, decimo quarto, quem numerum habet Josephus Historicus.

Maurer. — מֶלֶךְ יְהוּדָה אֲזַרְיָהוּ שֶׁבַע שָׁנִים וְעֶשְׂרִים יָמִים] Sed hæc iis, quæ 2 Reg. xiv. 23, et ib. vs. 17; cf. 2 Chron. xxv. 25 leguntur, manifeste repugnant. Quod si enim anno Amasiae decimo quinto Jerobeamus imperium inivit, Amazia autem postea adhuc quindecim annos vixit, luce clarius est, ad Usiam regnum venisse anno Jerobeami decimo quinto. Hinc igitur ut se expedirent, alii interregnum supposuerunt, alii Jerobeamum Joaso, patri, ad bellum Syriacum profecturo in imperii societatem adjunctum esse suspicati, annum Jerobeami vigesimum septimum ab eo tempore computandum censuerunt, quo ille cum patre regnare coepisset. Sed neque interregni neque communionis imperii vestigium reperitur. Præterea temporum sequentium rationes impediunt, quo minus interregnum supponamus. Societatem vero imperii non admittunt rationes temporum præcedentium. Vid. Obs. meas in Hoseam in Commentt. theoll. T. II. P. I., p. 285, sq. Quare ego quidem non dubito, subesse in loci nostri numero errorem, ex litterarum כו (15) cum כז (27) permutatione fortasse natum, quam conjecturam etiam aliis nostrae ætatis hominibus video esse probatam.

Azariah.

Ken., Gesen., Maurer, Ged., Booth.—Uzziah.

Ken.—The confusion arising from a corruption of proper names has been already noted; and is a just cause both of surprise and complaint. The person here mentioned is no less than a king of Judah, and yet we can scarce tell what his real name was; at least, it would be very difficult, if we consulted only the printed Hebrew text, for there it is expressed four different ways in this same chapter; Ozriah, Ozrihu, Oziah, and Ozihu! Our oldest Heb. MS. happily relieves us here, by reading truly (in verses 1, 6, and 7) עֲזִיָּה, Ozihu (Uzziah) where the printed text is differently corrupted. This reading is called true; because it is supported by the Syriac and Arabic versions, in these three verses; because the printed text itself has it so, in verses 32 and 34 of this very chapter; because it is so expressed in the parallel place in Chronicles; and because it is (not Αζαρις, but) Οζας, in St. Matthew's Genealogy.

Gesen.—עֲזִיָּה (whom Jehovah helps) and עֲזִיָּהוּ pr. n. m. Azariah. a) A king of Judah called also עֲזִיָּה q. v.

עֲזִיָּה and עֲזִיָּהוּ (might of Jehovah, fr. עֲזָרָה, pr. n. m. Sept. 'Οζίας. a) A king of Judah from 811 to 759 B.C., 2 Kings xv. 13, 30, &c. In 2 K. xiv. 21; xv. 1, 6, 7, 8, 23, 27, he is also called עֲזִיָּהוּ and עֲזִיָּה, which however is prob. not another name of the same king, but would seem to have arisen from an error of the copyists, עֲזִיָּה and עֲזִיָּה being similar; see Thesaur. p. 1011.

Gesen. Thesaur.—עֲזִיָּה et עֲזִיָּהוּ, in codd. passim עֲזִיָּה (potentia Jovæ) n. pr. LXX. 'Οζίας, Vulg. Ozias, quod gerunt 1) rex Judæ, Amazia filius, Jothami pater, Hoseæ et Amosi prophetarum æqualis (Hos. i. 1; Am. i. 1), post 52 annorum (811—759 a. Chr.) imperium in nosocomio, in quo propter lepram inclusus erat, mortuus. 2 Reg. xv. 13, 30, &c. Sed in altero libro Regum octo novemve locis continuis xiv. 21; xv. 1, 6, 7, 8, 17, 23, 27 (addendus enim locus xv. 13, ubi pæne 60 codd. Kenn. et Rossii habent עֲזִיָּה) pro eo legitur עֲזִיָּה et עֲזִיָּהוּ LXX. 'Αζαρις, Vulg. Azarias. Quum ex contextu manifestum sit, nullo modo duo ejusdem regis nomina ibi cogitari posse, sed omne hoc discrimen ex antiquo librorum erroribus et עֲזִיָּה et עֲזִיָּהוּ confundentium (v. infra no. 3) errore profectum esse, iam veteres interpretes, ut sibi constaret rerum gestarum memoria, omnibus locis idem nomen reponendum esse existimarunt: idque LXX ita instituerunt, ut ubique (etiam xv. 13, 30, 32, 34) scriberent 'Αζαρις, quum contra Peschito cum Arabe ubique (ex Paralipp.) scribant

Namque scripturam עֲזִיָּה concors quinque diversorum V. T. librorum (Am. Hos. Jes. Zach. Parall.) auctoritas tuetur : a qua postquam semel aberraverat librarius in altero libro Regum (xv. 1) pro ויהי scribens ויהי (quod usitatius est nomen), non poterat non in hoc errore per omnem de Usia narrationem perseverare : commata enim 30, 32, 34, quæ ad sequentium regum narrationem pertinent, eius aciem (si qua erat) facile effugere poterant. Paralipomenon auctor vel in eo quo usus est codice libri regum veterem incorruptamque scripturam reperit vel eam restituit, Alexandrino contra scriptura iamiam corrupta ob oculos erat, quam, ut sibi constaret narratio, etiam in tres quatuorve reliquos locos introduxit.

Azariah.

Bp. Patrick.—8 Some are confident the throne was vacant two-and-twenty years between the death of Jeroboam and the inauguration of his son ; either through wars from abroad (which Jeroboam might have provoked against his house, by the conquest of Hamath and Damascus), or through war at home, which appears, they think, from this disastrous end of Zachariah, ver. 10 (see Dr. Lightfoot, in his Prolegomena to his Harmony of the Evangelists, sect. 6). But there are few that follow this opinion, though one most learned in these, as well as other things (Dr. Alix), thinks there was an interregnum of twenty-four years. If there be any difficulty in this account, most think it is sufficiently solved, by saying, that it was the thirty-eighth year, from the time that Azariah began to reign with his father.

Houb.—8 בשנת שלשים וששה, anno trigesimo octavo (Azariae,) regis Juda, regnavit in Israel Zacharias, filius Jeroboam. Si quis negat, esse in numeris quidquam emendandum, erit ei explicandum, quoniam hæc ratio temporum cum eâ conciliari possit, quam suprâ voluit esse intactam, nempe Azariam regnasse in Judam, anno Jeroboam vigesimo septimo? Nam ab anno eo 270. Jeroboam in Israel regnantis, usque ad annum ejusdem quadragesimum primum, eundemque ultimum, non sunt plures anni, quàm quatuordecim. Ex quo efficitur, ut Azarias, si anno tantum Jeroboami 270. regnavisset, non plures annos regnaverit, cum Jeroboam mortuus est, quàm annos quatuordecim, utque adeò Zacharias, filius Jeroboam, regnare cœperit anno Azariæ 140. non autem anno 380. ut hic legitur. Sed neque ille annus 380. stare potest cum eo, quod suprâ effectum est, Azariam reg-nasse in Judam anno Jeroboam 140. Nam, cum ab anno illo 140. Jeroboam usque ad ejusdem 41um. eundemque ultimum, non sint plures anni, quàm 28 sequitur Zachariam, Jeroboami filium, regnare debuisse anno Azariæ 280. non autem, ut hic narratur, 380. Ergò, ut in priore nostrâ emendatione, ex locis parallelis factâ, consistamus, sequitur esse hic legendum, עשרים ושמונה, vigesimo octavo, non autem עשרים ושלושה, vigesimo octavo, ut etiam Lud. Cappello videbatur.

Planissime mihi rem omnem expedire videntur, qui interregnum constituunt. Sane turbulentus admodum fuit eo tempore regni Israelitici status; unde interregnum aliquod fuisse, mirum non est." Rectissime hoc quidem. Sed quod existimant chronologi, interregnum spatium undecim annorum superasse, in eo errant. cf. Obs. l. 1., p. 286, sq. עשרים ושמונה Sex menses, quos Sacharia imperium tenuit, posteriores esse anni Usiæ trigesimali octavi, ex eo apparet, quod qui Sachariam excepit, atque unum tantum mensem regnavit, Schallumus, anno Usiæ trigesimo nono regnum occupasse dicitur (vs. 13) cf. Obs. l. 1., p. 287.

Au. Ver.—20 And Menahem exacted [Heb., caused to come forth] the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and stayed not there in the land.

Pool.—Of each man, i. e., of each of those wealthy Israelites. But as each of these were not equally wealthy, so it is not probable that he taxed them equally. Others therefore render it to or for each man, i. e., for every Assyrian soldier: which interpretation is favoured by the placing of the words in the Hebrew text, which differs from that in our translation.

Bp. Patrick.—Menahem exacted the money of Israel, even of all the mighty men of wealth, &c.] By this means, I suppose, he thought to ingratiate himself with the common people; upon whom he laid no tax, but charged only the rich, according to the proportion of their wealth. For the Hebrew words do not import that he made every rich man in Israel pay fifty shekels; but that he gave to the king of Assyria so many shekels for every man; that is, for every one in his army. So they run exactly, "to give to the king of Assyria fifty shekels of silver for each man."

A captain. See notes on Exod. xiv. 7, vol. i., p. 267.

Bp. Patrick.—He was a great commander under Pekahiah; for the Hebrew word shalish signifies more than a bare captain. Therefore Josephus calls him a chiliarch, or an officer over a thousand men. And the word carrying in it the notion of three, some later writers have therefore thought him to be the third person in the kingdom, next the king. No question he was some considerable person who had soldiers at his command to execute his designs.

He killed him.

Bp. Patrick.—Tiglath-pileser.] He was the son of Pul, and is called by other authors Phul, or Phul-assur, and here Tiglath-pul-assur: the former part of this name being taken from the river Tigris, which is called by the inhabitants Diglito; from whose borders this king came. There is a learned man of our own, who hath lately given another account of the name of Pilesar. For he thinks it is compounded of the names of two of their gods, Pil being the same with Bel, and Azer or Azar was the name of a planet worshipped by the Persians, viz. Mars: and they much affected to have the names of their gods in their own names; which was a common thing also among the Jews: for which reason the name of Tiglath was added, which was the name of Tigris, which, as all great beneficial rivers, mountains, and trees, was accounted sacred among the heathen (see Dr. Hyde, Histor. Relig. Vet. Persar., cap. 3).

Au. Ver.—30 And Hoshea the son of Elah made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, and smote him, and slew him, and reigned in his stead [after an anarchy for some years, chap. xvii. 1; Hos. x. 3, 7, 15], in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah [in the fourth year of Ahaz, in the twentieth year after Jotham had begun to reign: Ush. 758].

Pool.—In the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah.] Quest. How could this be, when Jotham reigned only sixteen years, below, ver. 33? Ans. The meaning is, that he began his reign in the twentieth year after the beginning of Jotham's reign; or, which is the same thing, in the fourth year of Ahaz, son of Jotham, as appears from chap. xvi. 2. But the sacred writer, having not yet made mention of Ahaz, thought it more proper to number Hoshea's years by Jotham, of whom he had spoken, than by Ahaz. Besides, as Jotham did reign divers years in his father's life, so might Ahaz in Jotham's life, and Jotham might for divers reasons (which it is needless here to inquire) resign up the administration of the kingdom wholly into Ahaz's hands some years before his death, and therefore might be said to reign but sixteen years, though he lived longer.

Bp. Patrick.—And reigned in his stead, in the twentieth year of Jotham.] These words create a difficulty; for it is said, ver. 33, that Jotham reigned but sixteen years. Which Seder Olam Rabba thus reconciles (for none can think any writer whatsoever would so soon contradict himself), that this conspiracy was begun in the latter end of Jotham's reign, but not put in execution till four years after his death. So that these words are to be understood as if he had said, "Twenty years after Jotham began to reign over Judah Pekah was slain." Dr. Lightfoot gives another account of it; that the wickedness of Ahaz was so great, that the holy writer would not mention him on this occasion, but rather speaks of his good father, as if he were yet alive, in which he follows R. Solomon Jarchi. But this hath no show of truth in it; since so much is said of Ahaz in the following part of this history. A late very learned writer (in his short view of the Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 47) hath given a better account of it, in these words: "Because there had been yet no mention made of Ahaz's reign, therefore the old epocha of his predecessor Jotham is still made use of." But the plain truth is, that Jotham reigned four years with his father Azariah.

Bp. Horsley.—In the twentieth year of Jotham, the son of Uzziah. Jotham the son of Uzziah did not reign twenty years. And what historian ever reckoned by the years of a deceased prince, unless some remarkable event of his reign gave rise to a new era? It appears, too, that Hosea did not begin his reign before the twelfth, or at the earliest the tenth, of Ahaz, (see chap. xvii. 1), which was the twenty-seventh, or twenty-sixth, from the beginning of Jotham. It seems certain, therefore, that this verse has suffered some great corruption. Perhaps it might be "smote him and slew him in the twentieth year;" i. e., in the twentieth year of Pekah's own reign. This is the most natural emendation of this verse; rejecting the words "and reigned in his stead" as the interpolation of some careless transcriber, or injudicious critic, and the words "of Jotham the son of Uzziah" as introduced either by accident from the 32d verse, or inconsiderately inserted, as a necessary exposition of the twentieth year. If this be the true emendation of this verse, Hoshea slew Pekah in the twentieth year of Pekah's reign, which was the fourth or fifth of Ahaz king of Judah, but did not establish himself in the kingdom in less than seven or eight years after Pekah's death.

One MS. of Dr. Kennicott's omits the words בשנת עשרים בן יוחם, "in the twentieth year of Jotham the son of Uzziah."

Ged.—In the twentieth year. So the text and Ant. U. V., but tenth seems to be the true reading.

Au. Ver.—2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and did not that which was right in the sight of the Lord his God, like David his father.

See notes on chap. xviii. 2.

Ged.—Twenty years old. So the text and VV. But the true number seems to be twenty-five [so Houb., Horsley, Dathe].

Bp. Horsley.—If Ahaz was twenty when he began to reign, and reigned only sixteen years, he was but thirty-six when he died. But we read, chap. xviii. 2, and 2 Chron. xxix. 1, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz was twenty-five years old when he began to reign. Now Hezekiah seems to have succeeded immediately upon his father's death. If these numbers therefore are correct, Hezekiah must have been born in the twelfth year of his father's age, which is highly improbable. It is probable that Ahaz was older than thirty-six, if his son was twenty-five at his death. But dying in the sixteenth year of his reign, he must have been more than twenty when he began to reign, if he died more than thirty-six. For twenty years, therefore, read, in this place, "twenty and five," which is the reading of the Vatican LXX in the parallel place, 2 Chron. xxviii. 1.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Twenty years old was Ahaz.] Here is another considerable difficulty in the chronology. Some think that the twenty years mentioned here respect the beginning of the reign of Jotham, father of Ahaz; so that the passage should be thus translated: Ahaz was twenty years of age when his father began to reign; and consequently he was fifty-two years old when he died, seeing Jotham reigned sixteen years; and therefore Hezekiah was born when his father was twenty-seven years of age. This however is a violent solution, and worthy of little credit. It is better to return to the text as it stands, and allow that Ahaz might be only eleven or twelve years old when he had Hezekiah: this is not at all impossible; as we know that the youth of both sexes in the eastern countries are marriageable at ten or twelve years of age, and are frequently betrothed when they are but nine. I knew a woman, an East Indian, who had the second of her two first children when she was only fourteen years of age, and must have had the first when between eleven and twelve. I hold it therefore quite a possible case that Ahaz might have had a son born to him when he was but eleven or twelve years old.

Houb.—בן עשרים שנה אחד במלכו, filius annorum viginti erat Achaz, cum regnavit. Docemur ex xviii. 2 Ezechiam, filium Achaz, regnandi initium habuisse, anno vitæ ejus vigesimo quinto. Jam Achaz non regnavit plus, quam annos sexdecim, ut hoc versu narratur, mortuusque est adeo anno vitæ suæ trigesimo sexto. Quoniam igitur Ezechias, filius Achaz, annum agebat vitæ suæ vigesimum quintum, quo tempore Achaz moriebatur, annos natus triginta sex, quæritur an Achaz genuerit Ezechiam annos natus tantum undecim. Bp. Patrick.—This seems not to agree with 2 Chron. xxviii. 5, &c. where these two princes are represented as getting great victories over him. To which Abarbinel answers, that these things happened at different times. For the wars mentioned in the book of Chronicles were made severally by these two kings, wherein they prospered, being the ministers of Divine Providence. But when now they joined their forces together, and not only came against other cities, but against Jerusalem, God was pleased to make them miscarry.

Au. Ver.—15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn the morning burnt offering, and the evening meat offering, and the king's burnt sacrifice, and his meat offering, with the burnt offering of all the people of the land, and their meat offering, and their drink offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brasen altar shall be for me to enquire by.

Pool.—Upon the great altar, i. e., this new altar; which was greater than Solomon's, either in quantity, or in his estimation. Whatsoever is offered to the true God, either in my name, (for possibly he did not yet utterly forsake God, but worshipped idols with him,) or on the behalf of the people, shall be offered upon this new altar; which he seems to prescribe not only to gratify his own humour, but also in design to discourage, and by degrees to extinguish, the worship of the true God; for he concluded that the worshippers of God would never be willing to offer their sacrifices upon his altar. The brazen altar shall be for me to inquire by; that shall be reserved for my proper use, to inquire by, i. e., at which I may seek God, or his favour, or inquire of his will, to wit, by sacrifices joined with prayer, when I shall see fit. He saith only to seek, or to inquire; not seek the Lord, or to inquire of the Lord, as the phrase is more largely expressed elsewhere; but he would not vouchsafe to mention the name of the Lord, whom he had so grossly forsaken and despised.

Bp. Patrick.—The brasen altar shall be for me to enquire by.] He would not have it thought that he intended wholly to lay aside the altar made by Solomon; but rather to do it great honour, by reserving it for his own private use, when he pleased to inquire of God by it. But there being no mention of the name of the Lord, some think the meaning is no more but that he would have it stand where he had set it, till he considered what to do with it: and they fancy that he made the famous dial of Ahaz with the brass of it. So they understand the Hebrew words li lebakker—I will take care of it, and order what shall be done with it. And therefore, according to this interpretation, he laid it quite aside. But the other seems more agreeable to the Hebrew phrase, "it shall be to me to inquire, or seek, or pray:" a private altar for his proper use; whereby he pretended to have still some regard to it, though he had degraded it.

Ged.—And let the brazen altar remain at my disposal.

Au. Ver.—18 And the covert for the sabbath that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord for the king of Assyria.

Pool.—The covert for the sabbath; the form and use whereof is now unknown. It is generally understood of some building or covert; either that where the priests, after their weekly course was ended, abode until the next course came and relieved them, which was done upon the sabbath day; see 2 Kings xi. 5, 7; or that in which the guard or watchmen of the temple kept their station; or that under which the king used to sit to hear God's word, and see the sacrifices; which is called the covert of the sabbath, because the chief times in which the king used it for those ends was the weekly sabbath, and other solemn days of feasting, or fasting, (which all come under the name of sabbaths in the Old Testament,) upon which the king used more certainly and solemnly to present himself before the Lord than at other times.

Bishop Patrick.—There is a vast variety of opinions concerning this musach (which we translate covert), and why it is called the covert for the sabbath. The most probable is, that it was a covered place, where the king sat in the porch of the temple, or at the entrance of it, upon the sabbath, or other great solemnities which were called by that name. Thus Procopius Gazæus: This Ahaz took away, intending not to trouble himself to come to the temple, but to sacrifice anywhere; in every corner of Jerusalem, and in the several cities of Judah, which he would have been thought as holy as Jerusalem (2 Chron. xxviii. 24, 25). And it is a probable conjecture of a very learned man of our own, that Ahaz did this to express his hatred and contempt of the sabbath: for the worship of idols and violation of the sabbath are frequently joined together in Scripture, especially in Ezek. xx. 16; xxii. 8, 9; xxiv. 37, 38, and in a remarkable place in the Maccabees, i. 44 (see Spencer, De Leg. Hebræor., lib. i., cap. 1, 12).

The king's entry without, turned he from the house of the Lord.] The passage through which the king came from his own house to the temple [so Pool], he turned another way.

For the king of Assyria.] That he might ingratiate himself with him [so Pool, Ged.], by contemning his own country religion, and approaching nearer to his. But Procopius takes it the quite contrary way; that he did this "for fear of [so Houb.] the king of Assyria." Which moved him to make a shorter passage into the house of the Lord, that he might flee thither instantly for safety, in case of any danger: which is not probable, because he profaned it, and shut up the doors of it.

Dr. A. Clarke.—As the word מִסְכָּה, and others derived from the same root, signify covering or booths, it is very likely that this means either a sort of canopy which was erected on the sabbath days for the accommodation of the people who came to worship, and which Ahaz took away to discourage them from that worship; or a canopy under which the king and his family reposed themselves, and which he transported to some other place to accommodate the king of Assyria when he visited him. Jarchi supposes that it was a sort of covert way that the kings of Judah had to the temple, and Ahaz had it removed lest the king of Assyria, going by that way, and seeing the sacred vessels, should covet them. If that way had been open, he might have gone by it into the temple, and have seen the sacred vessels, and so have asked them from a man who was in no condition to refuse them, however unwilling he might be to give them up. The removing of this, whatever it was, whether throne, or canopy, or covered way, cut off the communication between the king's house and the temple; and the king of Assyria would not attempt to go into that sacred place by that other passage to which the priests alone had access.

In the twelfth year of Ahaz, &c.

Pool.—Quest. How can this be true, seeing it is said that he reigned, or began to reign, in Israel in the twentieth year of Jotham, chap. xv. 30, which was the fourth year of Ahaz, as was there noted? Ans. He usurped the kingdom in Ahaz's fourth year; but either was not owned as king by the generality of the people, or was not accepted and established in his kingdom by the Assyrian, till Ahaz's twelfth year; or in his eight first years he was only a tributary prince, and the king of Assyria's viceroy; and after that time he set up for himself, which drew the Assyrian upon him.

Bp. Patrick.—In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah began Hoshea the son of Elah to reign.] This doth not agree with xv. 30, where it is said he began to reign in the twentieth year of Jotham, which was the fourth of Ahaz. To this Ralbag thinks it sufficient to say, that till the twelfth year of Ahaz he was but a servant of the king of Assyria; nor was reputed a king, but only a governor under him. And so Abarbinel. And it is no improbable conjecture of Dr. Lightfoot's, that Ahaz gave him a great deal of trouble after the death of Pekah, in revenge of the slaughter he had made in Judah: so that he kept Hoshea out of the throne a great while, and upon this account is called the king of Israel (2 Chron. xxviii. 19), as well as because he walked in the ways of those kings. Our learned chronologer Mr. Whiston thinks there was an interregnum, for the space of full twelve years, from the death of Jeroboam the second. Which he takes to be most probable, and almost certain, from those words of Hosea, who prophesied in that king's time: "Now (or ere long) they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the Lord; what then should a king do to us?" Hos. x. 3 (see his Short View of the Chronology of the Old Testament, p. 48).

5 Then the king of Assyria.

Dathe, Ged., Booth.—For the king of Assyria.

Maurer.—[יחל] nonnulli in plusquamperfecto vertunt, invita grammatica. Non est cur longus sim in re aperta. Reddendum est : tum ascendit. Sed hoc non obstat, quo minus statuas, Hoseam demum post expugnatam Samariam a Salmanassare in vincula conjectum esse (vs. 4). Nam quum de Hosea rege ejusque cum Ægyptiis foedere scriptor exposuisset, induci facile potuit, ut ante omnia his adderet, quæ e facto isto male sano in regem mala redundarint, et tum demum de Salmanassar in Samariam facta expeditione narraret, ita quidem, ut, quum deberet scribere : יחל s. יחל, cogitando ipse se eo referret, unde erat egressus (vs. 4), ut fere solent Hebræorum scriptores. Veri utique similis est, Hoseam imminente hostili exercitu in Samariam se recepisse, Ægyptiorum fretum auxilio, quam Salmanassari obviam profectum in aperto campo cum eo conflixisse.

Ver. 6.

— וַיִּשָּׁב אוֹתָם בְּחֶלֶחַ וּבְחָבֹר בְּהָרָה בְּיוֹזָן וּבְעָרֵי מְדִינָה

— καὶ κατόκησεν αὐτοὺς ἐν Ἀλαῇ καὶ ἐν Ἀβὼρ ποταμοῖς Γωζάν, καὶ ὁρη Μήδων.

Au. Ver.—6 In the ninth year of Hoshea the king of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah, and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

In Halah and in Habor, by the river Gozan. So Houb.

Booth.—Habor-nahar-gozan.] I make this one name, with several modern critics. So Geddes.

Gesen.—[joining together, r. חָבֹר] pr. n. Habor, i. e., Chaboras, a river of Mesopotamia which rises in Mount Masius near Rds el-'Ain, and flows into the Euphrates near Circesium, 2 Kings xvii. 6; xviii. 11;

חָבֹר pp. subst. length, both of space and time, see the root חָבֹר no 2 [to be great, to be long]. Hence

1. Chebar, pr. n. of a river in Mesopotamia, called also חָבֹר q. v. Gr. and Lat. Chaboras, Ez. i. 3; iii. 15, 23; x. 15, 22.

This orthography of the name approaches to Syriasm, Syr. ܚܒܪ, ܚܒܪ; while the form חָבֹר (خابور) imitates the Arabic. Although each form admits of a tolerable etymology, (חָבֹר conjoining, חָבֹר long river,) yet in a river of Mesopotamia the Aramæan would be more likely to exhibit the genuine and primitive orthography.

חָבֹר river of Gozan, the Chaboras, 2 Kings xvii. 6.

Houb.—et in Habor juxta, vel ad fluvium Gozan. Ita versio Anglicana, by the river Gozan, quæ tamen non probatur Erud. viro Thomas Stackhouse, The History, &c., p. 930, cui videtur sic fuisse convertendum, and by the river Habor, in Gozan, quia non erat flumen, quod Gozan nominaretur. Sed non licet convertere חָבֹר, in Habor flumine; quia nomen חָבֹר semper antecedit in Sacro Codice nomen fluminis proprium, neque id unquam subsequitur. Præterea loco parallelo 1 Par. v. 26, legitur חָבֹר וְעָרֵי מְדִינָה, et Habor, et Era, et fluvium Gozan, nomine חָבֹר juncto cum חָבֹר, non autem cum חָבֹר. Multa nomina Sacræ Geographiæ mutata sunt, et fieri potest ut Gozan esset urbis nomen, quam allueret flumen aliquod, nomine alio notum: vide caput xix. versu 12.

against the Lord their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

Pool.—Things that were not right against the Lord: this belongs, either, 1. To their gross idolatries, and other abominable practices, which they were ashamed to own before others, compare Ezek. viii. 12. Or, 2. To the worship of calves; and so the words are otherwise rendered, and that agreeably to the Hebrew text, they cloaked, or disguised, or covered things that were not right against, or before, or towards the Lord, i. e., they covered their idolatrous worship of the calves with fair pretences of necessity, the two kingdoms being now divided, and at enmity; and of their honest intention of serving the true God, and retaining the substance of the Jewish religion, from which they alleged that they differed only in circumstances of worship. From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city; in all parts and places, both in cities and in the country; yea, in the most uninhabited and neglected parts, where few or none dwell beside the watchmen, who are left there in towers, to preserve the cattle and fruits of the earth, or to give notice of the approach of enemies.

Bp. Horsley.—And the children of Israel did secretly, &c. I think the passage might be thus rendered: "And the children of Israel put on things [wrapt themselves up in things, made a merit of things] which were not right towards Jehovah." They made a merit of these things, inasmuch as they were done under the pretence of religion, and of many, even of their idolatrous rites, Jehovah, in the first institution, was the ultimate object; as of the worship of the calves at Dan and Bethel.

Ged.—Acted insincerely; i. e., they partly retained the worship of the Lord; but blended with it idolatries of every kind.

Booth.—And the Israelites devised things which were not right, against the command of Jehovah, &c.

Devised things.] So Michaëlis; and the following words explain what is meant. They associated the worship of idols with Jehovah.

Gesen.—עָשׂוּ prob. i. q. עָשׂוּ and עָשׂוּ no. 1, to cover; whence Piel, to do covertly, secretly, 2 Kings xvii. 9. So Prof. Lee.

Ver. 10.

Au. Ver.—10 And they set them up images [Heb., statues] and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree.

Groves. See notes on Exod. xxxiv. 13, vol. i., p. 376.

Bp. Patrick.—They set them up images and groves.] The Hebrew word asherim, which we translate groves, should be rendered idols of that name, as Selden hath observed, Syntag. De Diis Syris, ii. cap. 2; where he plainly demonstrates this word doth not signify the grove, but the numen or deity placed in the grove. For how should groves "be set under every green tree?" as it is here said the asherim were. And thus Kimchi saith in the root ashur, that every wooden thing that was worshipped was called asherah. And Procopius Gazæus observes, that this word, which the LXX here translate ἄλση, groves, others everywhere translate ἄστυρῶδ, which word, saith he, δηλοῖ τὴν ἄστυρην, Ἀφροδίτην, denotes Astarte, that is Nenus.

Au. Ver.—18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and removed them out of his sight : there was none left but the tribe of Judah only.

19 Also Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD rejected all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of spoilers, until he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For he rent Israel from the house of David ; and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king : and Jeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin a great sin.

22 For the children of Israel walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did : they departed not from them ;

23 Until the LORD removed Israel out of his sight, as he had said by all his servants the prophets. So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

Commandments, statutes. See notes on Deut. iv. 45, vol. i., p. 664.

But walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

Ged., Booth.—But walked by the statutes which the kings of Israel [Ged., the Israelites] had made: they did evil in the eyes of Jehovah, so as continually to provoke him to anger [Syr., Arab., and partly LXX.].

21 Drave Israel.

(19) Sed neque Juda præcepta Domini Dei sui servavit ; nam quæ Israel statuta fecerat, hæc sequutus est. 20 Propterea Dominus sprevit Israel universum semen, affligens eos, tradensque in manus eorum, qui ipsum diripiebant, donec eos tandem ē conspectu suo projiceret.*

18 ויח v. 21, Juda solus. Post hunc wherein their daughters were prostituted to every one that came to worship Venus, as the manner was in Babylon, from whence the forenamed authors testify this filthiness had its original (see Selden, De Diis Syris Syntag. ii. cap. 7, and Vossius, De Idolol. lib. ii. cap. 22).

Nergal.] Which the Jews would have to signify a cock. But their conjecture is better, who think it signified fire. For the men of Cuth are those that were afterward called Persians: who, it is certain, anciently worshipped the fire (see Selden, cap. 8). But the famous Bochartus ingeniously confesses he doth not know what nergál was; but that there is a sort of palm-tree called nergil by the Persians, Arabians, and Indians, of which they report strange things. From whence, perhaps, the Persians gave the name of Nergal to this idol, as in Syria their god was called Rimmon, from the pomegranate (Hieroicoon, par. ii. lib. i. cap. 16).

Ashima.] I know no ground the Jews have to say this word Ashima signifies a smooth goat. Our great Selden modestly acknowledges he doth not know what god it was (ib. cap. 9). But a late author takes Ashima to be the same with Mars; because among the ancients AS signified the same with Ἀπὸς among the Greeks; and shemah is as much as hearing or obedient (Jo. Gensius De Victimis Humanis, par. i. p. 92). And this AS, he conjectures, is the same whom the Romans called Hesus, whom Lucan mentions in his Pharsalia, lib. i. ver. 443.

— "Horretque feris altaribus Hesus."

But, after all, my learned friend Dr. Alix hath made the most probable conjecture, that Ashima is the name of God, whom the Hebrews call Hashem, the name from whence Ashima, I doubt not, is derived. Accordingly, Aben Ezra saith, in his preface to the book of Eather, that he saw in a Samaritan Pentateuch, Gen. i. 1, bara Ashima, instead of bara Elohim. Which Bochart censures as a falsity, because no such word is to be found in the whole Samaritan Pentateuch: but it might be then in some paraphrase upon it.

31 Nibhaz and Tartak.] Nobody knows what these were; for no credit is to be given to the Jews, who say the former was in the shape of a dog, and the other of an ass. Selden thinks they were the same idol called by different names, but was not able to give an account of them.

Adrammelech and Anammelech.] These were the same gods with Moloch: unto whom the same sacrifices were offered. The Jews, after their vain fancies, make one of them to have been in the form of a peacock, and the other of a pheasant; but in all probability they were but different names of Moloch, which was the sun, as is evident from xxiii. 10, 11; and the addition of addir, which signifies magnificent or potent, makes Adrammelech as much as the mighty Moloch; and of ana, which signifies to answer, makes Anammelech as much as oracular Moloch. For Moloch, and Melech, and Milcom, are all the very same in the language of different people, signifying a king; the sun being by them accounted the king, as the moon the queen of heaven. And there is nothing more known than that the gentiles burnt their children in sacrifice to him. But whether these people did so, or only made them pass through the fire to purify them may be questioned; though the words seem to import the former: which was the practice of the Phœnicians, Syrians, Tyrians, Carthaginians, Cretans, Arabians, and many other nations; and is still practised by the Americans, and other gentiles.

A learned writer of our own, Dr. Hyde, in the book before mentioned, had a quite different apprehension of these words, for he will have Adrammelech to signify the king of the flock, adre being as much as greges: and Anammelech he thinks is much of the same signification, ana being as much as pecus, in the Persian language: always signifying collectively in the plural number, the lesser cattle, sheep and goats. Of which he imagines these Gods had the care, and were therefore worshipped; the riches of those people consisting much in cattle. They were also celestial constellations (as he there observes), which they imagined promoted the breeding and growth of cattle.

Parkhurst. — סוּכּוֹת בְּנוֹת Succoth Benoth. The sacred historian, in recounting the idolatrous worship of the heathen people, whom the king of Assyria transplanted into the cities of Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. observes, ver. 30, that the men of Babylon made סוּכּוֹת בְּנוֹת. The words may be literally rendered The tabernacles of the daughters or young women; or if בְּנוֹת be taken as the name of a female idol from בָּנָה to build up, procreate children, then the words will express The tabernacles sacred to the productive powers feminine; and agreeably to this latter exposition, the Rabbins say the emblem was a hen and chickens. But however this be, there is little reason to doubt, but these סטובות were tabernacles, wherein young women exposed themselves to prostitution in honour of the Babylonish goddess Mylitta. Herodotus, lib. i., cap. 199, gives a particular account of this detestable service. "Every young woman of the country (of Babylon, says he) must once in her life sit at the temple of Aphroditè, or Venus (whom he afterwards tells us the Assyrians called Mylitta), and prostitute herself to some stranger. Those who are rich, and so disdain to mingle with the crowd, present themselves before the temple in covered chariots, attended by a great retinue. But the generality of the women sit near the temple, having crowns of * cord upon their heads, some continually coming, others going. † Ropes are held by them in such a manner as to afford a free passage among the women, that the strangers may choose whom they like. A woman who has once seated herself in this place, must not return home till some stranger has cast money into her lap, led her from the temple and defiled her. The stranger who throws the money must say, I invoke the goddess Mylitta for thee. The money, however small a sum it be, must not be refused, ‡ because it is appointed to sacred uses. The woman must follow the first man that offers, and not reject him; and after prostitution, having now duly honoured the goddess, she is dismissed to her own house. In Cyprus, adds the historian, they have the same custom." § And this abomination implied by סטובות the men of Babylon brought with them into the country of Samaria. The Babylonish Μολιττα, Mylitta, i. e., מלכא, signifies the procreatrix, from the Chaldee מלך to procreate; and both the name of the idol and the execrable service performed to her honour, shew that by Mylitta was originally intended the procreative or productive power of nature, or of the heavens, the Αφροδιτη of the Greeks, and Venus of the Romans.*

"A very learned † author of our own nation (say the writers of the Universal Hist., vol. xvii., p. 295) imagines that some traces of the Succoth Benoth—may be found in Sicca Venerea, the name of a city in Numidia, not far from the borders of Africa Propria. The name itself bears a near allusion to the obscene custom above taken notice of (i. e., prostitution), and seems to have been transported from Phœnicia. Nor can this well be disputed, when we consider that here was a temple where women were obliged to purchase their marriage-money by the prostitution of their bodies."

See also Vossius De Orig. and Progr. Idol., lib. i., cap. 22.

נר As a N. from נ a light, and נר to revolve, Nergal, the aleim or idol of the men of Cuth, mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 30. It seems to denote the solar fire or light, considered as causing the revolution of the earth, and so the return of the morning light upon it. The rabbins say the idol was represented in the shape of a cock; and probably they tell us the truth, for this seems a very proper emblem. Among the latter heathen, we find the cock was sacred to Apollo, or the sun; because, saith Proclus, "He doth, as it were, invite his influence, and, with songs congratulate his rising;" † or, as Pausanias in the first book of his Eliacs, "They say this bird is sacred to the sun, because he proclaims his approaching return." So Heliodorus, speaking of the time when cocks crow, comes still nearer to the literal meaning of the Heb. נר; for, says that writer, αἰσθησεί φυσικῇ τῆς τοῦ ἩΛΙΟΥ καθ' ἡμᾶς ΠΕΡΙΣΤΡΟΦΗΣ ἐπὶ τῇ τοῦ θεοῦ προσήρῳ κινουμένων, "by a natural sensation of the sun's revolution to us, they are incited to salute the god." § May not the Greek name for a cock, Αλεκτωρ, be most probably derived from the Heb. נר דלכת The coming of the Light, of which that bird gives such remarkable notice?

And perhaps under this name Nergal they meant to worship the sun, not only for the diurnal return of his light upon the earth, but also for his annual return or revolution to our northern hemisphere. We may observe that the emblem, a cock, is affected by the latter as well as by the former, and is frequently crowing both day and night at the time of the year when the days begin to lengthen.—This that great painter of nature, Shakespeare, has remarked.

"Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
The bird of dawning singeth all night long.

HAMLET, Act I., scene I.

And here it may not be amiss to take notice of the beautiful propriety with which a cock was made use of to awaken St. Peter from his guilt, after he had denied our Lord; and to remind him, in a most striking manner, that Christ the Divine Light must, as his material type, the natural light, be glorified through opposition and sufferings. Comp. John xii. 23; xiii. 31; xvii. 1.*

Steph. Morinus, in his Dissertation concerning the terrestrial Paradise, prefixed to Leusden's edition of Bochart's works (p. 24), observes from Josephus, Ant., lib. ix., cap. 14, § 3, that the Cuthites were of Cutha, which is a country of Persia, and that this may be confirmed by the idol they worshipped, namely נרגל: "For," says he, "that word seems compounded of נר, fire, a luminary, and גל to roll, roll round, as denoting the sun illuminating the world by his circular motion. This is the opinion of Selden, De Diis Syris., syntag. ii., cap. 8. Now no one is ignorant that the sun was the principal god of the Persians, and that his symbol, fire, was religiously worshipped by them, whence their priests were called ῥηπαῖθαι, their temples ῥηπαῖθαια, in which the unextinguished fire was preserved, &c." It is therefore the opinion of Morinus, that the Cuthites worshipped immediately the sun or the fire, as an emblem. But does not the phrase נרגל נר נרגל — they made Nergal, rather incline one to think they made some graven or molten image, as an emblem of their god? To which may be added, that the modern † Persees in India, who are descended from the ancient fireworshippers of Persia, pay a religious regard to the cock. And in the nineteenth chapter of the Vendidad Sade, one of the works of Zoroaster, the great prophet or teacher of the Magian or Persee religion (which is still extant, and which Mr. Perron a few years ago deposited in the French king's library), he celebrates the cock, who next to the angel Sserosch is the guardian of the world, and secures mankind against the snares of the devil.* However, if the Cuthites, mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 30, were really of Persia, it must be observed on the other hand, that Magiism or the worshipping of fire, and not Zabiiism or image-worship, was at this time the national religion of that country.† But the learned Dr. Hyde (Relig. Vet. Pers., cap. ii., p. 39, edit. 1700) strenuously contends that the נרגל or נר mentioned in 2 Kings xvii. 24, 30, was situated in Babylonia, and so called, by the usual dialectical variation of ש into ח, from נח the son of Ham, who at first settled in this country. See Gen. x. 6, 10. And accordingly we find the name of this idol נרגל made a part of the appellation of two of the king of Babylon's princes, Jer. xxxix. 3, and of that of Nerigilassor king of Babylon.

נרגל. 1. To be guilty, liable to punishment or penalty, or actually to undergo it. &c. As a N. Guilt, guiltiness.

II. As a N. in the Chaldee form, נרגל, Ashima, the Aleim of the men of Hamath, mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 30. The word, if uncompounded, should mean the atoner, expiator. The Rabbins say the emblem was a goat, or of a form compounded of a man and a goat, as the Roman poets describe the Satyrs and Pan. And indeed it seems probable that this idol was of a form in which the goat was prevalent, since that lustful animal seems a very proper, and is indeed a scriptural emblem of a vicarious atoner, as bearing the body of the sins of the flesh. See Lev. iv. 23, 24; ix. 15; x. 16; xvi. 7.

In the Samaritan version נרגל is used for the Hebrew נר a kind of goat, Deut. xiv. 5.

It is known to every one who is acquainted with the mythology of the heathen, how strongly and generally they retained the tradition of an atonement or expiation for sin; although they expected it from a false object, and by wrong means. We find it expressed in very clear terms among the Romans, even so late as the time of Horace, lib. i., ode 2, lin. 29.

נָבִיחַ. As a N. from נָבַח to bark, and נָבִיחַ to see, Nibhaz, the Aleim or idol of the Avites, mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 31. "The Rabbins say it had the shape of a dog, much like Anubis of the Egyptians;"* and in this instance I am inclined to think they tell us nearly the truth. In Pierius's Hieroglyphics (p. 53, fol. edit.) is the figure of a † Cynocephalus, a kind of ape, with a head like a dog, standing upon his hinder feet, and looking earnestly at the moon. Pierius there teaches us that the Cynocephalus was an animal eminently sacred among the Egyptians, hieroglyphical of the moon, and kept in their temples to inform them of the moon's conjunction with the sun, at which time this animal is strangely affected, being deprived of sight, refusing food, and lying sick on the ground; but on the moon's re-appearance it seems to return thanks, and congratulate ‡ the return of light to both himself and her. This being observed, the name נָבִיחַ gives us reason to conclude that this idol was in the shape of a Cynocephalus, or perhaps of a man with a dog's head (for it does not appear that the Cynocephalus was known to the Avites), looking, barking, or howling at the moon. It is obvious to common observation, that dogs in general have these properties; and an idol of the form just mentioned seems to have been originally designed to represent the power or influence of the moon on all sublunary bodies, with which the cynocephali and dogs are so eminently affected. Thus the influence of the returning solar light was represented by a cock (see above טָר), and the generative power of the heavens, by a fishy idol. See דִּינָן under ג' IV. And hence, perhaps, Apereus, or Diana, i. e., the moon, was among the Greek and Roman heathen attended by dogs, and at last converted into a huntress.

תַּרְטָק As a N. Tartak, the Aleim or idol of the Avites, mentioned 2 Kings xvii. 31. It seems compounded of תָּרַח to go about, and קָרַח to swathe, gird, round, as with a chain, and so may denote the heavens, or celestial fluid, carrying the earth and planets about in their orbits, and at the same time swathing them round as it were, according to the expression in Job xxxviii. 9. Comp. also Job xxvi. 7, under גַּל II.

The Jews have a tradition that the emblematic idol was an ass, which seems not improbable, as that animal, when tethered, might, though in a gross manner, represent the physical truth intended.* And from this idolatrous worship of the Samaritans, joined perhaps with some confused account of the Cherubim, seems to have sprung that stupid story of the heathen, that the Jews had an ass's head in the Holy of Holies of their temple, to which they paid religious worship.†

VI. אֲדַרְמֶלֶךְ (from אֲדָרַם illustrious, or a gorgeous robe, and מֶלֶךְ king) Adrammelech. The solar fire was worshipped under this name by the Sepharvites, who burnt their children in fire to him, occ. 2 Kings xvii. 31. It was also the name of one of Sennacherib's sons, probably in honour of the same idol, occ. 2 Kings xix. 37. The idol seems to have been thus denominated from his glorious appearance, or from the gorgeous robe in which he was invested, and which might be designed to represent the solar splendour.

VII. אֲנַמְמֶלֶךְ (from עָנַן a cloud, and מֶלֶךְ king), an idol mentioned with Adrammelech, 2 Kings xvii. 31, and worshipped in the same horrid manner. A nimbus or cloud of gold, or &c. seems to have been the distinguishing insigne of this idol.

Dr. A. Clarke.—30 Succoth-benoth.] This, literally, signifies the tabernacles of the daughters or young women, and most evidently refers to those public prostitutions of young virgins at the temple of Melitta or Venus among the Babylonians. From benoth it is probable that the word Venus came, the B being changed into V, as is frequently the case, and the th into s, benoth, Venos. The rabbins say that her emblem was a hen with her chickens; see Jarchi on the place.

posed to have been the solar orb or light. According to the rabbins, his emblem was a cock.

The men of Hamath made Ashima.] Perhaps the fire; from אש to make atonement or to purify. Jarchi says this was in the form of a goat.

31 The Avites made Nibhaz.] This was supposed to be the same as the Anubis of the Egyptians; and was in form partly of a dog, and partly of a man. A very ancient image of this kind now lies before me: it is cut out of stone about seven inches high; has the body, legs, and arms, of a man; the head and feet of a dog; the thighs and legs covered with scales; the head crowned with a tiara; the arms crossed upon the breasts, with the fingers clenched. The figure stands upright and the belly is very protuberant.

And Tartak.] This is supposed by some to be another name of the same idol; Jarchi says it was in the shape of an ass. Some think these were the representations of the sun in his chariot; Nibhaz representing the solar orb, and Tartak the chariot.

Adrammelech.] From אדר, glorious, and מלך, king. Probably the sun.

Anammelech.] From anah, to return, and מלך, king. Probably, the Moloch of the Ammonites. Jarchi says, the first was in the form of a mule, the second in the form of a horse; this was probably the moon.

נֶרְגַּל Nergal, pr. n. of an idol of the Cuthites, 2 Kings xvii. 30. According to Norberg, נֶרְגַּל is i. q., Zab. ܢܪܓܠ the planet Mars, corresponding to Arab. ܢܪܓܠ id. The ܢ is then the mark of a diminutive, for the use of which in the names of the gods see in ܢܪܓܠ. Better, according to Bohlen, ܢܪܓܠ i. q. Sanscr. Nrigal, man-devourer, spoken of a fierce warrior, and corresponding to נֶרְגַּל. See Thesaur., p. 913.

אֲשִׁימָה 2 Kings xvii. 30, Ashima, the domestic idol of the city of Hamath. The name is of uncertain etymology; most probably it stands in connexion with Pers. اسمان asuman heaven, Zend. aṣmānō.

ܢܒܝܝܐ Nibhaz, pr. n. of an idol of the Avites 2 Kings xvii. 31, to which the Hebrew interpreters have chosen to assign the figure of the dog, prob. deriving it by conjecture from ܢܒܝܐ to bark, although there are no traces of any idol with this figure anciently worshipped in Syria; see Iken Dissert. de idolo Nibchas, in his Dissertations, Bremen 1743, p. 143 sq.—In the Zabian books ܢܒܝܐ (i. e. ܢܒܝܐ) is the name of an evil demon, who sits on a throne upon the earth while his feet rest on the bottom of Tartarus; but it is doubtful whether this is the same name with ܢܒܝܐ; see Norberg Onomast. Cod. Nasar. p. 100.

ܬܪܬܐ Tartak, pr. n. of an idol of the Avvites (ܬܪܬ) 2 Kings xvii. 31. In the Pehlvi tar-thakh might be “deep darkness,” or “hero of darkness.”

ܐܕܪܡܠܝܬ Adrammelech, pr. n. a) of an idol of the Sepharvites or Sipparenes brought from Mesopotamia to Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. 31.—b) of a son of Sennecharib king of Assyria, who aided in slaying his father, Is. xxxvii. 38; 2 Kings xix. 37.

ܐܢܡܠܝܬ Anammelech, pr. n. of an idol of the Sepharvites or Sipparenes, 2 Kings xvii. 31. The name seems to be made up from ܐܢܡ and ܡܠܝܬ.

i. q., ܐܢܡ image, statue, ܡ and ܢ being interchanged, and ܡܠܝܬ king; or, according to Hyde de Rel. vet. Persarum p. 131, from ܐܢܡ herd, and ܡܠܝܬ, i. e., the group or constellation Cepheus, which the Orientals call ڪوڪب الفرق stars of the flock, and الراعي والغنم shepherd and flock. — The first part of this name occurs also in the name Ενεμεισάπ Tob. i. 2, 13, 15, 16.

a weapon, a bow and arrow, spear, &c., and ܡܠܝܬ; put for the Apollo of the Greeks.—The name of an idol to which the Sipharenes made their children pass through the fire, 2 Kings xvii. 31. It is joined with ܐܕܪܡ, either as another name for the same idol, or of another such idol. I think the former, i. e., king of riches, (ملك الغنم); which might well apply to Apollo. It is no objection to this, that human sacrifices are not expressly said to have been made to Apollo; for it is evident enough, from Macrobius and others, that every deity might be considered as resolvable into Apollo, in one way or other. Proper name, 2 Kings xix. 37; Isaiah xxxvii. 38.

Au. Ver.—33 They feared the LORD, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence [or, who carried them away from thence].

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Israel;

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them saying, Ye shall not fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them:

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power and a stretched-out arm, him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

37 And the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore; and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye shall fear; and he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children, and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they unto this day.

Pool.—33 They feared the Lord: they worshipped God externally in that way which the Israelites used. Served their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence: these words belong, either, 1. To both the foregoing branches, and to the Israelites; and then the sense is, they trod in the steps of their predecessors, the Israelites, (who, in regard of their several tribes, are both here and elsewhere called nations,) who did, many of them, worship both God in their calves, and Baal too. Or, 2, To the last branch only; but then the words must be otherwise rendered, they served their own gods, after the manner of the nations from which they brought, or carried them, or from whence they (these new inhabitants) were brought, i. e., each of them served the god of the country or place whence he was brought, as is related above, ver. 30, 31. But these nations could not so properly be said to be carried away, or to be carried away captive, (as this Hebrew word signifies,) as the Israelites; and therefore the former interpretation seems more proper.

34 Unto this day they do; either, 1. The Samaritans, whose religion he hath hitherto been describing, and to the description whereof he returns, ver. 41. So the following verses are a digression, wherein he designs only to take an occasion to compare them with the Israelites, and to aggravate the sins of the Israelites above theirs, which he doth, ver. 35, &c., and then returns to the former description, ver. 41. Or rather, 2. The Israelites, who are the principal subjects of this whole discourse; and of whom he unquestionably speaks, ver. 35, and thence to ver. 41, of whom also the last words of ver. 33 are to be understood; and from thence he takes an occasion to return to his main business, to relate and aggravate the sins of Israel, and thereby to justify his severe proceedings against them to all the world. So the sense of the place is this, As the Israelites before their captivity gave these nations an ill example, in serving the Lord and Baal together; so, or after their former manner, they do unto this day, in the land of their captivity. They fear not the Lord; though they pretended to fear and serve both the Lord and idols, yet in truth they did not, and do not fear or worship the Lord, but their own calves, or other vain inventions. Or this may intimate that the Israelites were worse than their successors, because these feared the Lord and idols too; but they did quite cast off the fear and worship of God in their captivity, and wholly degenerate into heathenish idolatry. Their statutes; i. e., God's law delivered to their fathers, and to them as their inheritance, Psalm cxix. 111. The children of Jacob: i. e., themselves; the noun put for the pronoun; which is usual among the Hebrews.

Bp. Patrick.—33 They feared the Lord, &c.] That is, after the manner of the ten tribes, who worshipped the Lord, and the golden calves together with him, and sometimes Baal, and other gods (ver. 16).

34 These, and the following words, give an account of the children of Israel; who being carried captive out of their own land,

(as hath been related), were not at all amended thereby; but still neglected all the laws which God had given them, and did not worship him alone; and therefore in truth "they feared not the Lord."

35 Whose sins he aggravates (and thereby justifies his severe proceedings against them) by representing them as a select people, who were in a strict and gracious covenant with him, obliging them not to show the least respect to any other god but himself.

41 Just thus did the nations who came in their room into the country of Samaria: they joined their own gods with the Lord God of Israel, and continued so to do, they and their posterity, unto the time this book was written, and long after.

Bp. Horsley.—There seems to have been a transposition of the parts of this chapter. From the 7th verse to the 23d inclusive, the corrupt manners of the people of Israel are described. From the 24th to the 33d inclusive, the new inhabitants, placed by the king of Assyria in Samaria, are the whole subject of the narrative. At the 34th, the narrative returns abruptly to the manners of the Israelites, which are described such as they were after the captivity. In the 41st verse the subject of the new inhabitants is as abruptly resumed. I am persuaded that the seven verses from the 34th to the 40th inclusive should come immediately after the 23d, and the 41st after the 33d.

Ged.—33 They revered the Lord, but also worshipped their own gods after the manner of those nations from which they had emigrated. (34) Unto this day, they follow their former usages: they revere not the Lord only; nor act solely according to those statutes and decrees; that law and that charge, which he enjoined to the children of Jacob (whose name he called Israel).

Booth.—33 They feared Jehovah, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations from which they had been carried away. 34 Unto this day they observe their former customs, they fear not Jehovah only, nor do according to those statutes, or ordinances; or according to the law and commandment which Jehovah commanded the children of Jacob, (whom he named Israel).

ὄνομα τῇ μητρὶ αὐτοῦ Ἀβου, θυγάτηρ Ζαχαρίου.

Au. Ver.—1 Now it came to pass in the third year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem; his mother's name also was Abi [2 Chron. xxix. 1, Abijah], the daughter of Zachariah.

In the third year. See notes on xvii. 1.

Pool.—In the third year; in the third of those nine years mentioned chap. xvii. 1, of which see there. See below ver. 10.

Bp. Horsley.—In the third year of Hoshea. The first of Hoshea is said to have been the twelfth of Ahaz, chap. xvii. 1. If, therefore, Ahaz lived to the sixteenth year of his own reign (chap. xvi. 2, and 2 Chron. xxviii. 1), Hezekiah could not reign before the fifth of Hoshea.

2 Twenty and five years. See notes on xvi. 2.

Pool.—Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign. How is this credible? For then Ahaz, who lived but six and thirty years, chap. xvi. 2, must beget Hezekiah at the eleventh year of his age. Ans. 1. There are some like instances mentioned by credible authors which these very men will not deny, who are so ready to quarrel with the Holy Scriptures for such matters. 2. This being the confessed custom of sacred and other writers, in the numbering of years, sometimes to omit, and sometimes to add, those which are imperfect or unfinished; and so Ahaz might be near one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and near seventeen years older when he died. And the other hand, Hezekiah, when he began to reign, might be only four and twenty years old complete, and but entered into his five and twentieth year.—And thus Ahaz might be between thirteen and fourteen years old when he got Hezekiah; which is not at all strange, especially in that nation, to which God had promised a singular degree of fruitfulness, and in that house of David, to which God had made so many and such great promises. 3. It is not certain that Ahaz lived only thirty-six years; for those sixteen years which he reigned, chap. xvi. 2, may be computed, not from the first beginning of his reign, when he reigned with his father, (of which see the notes on chap. xv. 30,) which was at the twentieth year of his age, but from the beginning of his reign alone. 4. Some affirm that Hezekiah was not the natural, but only the legal son and successor of Ahaz; for the name of son is given in scripture to such persons; as 1 Chron. iii. 16, compared with 2 Kings xxiv. 17; Matt. i. 12, compared with Jer. xxii. 30; and to adopted sons, Acts vii. 21; Heb. xi. 24; and to sons-in-law, 1 Sam. xxiv. 16; xxvi. 17; Luke iii. 23. Any of these solutions are far more credible to any man of common prudence, than that these sacred books, whose Divine original hath been so fully evidenced both by God and men, are but the fictions and contrivances of a base impostor. And if none of these solutions were sufficient, it is absurd to conclude that a true resolution cannot be found, because it is not yet found; because it is manifest, that many difficulties, both in Scripture and in the arts, which were formerly judged insoluble, have been cleared in later times: and therefore we may justly expect the resolution of other difficulties, which may be thought not yet fully explained. Abi, or Abijah, 2 Chron. xxix. 1.

Au. Ver.—4 He removed the high places, and brake the images [Heb., statues], and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the brassen serpent that Moses had made: for unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it: and he called it Nehushtan [that is, a piece of brass].

4, 22. High places. See notes on 1 Kings iii. 3, p. 719—721.

Groves. See notes on Exod. xxxiv. 13, vol. i., p. 376.

Pool.—He called it Nehushtan, i.e., he said, This serpent, howsoever formerly honoured, and used by God as a sign of his grace, yet now it is nothing but a piece of brass, which can do you neither good nor hurt; and therefore is no fit object for your worship,

Bp. Patrick.—Nehushtan. Some think that Hezekiah called it by this name; others, that the Israelites called it so; the words signifying differently "it was called Nehushtan" viz., by way of contempt and scorn. For the letter nun at the end of a word, the Jews say, is added by way of diminution. And nechosheth signifying brass, this is as much as to say, this serpent was mere brass or copper, and had no power in it, no profit, no ability to help, no divinity; and therefore not to be worshipped with divine honour. Thus Kimchi: It being called this name, signified as much as if Hezekiah had thereby said, "How could it come into any man's heart to think that this serpent could do anything, which is mere brass?" Or, as Ralbag expounds it, "This serpent hath no more virtue in it than the common brass in their houses." For he takes an, in the end of the word, to be the same with am, ipsorum. But there is a great and good man of our own, who, having endeavoured to show that the destruction of the old serpent the devil was foreshadowed by the lifting up the brazen serpent in the wilderness, concludes that Hezekiah was moved with the greater indignation against the worship of it, because in truth, it never was the type of our Saviour and Redeemer, but a figure of his grand enemy. This made him express such detestation of it, as is imported, he thinks, in the word Nehushtan. The signification of which is not to be found in our lexicons: for though nechoseth signify no more than brass, yet nehushtan imports no less than our

Au. Ver.—18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe [or secretary], and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder.

Bp. Patrick.—The king sent his major-domo, as they now speak, and his secretary, or a principal doctor of the law, and the master of the requests. For since the king of Assyria sent three messengers, he thought fit to send as many. Isaiah, indeed, mentions only Rab-shakeh, as sent by the king of Assyria; which Seder Olam Rabba thinks is meant of the first legation; but in the second, when he besieged Libnah (xix. 8), he joined Tartan and Rabсарis with him. It is very uncertain what officer Shebna was; for he is said, Isaiah xxii. 15, to be over the house, and the LXX sometimes make him treasurer, sometimes scribe, and Mr. Selden thinks he might be præfectus prætorio (Lib. De Succes. in Pontif. p. 142).

Au. Ver.—20 Thou sayest [or, talkest], (but they are but vain words [Heb., word of the lips]), I have counsel and strength for the war [or, but counsel and strength are for the war]. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou rebellest against me?

Pool.—But they are but vain words, or, surely, or, only, words of the lips, i. e., vain, unprofitable, idle talk, without any effect; or they come not from thy heart; thou speakest this against thy own knowledge. Counsel and strength for the war; the words are and may be rendered otherwise; either thus, Thou speakest surely words of the lips, i. e., thou encouragest thyself and thy people with talk and words; but counsel and strength are for war, are necessary for thy defence; neither of which thou hast within thyself, but must seek them from others; and where wilt thou find them? on whom (as it follows) dost thou trust? Or thus, Thou sayest, I have the word of my lips, (either, 1. Words wherewith to pray to God for help; or, 2. Eloquence to encourage my soldiers and people,) counsel and strength for war, i. e., I am furnished with all things necessary for my defence.

tongue) for the words, as the Syriac, and Arabic, and Chaldee render it.

Bp. Patrick.—Reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard.] Reprove him for the words (as the Targum expounds it), which he had spoken against God. But Lud. De Dieu, following R. Solomon Jarchi, thinks that the word we translate reprove, signifies to prove, and to demonstrate by arguments. And so refers it to Rabshakeh in this manner: "It may be the Lord will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, whom the king of Assyria hath sent to reproach the living God: and that openly, with a bold face, fearing nothing, because all things succeed according to their hearts' desire." And he saith, he shall wonder if this sense displease any body.

Verba הִיָּחַ הִיָּחַ non sunt cum proxime antecedentibus sed cum initio commatis construenda, hoc sensu: fortasse audiet Jova, deus tuus, omnia verba Rabsacis, quem misit rex Assyriæ, dominus ejus, ut cavillaretur deum immortalem, eumque castigabit, puniet (הִיָּחַ Præt. relat.) propter (Gen. xviii. 28; 2 Reg. xiv. 6 al.) verba ista, quæ audivit Jova, deus tuus. Consentientem habeo Fäsius.

Au. Ver.—7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

Pool.—I will send a blast upon him, Heb., a wind, a storm or tempest, by which name God's judgments are oft called, i. e., a violent, and sudden, and terrible stroke; namely, that miraculous destruction of his army, of which ver. 35. Although the place may be rendered thus, I will put a spirit within him, so that he shall hear a rumour, and return, &c. For by spirit is many times understood an imagination, or inclination, or affection [so Secker, Gesen., Lee, Ged., Booth., Maurer]; in which sense we read of the spirit of fear, 2 Tim. i. 7; of the spirit of jealousy, Numb. v. 14; of the spirit of slumber, Rom. xi. 8. Or, a spirit against (for so the Hebrew preposition beth is oft used, as hath been noted before) him; of whom this word is elsewhere used, as Judg. xix. 23; 1 Sam. xvi. 14, 23; 1 Kings xxii. 23; as it is also given to man's soul, Job xii. 10; Eccles. xii. 7, which is a spiritual substance, as the angels are. And this interpretation seems most agreeable to the design of this verse, which is in brief to represent all the judgments of God which were to befall him, and which are related in the following history; and therefore all the other particulars being contained in the following branches of this verse; the tidings of Tirhakah, ver. 9, in these words, he shall hear a rumour; his returning to his own land, and being slain there, ver. 36, 37, in the next words; it seems most probable that the chiefest of all the judgments, to wit, the destruction of 185,000 soldiers in one night, ver. 35, is not omitted here, but expressed in the first branch of the verse; and the spirit here is the same thing which is there called an angel; this latter word being there used to limit and explain the former, which otherwise was of a doubtful signification.

Dr A. Clarke.—The rumour was, that Tirhakah had invaded Assyria. The blast was that which slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand of them in one night; see ver. 35.

Ged.—7 Lo! I will put him in another mind: for he shall hear a report, that will make him return unto his own land.

Booth.—7 Behold, I will put another spirit in him, and he shall hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land, &c.

Another spirit in him.] Secker has observed, that this is the uniform sense of the words. They here mean another mind, a spirit of fear. Compare Isa. xxxi. 8, 9. This was produced by hearing of the invasion of his own country by Tirhakah, the Ethiopian, or of his coming towards Judea.

Geen.—עַל מַדְבָּרָא לְהַצִּיחַ to suggest a purpose to any one, to inspire him with it, 2 Kings xix. 7; Is. xxxvii. 7.

Prof. Lee.—יָד IV. Mind, spirit, disposition, &c. בָּ—בֵּן, placed—in, 2 Kings xix. 7.

Maurer.—7 h. e. indam ei hunc animum, ut audito rumore quodam (vs. 9) consilium in terram suam redeundi capiat.

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 And when he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee: he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

Pool.—King of Ethiopia, Heb., of Cush, i. e., either, 1. Of Arabia, as that word is most commonly meant; of which see the notes, and especially my Latin Synopsis, upon Numb. xii. 1. Or rather, 2. Of Ethiopia beyond Egypt. Nor was there any need that he should force his passage through Egypt, which is objected against this opinion by a very learned man; because the Egyptians (against whom this Sennacherib warred, as heathen historians, Herodotus and Berosus, relate) and the Ethiopians were confederates in this expedition, as Josephus expressly affirms; who lived above 1600 years nearer the time when this was done than we, and therefore was more likely to understand it.

Bp. Patrick.—It is to be noted, that there were two countries called Cush (which we translate Ethiopia); one in Africa beyond Egypt, the other in Arabia, which is the Ethiopia here meant. For the king of the other was far off, and must have marched through Egypt before he could come to fight with Sennacherib. But this was near, and was able to raise a powerful army, as appears by the vast forces which Zerah brought against Asa (2 Chron. xiv. 9). And thus 2 Chron. xxi. 16, as Bochartus observes, must necessarily be understood, where the Arabians, whom God stirred up against Jehoram, are said to be near to the Ethiopians, which cannot be true of those beyond Egypt (see his Phaleg., lib. iv., cap. 2).

Ver.—23 By [Heb., by the hand of] thy messengers thou hast reproached the LORD, and hast said, With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down the tall [Heb., the tallness, &c.] cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the forest of his Carmel [or, the forest and his fruitful field, Is. x. 18].

Pool.—Will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: this may be understood, either, 1. Mystically, I will destroy the princes and nobles of Judah, or their strongest cities. Or rather, 2. Literally, I will cut down the trees that hinder my march, and plain and prepare the way for all my numerous army and chariots.

And by this one instance he intimates that nothing should stand in his way; no, not the highest and strongest places. The lodgings of his borders, i. e., those towns and cities (which he calls lodgings in way of contempt) which are in his utmost borders, and most remote from me. I am come into the land of Canaan at one border, Lebanon, and I resolve to march on to the other extreme border, and so to destroy the whole country, from one border to another; the borders of a land being oft put for the whole land within its borders. Or, as it is in the Hebrew, into the lodging of his border; for which, in the parallel place, Isa. xxxvii. 24, it is into the height of his border. And so this may be understood of Jerusalem; which it is not probable that in all his brags he would omit; and against which his chief design now lay; which he here calleth a lodging for its contemptible smallness, if compared with his great and vast city of Nineveh: or, as it is in Isa. xxxvii., the height, for its two famous mountains, Zion and Moriah; or for the mountains which were round about Jerusalem, Psal. cxxv. 2; and he adds, of his border, because this city was in the border of Judah; as being part of it in the tribe of Benjamin, and near the kingdom of the ten tribes, which was now in the Assyrians' hands. The forest of his Carmel, i. e., the forest of Mount Carmel, which may seem to be another inaccessible place, like Lebanon. Or, into his forest, and his fruitful field; for Carmel, though properly it was a pleasant and fruitful mountain in the tribe of Issachar, of which see Josh. xii. 22; yet it is oft used to signify any fruitful place, as is manifest from Isa. x. 18; xvi. 10; Jer. ii. 7. And thus all the parts of the land are here enumerated; the mountains, the cities, the woods, and the fruitful fields. Or, his fruitful forest, to wit, Jerusalem; which is thought by many interpreters to be called a forest, Jer. xxi. 14; Ezek. xx. 46, a name which agrees well enough to cities, where buildings are very numerous, and close, and high, like trees in a forest. And if Jerusalem might be called a forest, it might well be called Hezekiah's Carmel, or fruitful place, because his chief strength, and treasure, and fruit was now in it; and this last word may seem to be added here, to intimate that this was not like other forests, unfruitful and barren. And so both this and the foregoing words are understood of the same place, even of Jerusalem; the last branch being joined to the former by way of apposition; into the lodging of his border, the forest of his Carmel, or his fruitful forest; there being no more words in the Hebrew text.

Bp. Horsley.—The lodgings of his borders. For מלון, read, as in the parallel place in Isaiah, סרס, קצר; “the height of his border.”

Itaque pro mendo habendum רכב...מלון קצה: Masora, רכב, tanquam extrema ejus; neque castigat מלון, quod tamen sententiam habere ullam vix potest. Nam quòd Clericus convertit, diversorium quod est in ejus extremitate, de habitaculo quodam, quod in summo Libano esset, id accipiens, non credo id sapienti Lectori placiturum, ut Sennacherib, magna jactans, dixerit se penetrasse tandem cum suis curribus ad diversorium quoddam, quod in summo Libano esset. Et præterea scriptionem מלון in mendo esse demonstrant omnes Veteres, qui nec legunt מלון, nec aliud verbum, in quo inesce possit diversorium. Adde; apud Esaiam xxxvii. 24, legi סרס, quæ scriptura multò est commodior, penetravi ad altitudinem extremitatis ejus; quanquam meliùs עבי, densitatum ejus, quàm עבי. Certe legit Syrus עבי, loco utroque parallelo; nam utrobique convertit סרס, quod Gabriel Sionita poterat interpretari ramorum, non, ut fecit, extremitatis; nempe oppositio est inter densitatem, et ים, syloam. With the sole of my feet.

Ged., Booth.—In my progress.

Bp. Patrick.—And with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.] This is commonly thought to signify, that he had gone dry-shod with his whole army over great rivers, whose streams he turned another way; and so had taken the strongest fortresses, surrounded with deep waters and great ramparts. But Bochartus hath made a plainer paraphrase upon these words, which he thus translates: "I have dried up the rivers of Egypt." As much as to say, "I will enter as easily into Egypt, in which you confide, as if, when I come thither, all the rivers wherewith it is environed, should be dried up" (see his Hierozoicon par. ii. lib. v. cap. 15). For the Hebrew word masor (which we translate everywhere besieged places, or defences, or fortresses) should rather be taken for the singular of Mesoraim, which by contraction is called Mitzraim, that is, Egypt. And if this be allowed, the sense here then is, as I said before, "I have dried up all the rivers of Egypt:" which was the highest vaunt he could make of his power, and numerous forces. Thus Isaiah xix. 6, "The brooks of defences shall be dried up," is interpreted by Kimchi, "The rivers of Egypt shall be emptied and dried up." And more plainly, Micah vii. 12, where "from the fortress to the river" is so obscure, that it is not to be understood; but "from Egypt to Euphrates" is such clear sense, that one cannot but think it should be so translated; for those were the bounds of the land of Canaan.

Au. Ver.—25 Hast thou not heard long ago how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps [or, Hast thou not heard how I have made it long ago, and formed it of ancient times? should I now bring it to be laid waste, and fenced cities to be ruinous heaps?].

Pool.—Hast thou not long since learned that there is a supreme God, by whose decree and providence all these wars and calamities were sent and ordered, whose mere instrument thou art? Or, as it is in the margin of our Bibles, Hast thou not heard that (a particle oft understood) I have made (i. e., constituted, or purchased, or adorned, for all these ways is this Hebrew verb used) it (either Jerusalem, or rather, the Jewish nation; the relative pronoun being put without the antecedent, which is to be gathered out of the context;) long ago, and formed it of ancient times? i. e., didst thou not hear what I did for this people many ages since, that I carried them out of Egypt in spite of Pharaoh and all his host; and through the Red Sea, and through the vast howling wilderness; and then brought them into this land by a strong hand, by which I destroyed all their enemies, and planted them in their stead? By which thou mayest understand how dear this people are to me, and how easily I could destroy thee before them, if I saw it fit; and that the places which thou hast taken, and the conquest which thou hast made here, are not to be imputed to thy valour or numbers, but unto my providence, who for wise and just reasons have given them up into thy hands, as it here follows. This may seem to be the truest sense, because that barbarous prince and people were much more likely to hear the tidings of what God did for the Israelites in Egypt, and at the Red Sea, and in Canaan, the fame of which was spread in all those parts, than to hear of or be instructed in the doctrine of God's particular providence in the government of several nations, and all their counsels and actions of state and war. For though the Assyrian was indeed the rod in God's hand, &c., Isaiah x. 5, yet he did not so understand it, nor was God in all his thoughts.

Now have I brought it to pass that thou shouldst be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps: this translation seems better to agree both with the foregoing branch of this verse, and with the following verse, than the other interrogative translation in the margin; and the plain sense seems to be this: Great things I have done for this people, which thou canst not be ignorant of; but now I have changed my course towards them, resolved to punish them severely for their sins; and therefore now I have brought it to pass, i. e., I have so disposed of things by my providence that thou shouldst be a great and victorious prince, and that thou shouldst employ thy forces against them to do my work upon them, that thou shouldst be (to wit, a person raised up and fitted and strengthened for this very purpose) to lay waste fenced cities (and to turn them) into ruinous heaps.

Au. Ver.—29 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year sow ye and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

Pool.—A sign unto thee, to wit, of the certain accomplishment of the promises here made to thee; that Zion should triumph over this insulting enemy, ver. 21; that God would not only preserve the city from his present fury, ver. 34, but also that God would bless his people with a durable prosperity, and a happy increase, ver. 30, 31.
And thus it is not only a sign of a short deliverance, which would be past before this sign was fulfilled, (though there are instances of such signs as followed the thing done, as Exod. iii. 12; Isaiah vii. 14,) but of a future mercy which was to continue long after that sign. And this sign was the more necessary, because otherwise Hezekiah and his people had cause to fear that the Assyrians would be greatly enraged for their shameful repulse, and the destruction of their army, and would quickly recruit their army, and return against them with far greater force and violence. But some affirm that Sennacherib, when he heard of Tir-hakah's march against him, of which ver.
9, went with his army to meet him, and overthrew him, and the Egyptian who was joined with him, as was noted before; and prosecuted his victory by following them into Egypt and Ethiopia; in the conquest of which he spent two years, in which space the people did eat such things as grew of themselves; and in the third year returned to Jerusalem, intending to besiege it. It is true, it is said, and so the sign went before the thing, (which may be objected against the truth of this relation,) ver. 9, that when he heard of Tirhakah, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, pretending as if he would forthwith come against him; but it is not said that he did so, nor is it set down what he did with Tirhakah, because the design of the sacred writer was only to write the history of the Jewish nation; not of others, but only with respect to them.

Bp. Patrick.—29 This shall be a sign unto thee, This is spoken to Hezekiah.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, &c.] This was not a sign of the truth of his prophecy, because it was to come after that was fulfilled; but a token of God's extraordinary favour and love to them, when Sennacherib was gone; and they were in fear of another enemy, viz., a grievous famine. For though he had trodden down or eaten up all the corn with his army, yet they should find sufficient left to maintain them this year, which was the fourteenth of Hezekiah. And though the next was the sabbatical year, in which they were to let the land rest, and neither sow nor reap, yet he promises enough should grow up of itself to sustain them, without any culture, out of the corn scattered in the former year. And then, in the sixteenth year, God assures them of liberty to till their land as they were wont, and that they should sow and reap as in a time of peace, when no enemy appeared, nor there was any fear of any. But until the corn sprung up and was ripe that year, they lived upon what grew of itself in the sabbatical year without tillage.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Ye shall eat this year, &c. This was to be a sign to Hezekiah, that his deliverance had not been effected by natural or casual means; for as without a miracle the ravaged and uncultivated land could not yield food for its inhabitants, so not without miraculous interference could the Assyrian army be cut off and Israel saved.

Booth.—And this shall be a sign to thee, Hezekiah.

Eat [so Dathe., Ged.] this year, &c.

29 This shall be a sign.] How could an event after the deliverance be a sign of that deliverance? For the direction to sow in the third year supposes the departure of the enemy. No answer to this difficulty is more pertinent, than what Rosenmüller has given.

—that to predict a subsequent event, is a clear indication of the certainty of a prior event, on which it depends. Thus Exod. iii. 12, worshipping God on Mount Horeb implied the deliverance of Israel from the fiery furnace of Egypt. Hence the word sign not only signifies a prodigy—a miracle, but anything which confirms a promise made.

Houb.—29 אכל: Id circulo castigatur in Codicibus: vel אכל, comede, vel אכלו, comedite.

Alii pro imperativo positum putant: edite, ut hæc omnia ad futurum tempus respiciant. Sed cf. vs. 35, 36, ubi Sancheribus non multo post castra movisse dicitur.

Pilkington.—We read 2 Kings xix. 29, "Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same." This is the translation of שדו (which is only used in this place;) but the propriety of the expression cannot well be defended; nor is it much better expressed in the other versions. It is sometimes very difficult properly to render appropriated terms, of which this seems to be one, for from hence it appears, that שדו was made use of as a term, to signify the natural produce of the ground, the first year it was uncultivated; and שדו the natural produce of it the second year.

Au. Ver.—35 And it came to pass that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians an hundred fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

Pool.—That night; either, 1. In the night following this message of the prophet to Hezekiah; or, 2. In that famous night when God destroyed the Assyrians, it was done in this manner. For such expressions are oft used of an indefinite and uncertain time, as that day is frequently taken, as Isa. iv. 1; xxvi. 1; xxvii. 1, &c.

The angel of the Lord.

Ged., Booth.—An angel of the Lord [Heb., Booth., Jehovah].

An hundred fourscore and five thousand. So the ancient versions and most modern commentators.

Boothroyd.—Rosenmüller, after Wepler, understands מֵאֵחָ to signify leaders or chiefs, and renders, “a hundred and eighty-five chiefs,” and if so many of the chiefs, of course a large number of the others, perished. This interpretation, they think, is supported by 2 Chron. xxii. 21. “And Jehovah sent an angel, which cut off all the mighty men of valour, and the leaders and captains in the camp of the king of Assyria.” All the ancient versions render, “a hundred and eighty-five thousand.”

Bp. Patrick.—37 Nisroch.] The LXX here calls this god Nesorach; and upon Isaiah, where this story is again told, Asarach. But what any of these names signify, Mr. Selden acknowledges he cannot tell. But Kircher adventures to say it was the image of a ship, representing the ark of Noah; the relics of which Josephus tells us, some reported, were, in his time, in the neighbouring mountains of Armenia. And a later writer, Beyerus (in his additions to Selden, De Diis Syris), thinks it signifies as much as the bird of Noah, that is, a dove which was worshipped by the Assyrians: or, as others conjecture (for they can do no more), this word is derived from nes, which in Chaldee signifies a province, and rac, which signifies a king; that is Jupiter the king, and conservator of that province.

Gesen.—נִסְרוֹךְ Nisroch, pr. n. of an idol of

CHAP. XX. 1.

Au. Ver.—1 In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order [Heb., Give charge concerning thine house, 2 Sam. xvii. 23]; for thou shalt die, and not live.

Pool.—In those days, i. e., in that year of the Assyrian invasion, as is manifest from hence, that that was in Hezekiah's fourteenth year, chap. xviii. 13, and God now added fifteen years more to him, chap. xx. 6; and yet Hezekiah reigned only twenty-nine years in all, chap. xviii. 2. And this happened either, first, After the destruction of Sennacherib's army. Or, secondly, Before it [so Usher, Patrick, Clarke], as may be thought from ver. 6, where he speaks of his deliverance from the king of Assyria as a future thing. It is true, that when Hezekiah received that insolent message from the Assyrian, he was in health, and went into the temple to pray, chap. xix. 14; but there might be time more than enough for this sickness and recovery between that threatening and this destruction of the Assyrian.

Bp. Patrick.—In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death.] This is set down after the death of Sennacherib; but with this general note only of the time, wherein this sickness fell out, in those days. Which, as Primate Usher observes in his annals, doth not relate to what went just before (to the time when the king of Assyria invaded the land), as is evident from ver. 6 of this chapter; where he promises to add fifteen years to his life, and also to deliver him from the king of Assyria. Which deliverance, therefore, was after this sickness, which was in the latter end of his fourteenth year; to which if we add fifteen, they make up the whole twenty-nine years of his reign.

Ver. 4.

Au. Ver.—4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle court [or, city], that the word of the Lord came to him, saying.

Pool.—Into the middle court, to wit, of the king's palace; of which see on 1 Kings vii. 8. Or, into the middle city, as it is in the Hebrew. For some observe that there were three cities, or three parts of this city; one called the city of David in Zion; another called Jebus, or Salem; and a third, which was betwixt these two parts, and united them all into one city, called Jerusalem. This is noted to show God's great readiness to hear the sincere and fervent prayers of his children.

Houb.—4 וַיָּבֵי יִשְׁעִיָּהוּ לֹא יָצָא הָעִיר הַהִיא, nondum exierat urbe media. Lud. Cappellus scripturam וַיְדַבֵּר hoc modo tuebatur: "Nempe Jerusalem in tres partes, quasi totidem urbes, divisa atque distincta erat, uti constat ex Josepho. Erat nempe forum superius, sive civitas David, in qua arx, regum domicilium atque regia. Erat et forum inferius, sive civitas inferior, in qua acra erat, et præterea mons templi, qui inter utramque civitatem superiorem et inferiorem situs erat. Sensus itaque fuerit, Esaiam nondum ingressum fuisse montem templi; per quem e regia in inferiorem civitatem erat transitus...cum a Deo jussus est redire ad Ezechiam...Sed Masoretæ Isaiæ iter multo brevius contraxerunt; volunt enim legi אֶתְרִי, atrium, pro הַדָּר, ita ut non unam litteram, sed totam vocem mutant, nulla necessitate...LXX tamen et Hieronymus in vulgata versione et Targum sequuntur omnes constanter lectionem τοῦ Keri. LXX enim habent, ἡν Ἡσαίας ἐν τῇ αὐλῇ τῇ μεσῇ, vulgata versio, antequam egredieretur Esaias mediam partem atrii. Targum, אֶתְרִי מֵדִיָּה, atrium medium." Addere potuit Lud. Cappellus, habere etiam : atrium medium, Syrum et Arabem; ut constet in omnium Veterum Codicibus scriptum fuisse הַדָּר, non הַדָּר; quibus addendi sunt Codices novi illi, ad quos Masora verbum הַדָּר castigabat; itaque autoritatem majorem habere הַדָּר, quam הַדָּר. Præterea hæc Cappelliana distinctio urbis mediæ, a cæteris urbis Jerusalem partibus, locum habere in sacris Codicibus explicandis non potest, quoniam de illa urbe mediæ ne γὰρ quidem apud sacros scriptores: Nec ipse Josephus memorat urbem mediam, sed forum superius et inferius; sic ut ne ipse quidem Josephus Lud. Cappello favere videatur.

Dath.—4 Tum Jesaiam, qui nondum ad medium atrium a) processerat, Jova sic est allocutus.

a) Lectio textualis habet quidem הַדָּר, sed marginalis הַדָּר, atque hanc quoque expresserunt omnes antiqui interpretes, et præterea quoque viginti Codd. Kennicolti. Illa videtur tantum errore scribarum litteras non valde dissimiles mutantium orta esse, cum ne quidem commodam admittat explicationem, neque satis doceri possit, quænam illa urbs mediæ fuerit; cf. Hubigantius.

Maurer.—Nondum egressus erat mediam urbem. K'ri, multi libri et versiones omnes pro הַדָּר exhibent הַדָּר, quam scripturam præferendam duxerunt Dathius, de Wettius, alii. καὶ ἐβόησεν Ἡσαίας ὁ προφήτης πρὸς κύριον, καὶ ἐπέστρεψεν ἡ σκιά ἐν τοῖς ἀναβαθμοῖς εἰς τὰ ὀπίσω δέκα βαθμοῖς.

Au. Ver.—11 And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the LORD: and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial [Heb., degrees] of Ahaz.

Pool.—Ten degrees backward. Quest. 1. What were these degrees? Ans. Lines in the dial; but whether each of these lines or degrees noted an hour, or half an hour, or a quarter of an hour, is uncertain, and not very considerable in this case. Quest. 2. What was it that went down? Ans. Either, first, The shadow alone went back without the sun. And whereas the sun is said to have gone down, that may be spoken according to appearance, as other passages of Scriptures are understood; as when the sun is said to go down, Jer. xv. 9, and to be turned into darkness, Joel ii. 31. Or, secondly, The sun itself went back, and the shadow with it. This may seem most probable, first, By comparing this with Josh. x. 13, where the sun itself stood still. Secondly, Because it is said the sun itself returned, Isa. xxxviii. 8; for which he here mentions the shadow only, because the miracle was not so easily discovered in the sun as in the shadow of a dial. And though the sun may be elsewhere taken improperly, yet where the improper signification is unnecessary, the proper is and ought to be preferred before it. Thirdly, Because this miracle was noted by the Babylonians, who, having understood that it was done for Hezekiah's sake, sent to inquire into the truth and manner of it, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. Object. If this had been done, the heathen historians and astronomers would have taken notice of it, which we do not find that they did. Ans. So it is most probable they did, although those books be not now extant; which is not strange; this being confessed and bewailed, that so very few of the first and ancient writers are now left; Herodotus himself, the first, and father of the ancient historians, being long after this time. And yet it is observed, that there are some intimations of these things left, though mixed with fables, as many true histories were; as what the poets fabled of Jupiter's making the night twice as long as it should have been, that he might enjoy Alcmena longer.

Bp. Patrick.—11 It is observed by many modern interpreters, that there is not a word here spoken concerning the sun's going back; but only of the shadow upon the dial, which might by the power of God go either forward or backward, the sun still holding its course, as it was wont to do. And the degrees or lines in the dial may signify either hours, or half-hours, or, as some think, quarters (see Vossius, de Orig. et Progressu Idol., lib. ii., cap. 9). Now the going back being three times mentioned in this chapter, and always spoken of the shadow, therefore they conclude the miracle was wrought upon the dial only, not upon the very body of the sun. It is said, indeed, in Isaiah xxxviii. 8, "So the sun returned ten degrees;" but they think that may be meant of the shadow of the sun (as it goes before), God so disposing of the rays of the sun, and ordering the light, that no shadow should be projected, but where the prophet foretold. This I thought fit to represent; but must add, that the ancient Jews and Christians too, took the words of Isaiah to signify that the sun itself went back, and not merely the shadow. Whom Primate Usher in his annals follows, whose words are these: "The sun and all the heavenly bodies went back; and as much was detracted from the next night as was added to this day" (A.M. 4001). Which was done, I suppose on a sudden, by the power of God, and lasted not long before all was restored again to their usual place, so that no change was made in the state of the heavenly bodies. But, that there was some change for the present, was observed both in the northern part of the world at Babylon (from whence Merodach-baladan sent to inquire about this wonder, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31) and also in the southern, in the land of Egypt. As we may gather from a remarkable passage in Herodotus, who tells us in his Euterpe, cap. i., 42, that the Egyptians had observed strange alterations in the motions of the sun; so that it had risen four times ἐξ ἡθέων, "out of its usual course," ἐντεῦθεν νῦν δις καταδύεται, ἐντεῦθεν δις ἐπαντείλει, &c. "it rising twice where it now sets, and setting twice where it now rises;" and yet, οὐδὲν τῶν κατ' Αἰγυπτίων ὑπὸ ταῦτα ἐτεροιωθῆναι; "and yet no change at all made among the Egyptians by these things," neither in the earth, nor the river, nor any thing else. This is a plain evidence that their neighbours (and many others it is like) had heard of the unusual motions of the sun (though without any alteration in the heavenly bodies, which were soon returned to their former station), but had not Scribe.—See notes on 2 Sam. viii. 17, pp. 559, 560.

Bp. Patrick.—I have found the book of the law, &c. The book of Deuteronomy, saith Procopius Gazæus. But it was rather the whole book of the law written by Moses; that authentic copy which by God's command was laid up in the most holy place (Deut. xxxi. 24, &c.). About which the Hebrew doctors made great difficulties in their explication of this place, particularly R. Lipman in his Nitzacon, out of which Hottinger hath alleged a long passage concerning this matter, in his Historica Ecclesiastica, N. T., sect. 16, par. iv., p. 137, where he justly thinks it a wonder that Josiah should so early fear God, and begin to reform religion, if he had never seen the book of the law before this time. And how should the people have kept such a passover, and the priests been so well instructed in the rites of it this very year (2 Chronicles xxxiv. 19)? For the copies of the book now found could not be so soon made and dispersed every where as to teach them these things. It is most likely therefore, nay certain, that though this was the original book, yet the Jews had many copies of the law among them, though some of them perhaps imperfect or corrupted. For they report that Manasseh blotted the name of Jehovah out of all the books he could find. Hilkiah, therefore, rejoiced that he had found the original, by which all might be corrected. Which had been hid, it is probable, from the impious fury of their idolatrous kings, in some secret place of the temple, where it was now found when they were about to repair it: and the finding it at this very time, when Josiah was making a reformation of religion, could not but be looked upon as a remarkable providence, which very much affected him, as we read afterward.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew word mishneh, which we translate college (and which the Targum takes to signify a school), is, in the margin of our Bibles, translated the second part. For there were three walls about Jerusalem, as Abarbinel observes. Within the first of which lived artificers, and the common people; within the second, the better sort, the wise men, prophets, and prophetesses, lived; and within the third, was the mountain of the Lord, as they speak. And the Hebrew phrase is not much different, "the keepers of the thresholds;" that is the entrance into those chambers (as Hottinger thinks) wherein were kept such things as were of public use in the temple. Of which there were seven: wherein the priests' garments were laid up, and other such-like things.

Au. Ver.—5 And he put down [Heb., caused to cease] the idolatrous priests [Heb., chemarim, Hos. x. 5. Foretold, Zeph. i. 4], whom the king of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem; them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun and to the moon, and to the planets [or, twelve signs, or, constellations], and to all the host of heaven.

The idolatrous priests.

Bp. Patrick.—These idolatrous priests are called chemarim in the Hebrew, because they were clothed in black garments (as Kimchi gives the reason, both upon this place and upon Zeph. i. 4); whereas the priests of the Most High were clothed in white; especially those whose genealogy was not questioned. They, indeed, who could not make out their descent, were clothed in a black habit, to distinguish them from undoubted priests; and so were they who had any defect or blemish in their body, as appears from the Talmud in Middoth. And indeed it is certain, that they among the heathens, who sacrificed to the infernal gods, were clothed with such vestments, as appears by Canidia in Horace, lib. i., sat. 8, and Medea in Apollonius Rodius, lib. iii., ver. 861; from whence some think they had the name of μελαγχόροι, which we find in some ancient inscriptions. And thus the Egyptians bewailed Osiris, all which was suitable to their nightly sacrifices; wherein they were sad for the absence of the sun, who was meant by Osiris, as Gilbertus Cuperus observes in his Harpocrates, p. 129. And here now we have found the original of these chemarim, priests clothed in black. For it was a black ox which represented Osiris among the Egyptians, and it was covered ἱματίῳ μέλανι βυσσίνῳ, "with a black silk garment;" from whence, in all likelihood, the priests came to be so clothed.

Dr. A. Clarke.—5 The idolatrous priests. Who these were is not well known. The Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic call them the priests simply, which the kings of Judah had ordained. Probably they were an order made by the idolatrous kings of Judah, and called kemarim, from כָּמַר, which signifies to be scorched, shrivelled together, made dark, or black, because their business was constantly to attend sacrificial fires, and probably they wore black garments; hence the Jews in derision call Christian ministers kemarim, because of their black clothes and garments.

Gesen.—כָּמָר only in plur. כְּמָרִים idol-priests 2 Kings xxiii. 5; Hos. x. 5; Zeph. i. 4.

Syr. חַעְמָרָא a priest in general. But this word, as well as other Syriac words relating to Divine worship, is restricted by the Hebrews to idol-worship: see Gesch. der Hebr. Sprache p. 58.—As to the etymology, חַעְמָרָא, is pp. blackness, sadness, and concr. "one who goes about in black, in mourning," hence an ascetic, a priest.

Comp. أَيْبَلٌ, أَحْمَلٌ, gloomy, sad, mourning, also an ascetic, monk, ecclesiastic. See Comment. on Isaiah xxii. 12; xxxviii. 15.

Bp. Patrick.—Unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon.] Here Baal is distinguished from the sun [so Dr. A. Clarke]; and therefore signifies the same with Belus, who was a deified king: and indeed it is highly probable, that not only Baal, but Moloch and Adonis, were the names only of some very potent kings, who were adored when they were dead, and in time were thought to be real gods.

To the planets.

Bp. Patrick.—The Hebrew word mazaloth, which the LXX pronounce mazuroth, is thought by Procopius Gazæus to be the name of a star, and most likely the evening star: which others take to signify a constellation, as we translate it in the margin; or all the twelve signs. For the Jewish astronomers call the zodiac, ophanhamazaloth, the circle of the signs.

Bp. Horsley.—To the planets. The Heb. word seems rather to express the physical influences of the planets.

Gesen.—מַזְלוֹת f. plur. (see note) constellations, spec. the twelve signs of the zodiac, 2 Kings xxiii. 5. Sept. μαζουρωθ, as if reading מזווח, as in Job xxxviii. 32. Vulg.

duodecim signa. Targ. מַזְלוֹת, Syr. מַזְלוֹת.

—The same word is frequent in later Heb. writers, and also in a form slightly changed in Aramæan; e. g., מַזְלוֹת שָׁמַיָא constellations of heaven Targ. Isaiah xlvii. 13; מַזְלוֹת שָׁמַיָא the twelve signs Targ. Esth. iii. 7, al.

מַזְלוֹת 2 Kings i. c. Wisd. vii. 17, &c.

The sense signs of the zodiac, therefore, is supported not only by the context, but also by the Aramæan usage, as well as by the almost constant tradition of ancient interpreters. See Thesaur. p. 869.

Note. More difficult is it to determine the origin and true signification of the forms מַזְלוֹת and מַזְלוֹת, which are justly regarded as identical, r and l being interchanged (see in l); although it is uncertain which form is the primary one. Taking first, the softer, מַזְלוֹת, these constellations are held to be so called from their influx or influence upon the destinies of men, from r מַזְלָא to flow; (comp. Lat. influxus stellarum Firmic.) or from their going, revolving, from r מַזְלָא Sodomites. See notes on 1 Kings xiv. 24, pp. 825, 826.

Bp. Patrick.—R. Solomon Jarchi thinks it probable, that among those who worshipped the statues of the moon, or Venus, there were those who prostituted themselves to filthy mixtures. But Mr. Selden, by kedeshim (which we translate sodomites), understands the priests of Astarte, whom St. Jerome upon Hosea iv. calls exsectos, upon pretence of greater purity, depriving themselves of those parts that serve for procreation of children.

Hangings.

Or, garments for the service of the grove, for the idols or the priests belonging to them. Heb. houses, i. e., either little chapels made of woven work, like those which were made of silver, Acts xix. 24; within which there were some representations of their grove idols; or rather, tents made of those curtains. So Bp. Patrick.

Au. Ver.—10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech.

Topheth.

Dr. A. Clarke.—St. Jerome says, that Topheth was a fine and pleasant place, well watered with fountains, and adorned with gardens. The valley of the son of Hinnom, or Gehenna, was in one part; here it appears the sacred rites of Molech were performed, and to this all the filth of the city was carried, and perpetual fires were kept up in order to consume it. Hence it has been considered a type of hell; and in this sense it is used in the New Testament.

It is here said that Josiah defiled this place that no man might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire. He destroyed the image of Molech, and so polluted the place where he stood, or his temple, that it was rendered in every way abominable. The rabbins say that Topheth had its name from תפ, a drum, because instruments of this kind were used to drown the cries of the children that were put into the burning arms of Molech, to be scorched to death. This may be as true as the following definition: "Topheth, or the valley of the son of Hinnom, was a place near Jerusalem, where the filth and offal of the city were thrown, and where a constant fire was kept up to consume the wretched remains of executed criminals. It was a human shambles, a public chopping-block, where the arms and legs of men and women were quartered off by thousands." Query, On what authority do such descriptions rest?

Gesen.—תפ I. pp. Spittle. II. With the art. תפ, Tophet, pr. n. of a place in the valley of the sons of Hinnom (see in מנ lett. a), near Jerusalem, noted for the human sacrifices there offered to Moloch and finally abolished by Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 10; Jer. vii. 32; xix. 6, 13, 14. מְנוֹחַ תְּפֹתֵי Jer. vii. 31 high places of Tophet, i. e., artificial mounds, tumuli, on which those sacrifices were offered.—As to the etymology of the name תפ, it is commonly referred to תפ to spit, and rendered "place to be spit upon," i. e., to be abhorred; but it seems to have borne this name with all, even among the idolaters themselves. Better, therefore, with Noldius in Vind., p. 948, with Lorschbach, and others, to regard תפ as i. q. תפח q. v. denoting place of burning sc. of dead bodies in the funeral rites.

Au. Ver.—11 And he took away the horses that the kings of Judah had given to the sun, at the entering in of the house of the Lord, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the chamberlain [or, eunuch, or, officer] which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

Chamberlain [or, eunuch, or officer]. See notes on 1 Kings xxii. 9, p. 865.

Pool.—The horses; either, 1. The carved or graven horses, to which were adjoined a graven chariot, in which there might be the picture of the sun, which the heathens used to represent in this manner. Or rather, 2. Living horses; for, 1. Such the eastern nations used to consecrate to the sun, to signify the swiftness of his motion. 2. These horses are mentioned apart from the chariots, and are said to be given to the sun, which is not said of the chariots; and to be taken away, when the chariots were burnt, &c.; and a certain place is here allotted to the horses, not to the chariots. To the sun; either to be sacrificed to the sun; or to drag those chariots in which the kings, or some other in their stead, and by their appointment, went forth every morning to worship the rising sun; for both these were the customs of the Armenians and Persians, as Xenophon testifies. At the entering in of the house of the Lord, i. e., by the gate of the outward court of the temple; for the courts are oft contained under the name of the house or temple. The chamberlain, or officer, to whom the care of these horses was committed. In the suburbs; either, 1. Of the city of David; or rather, of the temple; in certain outward buildings belonging to the temple, and the uses thereof. See Ezek. xlv. 2. Heb., in Parvarim; a place near the temple, called also Parbar, 1 Chron. xxvi. 18, though it be not now known either where it was, or why it was so called.

Bp. Patrick.—11 He took away.] That is, he destroyed, as the Hebrew word signifies, ver. 5, where we translate it, "he put down the chemarim;" that is, destroyed or slew those priests, as Bochartus interprets it. So Lev. xxvi. 6, we translate the same word, "I will rid evil beasts out of the land;" that is, destroy them. The LXX here translate it κατέκαυσε, "he burnt" the horses; as before, κατέκαυσε χωμήριμ, "he burnt the priests." Though, perhaps, in both places it should be κατέπαυσε, "he made to cease," as the Hebrew word literally signifies.

Had given to the sun.] That is, had consecrated to the sun; as Lev. xx. 2, they are said to give their children to Moloch. A great number of authors tell us, that among several nations these animals were sacred to the sun (as hawks and some other creatures were), because of their swiftness in their course. But it is uncertain whether they were kept to be sacrificed to the sun (as they were among the Massagetæ, Persians, Armenians, and other people mentioned by Bochartus), or only to be led forth in pomp (as some of the Jews speak) every morning to meet the rising sun. Or, as others take it, the worshippers of the sun got upon these horses early in the morning, and rode out to adore the sun at its rising (see Hierozoicon, par. i., lib. xi., cap. 10).

Which was in the suburbs.] So the Targum interprets the word parvarim; which most translations retain as the name of a place, unto which the street in which these horses were kept reached; from the chamber of Nathan-melech. He was the principal officer, perhaps, that looked after them: and had the oversight of all those stables which were built from the temple gate to Parvarim. And perhaps he rode out himself every morning upon one of them, to salute the rising sun in the king's name.

And burned the chariots of the sun with fire.] The ancients fancied the sun itself was carried about in a chariot (as Bochart observes in the place above mentioned), and therefore chariots as well as horses were dedicated to it. Which he makes an argument, that they were not mere brazen, silver, or golden statues of horses that are here meant; but real living horses to draw those chariots (see Vossius, de Orig. et Prog. Idol., lib. xi., cap. 4). Some of those who think they were only imagines equorum et quadrigarum (as Selden speaks, Syntag. ii. De Diis Syria, cap. 8), "images of horses and chariots," made of some metal or other, imagine they were represented in the shape of griffins, as the famous M. Spoon thought (see Dr. Hyde, De Relig. Vet. Pers., p. 117).

Ged.—11 He took away the horses which the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun, and which were at the entrance of the house of the Lord, by the apartment of Nathan-melech the eunuch, in the suburbs: and, &c.

Booth.—11 And he took away the horses which the kings of Judah had dedicated to the sun, which were at the entrance of the house of Jehovah, by the chamber of Nathan-melech, the eunuch, which was in the suburbs, &c.

Gesen.—פָּרָר 1 Chron. xxvi. 18, and plur. פָּרָרִים 2 Kings xxiii. 11, prob. the open porticos surrounding the courts of the temple, from which was the entrance to the cells or chambers, פָּרָרִים. The form פָּרָר corresponds to Pers. فرار, فرارة, فروار, پَرور; also فروال, فرواله; which signify a summer house, or rather an apartment open on all sides to the light and air. In the Targ. and Talm. פָּרָרִים and פָּרָרִים are the suburbs or places adjacent to a city.

Prof. Lee.—פָּרָרִים, pl. m. once, 2 Kings xxiii. 11. The LXX, Vulgate, and Syriac leave this word untranslated, the last having a פ for the second ר. Modern interpreters translate it suburbs, but on what good authority it does not appear. Gesenius goes to the Persian, and considers it as compounded of פָּרָר, a wall, rampart, and פָּרָר, possessing. But surely the Jews would be under no necessity to borrow a word to express what was outside the wall; and, besides this, the passage requires a place near the Temple, as Bochart has rightly observed. If it is not a Semitic word, it is probably connected in signification with the sun or its worship.

Now the Persian پَرور, denotes flying, swift, and would be a suitable epithet for the horses of the sun, being dedicated ὡς ταχύτατοι τῷ ταχυτάτῳ; and we might then translate the clause, וְהָיָה הָיָה הָיָה הָיָה הָיָה at the chamber of Nathan-melech, the eunuch, who was over the swift (horses).

Au. Ver.—13 And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption [that is, the mount of Olives], which Solomon the king of Israel had builded for Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

Bp. Patrick.—13 Mount of corruption.] That is, mount Olivet (1 Kings xi. 2), which was anciently called harmischah, the mount of unction; because of the olives that grew there in great plenty; but by way of contempt and scorn, was called by the prophets harmaschith, the "mount of corruption," because of the idols that were placed there, whereby the people were corrupted in their religion.

Which Solomon the king of Israel had builded.] It is not to be doubted but these detestable idols had been taken away by such religious kings as Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Hezekiah; but they were restored again by their impious successors, in the very same place, and the same figure with those ancient ones; and so are here called those that Solomon made, because he was the first author of them [so Pool], or at least permitted them to be made by his wives, and connived at their worship, as R. Levi thinks.

Commentaries and Essays.—המסדה. The mount of olives, so called on account of this profanation, by a little change of the letters from המסדה. But it may be queried, whether it stood so originally, or was altered afterwards for the sake of the allusion, as the Chaldee reads סוד ירום, mons olivarum, and a Hebrew MS. reads דר המסדה. This, among many other instances, affords a suspicion of wilful corruption.

Bp. Patrick.—25 He doth not compare him with David and Hezekiah (as Procopius Gazæus here notes), but with other pious kings, such as Asa, Jehoshaphat, and Jotham; who were far inferior to him in piety. And Hezekiah himself was not so exact, and did not make such a thorough search as he did, after all idolatrous practices. The nation also was so much corrupted since his days, by his son, Manasseh, who reigned a long time, that it made the work of reformation more difficult in the time of Josiah. Yet in some regard Hezekiah excelled him; and therefore the same character is given of him xviii. 5, which is here given of Josiah; because of his trust in God, in the time of his greatest distress, for which he was very eminent. But as to repentance, Josiah was most exemplary.

Dead.

Houb., Horsley, Clarke, Ged., Booth.—Dying.

The word מֵת should here be considered as a participle, dying, for it is certain he was not dead; he was mortally wounded at Megiddo, was carried in a dying state to Jerusalem, and there he died and was buried. See 2 Chron. xxxv. 24.—Dr. A. Clarke.

Au. Ver.—33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign [or, because he reigned] in Jerusalem, &c.

Pool.—That he might not reign [so Houb., Ged., Booth.]; or, because he had reigned, i.e., taken the kingdom without right, and without his leave. Or, according to the other reading, in the beginning of his reign; the word reigning being commonly used for beginning to reign; when he was scarce warm in his throne. A tribute, to wit, a yearly tribute, whereby they should acknowledge him to be their superior; and for which he would be their protector when they needed his help.

Au. Ver.—34 And Pharaoh nechoh made Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, &c.

Dr. A. Clarke.—Turned his name to Jehoiakim.] These names are precisely the same in signification: ELIAKIM is God shall arise; JEHOIAKIM, Jehovah shall arise: or, the resurrection of God; the resurrection of Jehovah. That is, God's rising again to show his power, justice, &c. The change of the name was to show Nechoh's supremacy, and that Jehoiakim was only his vassal or viceroy.

Gesen.—יְהִיָּאִים (whom God hath appointed) Eliakim, pr. n. m. a) of a prefect of the palace under king Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 18, &c. b) a son of king Josiah, set upon the throne by Necho king of Egypt, who also changed his name to יְהִיָּאִים (whom Jehovah hath appointed), 2 Kings xxiii. 34, &c.

Au. Ver.—1 In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

Then he turned and rebelled against him.

Houb.—Postea iterum rebellans, ab eo defecit.

וַיָּשָׁב בּוֹ: Verbum pro verbo, et rediit, et rebellavit in eum. Indicat verbum וַיִּמְרֹד, iterationem verbi וַיָּשָׁב, nam jam rebellaverat Joakim adversus Ægypti regem. Sed hoc primum rebellat Joakim in regem Assyriorum; itaque adjungenda iteratio ad verbum וַיָּשָׁב, non autem ad בּוֹ, quod affixum pertinet ad regem Assyriorum.

Ver. 6.

Au. Ver.—6 So Jehoiakim slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

Bp. Patrick.—6 Jehoiakim slept with his fathers.] It appears by this, that to sleep with one's fathers, signifies no more than to die, as he did. For Jehoiakim was not buried with them, nor died in his bed; but being taken by the Chaldeans, he died as they led him out of Jerusalem, and, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah (xxii. 18, 19), they cast him out of the gates, and he had the burial of an ass; that is, lay upon the ground unburied. Abarbinel thinks he died in the way to Babylon; and his body was left in the highway, without any care taken to inter it; but it lay exposed to the sun by day, and to the frost by night. (Jer. xxxvi. 30.)

Au. Ver.—8 Jehoiachin [called Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 16; Jer. xxiv. 1; and Coniah, Jer. xxii. 24, 28] was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. &c.

Pool.—Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign. Object. He was then but eight years old, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9.

Answ. 1. Both are true; in his eighth year he began to reign with his father, who made him king with him, as divers other kings of Israel and Judah had done in the like times of trouble; and in his eighteenth year he reigned alone. 2. He is called a son of eight years when he began to reign, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, because this was the eighth year, not of his age, but of the Babylonish captivity, or bondage; under which both he and his father had been just so long; for it began in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as it is affirmed Jer. xxv. 1, and continued all his reign, which lasted eleven years, chap. xxiii. 36; and so the first year of Jehoiachin was precisely the eighth year of that captivity. 3. To all this might be added, that some here acknowledge an error of the scribe, and affirm, that in the first and best copies, in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, it was not eight but eighteen [so Houb., Dathe]; which they gather from hence, because those two ancient and venerable translators, the Syriac and Arabic, read there, as it is here, was eighteen years old; which, they say, they never would have presumed to do, if they had not so read it in those Hebrew copies, out of which they drew their translation, or in some of them.

He reigned in Jerusalem three months, and ten days, which are added, 2 Chr. xxxvi. 9. But such small sums are frequently omitted in great numbers. See on Gen. xv. 13; 1 Kings xvi. 8.

In the eighth year of his reign.

Bp. Patrick.—That is, in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign; for he began to reign in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, who reigned seven more after that, which was the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 13.

Au. Ver.—13 And he carried out thence all the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house, and cut in pieces all the vessels of gold which Solomon king of Israel had made in the temple of the Lord, as the Lord had said.

Pool.—Cut in pieces; or rather, took away, as this word elsewhere signifies; or cut off, to wit, from the temple [so Patrick]. For why should they cut in pieces those vessels which might conveniently be carried away? And that they were not cut in pieces, but reserved whole, is manifest from Ezra i. 7; Dan. v. 2, 3. All the vessels of gold, i. e., the most and choicest of them, by comparing this with chap. xxv. 14, 15. Which Solomon king of Israel had made; so he expresseth it, either, first, Because these vessels were made by the godly kings of Judah, instead of those which Solomon made, and so they go by his name; Or, secondly, Because though the city and temple had been rifled more than once, both by the kings of Egypt and Israel, and by the wicked kings of Judah, yet these golden vessels were preserved from them, either by the care of the priests, who hid them out of the way; or by the clemency of the conquerors, and the reverence which they bore to such sacred instruments; or by the special providence of God disposing their hearts to leave them. Or if they had been taken away by any of these kings, they might afterwards be recovered by the entreaty or at the cost of the godly kings of Judah.

Ver. 14.

Au. Ver.—14 And he carried away all Jerusalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thousand captives, and all the craftsmen and smiths: none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land.

Au. Ver.—4 And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the king's garden: (now the Chaldees were against the city round about:) and the king went the way toward the plain.

Hallet.—And all the men of war fled by night. Our translators have well noted that the word fled is wanting in the Hebrew. And every one must think that it was not omitted by the author of the book, but by careless transcribers. The truth is, one or two words more are here omitted, as is most evident from the other, and more correct copy which we have of this chapter, Jerem. lii., where verse 7 is read thus, and all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night [so Horsley]. It is to be observed too, that the Syriac and Arabic versions of the Kings retain all these words.

Houb., Dathe, Maurer, Ged., Booth.—Fled in the night.

Houb.—Et omnes viri bellatores ... per viam. Deest verbum, quo nominativo utantur viri bellatores; et solus Chaldæus mutilum contextum habuit. Nam cæteri legebant, vel exierunt, (יָצְאוּ) vel fugerunt (יָרָדוּ). Melius utrumque restituitur ex Jeremiæ, cap. lii. 7, ubi legitur, יָרָדוּ יָצְאוּ, et fugerunt et exierunt per viam.

Dathe.—Deest verbum יָרָדוּ ex Jeremia supplendum, quod etiam omnes antiqui interpretes præter Chaldæum habent. Codd. Kennicotti varias h. l. lectiones exhibent. Cod. 93, et 168 habent הִלָּלוּ יָרָדוּ, 180 et 250 habent הִלָּלוּ יָרָדוּ, tandem 201 in margine additum habet יָרָדוּ. Verbum deesse non posse, contextus probat.

And the king went.

Houb., Dathe, Horsley, Ged., Booth.—And they went.

Houb.—Sequitur יָרָדוּ, et abiit, quod ut de rege Sedeciâ intelligi possit, tamen melius legitur יָרָדוּ, et abierunt, ut legere videtur Syrus, qui, וָאֵלּוּ, et iverunt.

Au. Ver.—6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon to Riblah; and they gave judgment upon him [Heb., spake judgment with him].

7 And they slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of [Heb., made blind] Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of brass, and carried him to Babylon.

Pool.—Thus two prophecies were fulfilled, which seemed contrary one to the other, that he should go to Babylon, Jer. xxxii. 5; xxxiv. 3; and that he should never see Babylon [Ezek. xii. 13].

Bp. Horsley.—6, 7 They gave—they slew—and put out. These verbs are all singular in the LXX and Vulgate, as they are in the original in the parallel place of Jeremiah, and as the first is here in many of Kennicott's best Codd., and the last in the printed text.

Houb.—7 שָׂחֻוּ יָדָיו, jugalaverunt ... excæcavit. Hæc discordia numerorum oriri videtur ex Chaldæo, quem sæpe autorem sequebantur Scribæ Judæi. Quippe omnes Veteres, שָׂחֻוּ, jugalavit, de Nabuchadonossore dictum; solus Chaldæus, יָדָיו, jugalaverunt.

Au. Ver.—8 And in the fifth month, on the seventh day of the month, which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard [or, chief marshal], a servant of the king of Babylon, unto Jerusalem.

Ged.—On the seventh day. So the present text, with Sep., Vulg., and Chald. But Syr., Arab., and 3 MSS. have ninth. And the p. p. Jerem. lii. 12 has tenth.

Pool, Patrick.—On the seventh day of the month. Quest. How doth this agree with Jer. lii. 12, where he is said to come thither on the tenth day. Answ. Either he came to Jerusalem on the seventh day, and burnt the temple on the tenth day (so Houb., Horsley); or this sacred writer speaks of the day of his departure from Riblah towards Jerusalem, and Jeremiah speaks of his coming to Jerusalem, which was about three days' journey from Riblah.—Pool.

2. An executioner, then a lifeguardsman, body-guard of a king; since these in the East act as executioners. רִבְצָדָן 2 Kings xxv. 8 sq.; Jer. xxxix. 9 sq.; and רִבְצָדָן Gen. xxxvii. 36; xxxix. 1; xl. 3, 4; xli. 10, 12, captain of the body-guard, pp. chief executioner. In Egypt he had a public prison in his house, Gen. xl. 3; in Babylon Nebuzaradan, who held this office, commanded also a part of the Royal army, Jer. xxxix. 13; lii. 15.

Ver. 9.

Au. Ver.—9 And he burnt the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all the houses of Jerusalem, and every great man's house burnt he with fire.

Bp. Patrick.—And the king's house, —and every great man's house burnt he with fire.] By col beth gadol, which signify, every great house, the Talmudists understand all the Synagogues. But Kimchi, Ralbag, and Abarbanel, interpret the words as we do, and so the Targum.

Ver. 10.

וְאֶשֶׁר רִבְצָדָן —

Au. Ver.—10 And all the army of the Chaldees, that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jerusalem round about.

That were with.

Houb.—10 וְאֶשֶׁר עִמּוֹ : Lege, ut apud Jeremiam lii. 13. ... וְאֶשֶׁר עִמּוֹ, qui erat cum principe... Ita legere videntur Chaldaeus, Syrus, Arabs. So Hallet.

8, 12 Captain of the guard. See the notes upon ver. 8.

Ver. 12.

Houb.—10 וְאֶשֶׁר עִמּוֹ, et arvis, ut lego in Codice Orat. 56, nec non, manu priori, in Codice 54, Codex autem 42, וְאֶשֶׁר עִמּוֹ, ut emendat Masora in Editione Athianâ; male. Nam bonæ notæ Codices emendant ad marginem וְאֶשֶׁר, sine v.

Ver. 14, 15.

Au. Ver.—14 And the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the fire-pans, and the bowls, and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

14 Pots. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 45, p. 778.

Shovels. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 40, pp. 777, 778.

Snuffers. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 50, p. 776.

Spoons. See notes on Exod. xxv. 29, vol. i., pp. 327, 328.

15 Fire-pans. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 50, p. 777.

Gesen.—פָּתָחָה f. (ר. פָּתָחָה). 1. Fire-pan, fire-shovel, censer, in which coals were taken up and incense kindled, Lev. xvi. 12; Ex. xxvii. 3; xxxviii. 3; Num. xvi. 6, sq.; 1 Kings vii. 50, al.

2 Snuff-dishes, Ex. xxv. 38; xxxvii. 23; Sept. ὑποθήματα, Vulg. vasa, ubi quæ emuncta sunt, exstinguantur. This accords with the context, which treats of the lamps.

Bowls. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 40, pp. 777, 778.

Such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver.

Houb.—Quæ aureæ erant, et quæ argenteæ.

Dathe.—Sive aureas, sive argenteas.

Ver. 17.

Au. Ver.—17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapter upon it was brass: and the height of the chapter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work.

The height of the chapter three cubits. See notes on 1 Kings vii. 16, p. 768.

Houb. — 17 שֵׁשׁ מִסָּחָה, trium cubitorum. Masora מִסָּחָה, recte. Sed apud Jeremiam lii. 22, legitur חֲמִשָּׁה מִסָּחָה, quinque cubitorum, quæ vera scriptio est. Ea enim concordat cum loco parallelo, lib. i., cap. 7, ver. 16, ubi columnæ illæ duæ describuntur.

Wreathen work, See notes on שִׁבְכָה, 1 Kings vii. 17, p. 769.

Ver. 19.

Au. Ver.—19 And out of the city he took an officer [or, eunuch] that was set over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the king's presence [Heb., saw the king's face, Esther i. 14], which were found in the city, and the principal scribe of the host [or, scribe of the captain of the host], which mustered the people of the land, and three-score men of the people of the land that were found in the city.

Officer [or, eunuch]. See notes on 1 Kings xxii. 9, p. 865.

Five men.

Pool. — Object. These were seven, Jer. lii. 25. Ans. Either five were first taken, and two after them; or two of the seven were of an inferior rank, who therefore are here omitted.

Houb. — 19 חֲמִשָּׁה, et quinque. Hic etiam variant Codices; nam Chaldæus, חֲמִשָּׁה, quinquaginta; Arabs سبعة, septem, ut apud Jeremiam lii. 25, qui numeri conciliari vix possunt, quoniam tanguntur utrobique homines iidem; nempe illi, qui erant, vel regii corporis stipatores, vel regis familiares.

Scribe. See notes on 2 Sam. viii. 17, p. 560.

Ver. 20.

Au. Ver.—20 And Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard took these, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

Houb.—יָלַךְ אִתָּם: Lege vel, וַיֵּלֶךְ; vel וַיִּלְכֵּךְ, et duxit eos. Alterutram scripturam habent duo Codices Orat. Legebant etiam vocem Hiphil omnes Veteres; ut non liceat convertere, ex voce Kal, et iuit cum eis.

Ver. 23.

וַיִּשְׁמְעוּ כָּל-שָׂרֵי הַחֲיָלִים הַהֵם וְהַנְּאֻשִׁים וְהַנְּאֻשִׁים וְהַנְּאֻשִׁים καὶ ἤκουσαν πάντες οἱ ἀρχοντες τῆς δυνάμεως αὐτοὶ καὶ οἱ ἄνδρες αὐτῶν, κ.τ.λ.

Au. Ver.—23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard, &c.

And their men.

Houb.—וְהַנְּאֻשִׁים: Lege, וְהַנְּאֻשִׁים, et homines ipsorum, ut legunt omnes Veteres, et ut infra legitur, hoc eodem versu.

Ver. 27.

Au. Ver.—27 And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison.

Bp. Patrick.—On the seven and twentieth day of the month. It was resolved on the twenty-fifth day of the month, and executed two days after [so Houb., Bp. Horsley]. So this place is easily reconciled with Jer. lii. 35.

Did lift up the head of, &c. See notes on Gen. xl. 13, vol. i., p. 98.

Gesen.—וַיִּשָּׂא רֹאשׁ מֶלֶךְ בָּבֶלֶת לְרִשְׁתָּהּ to lift up the head of any one out of prison, is to bring him up out of prison, these being usually under ground, 2 Kings xxv. 27; and so without the words מֶלֶךְ בָּבֶלֶת Gen. xl. 13, 20.

Houb. — ... וַיִּשָּׂא רֹאשׁ הַמֶּלֶךְ; verbum pro verbo, extulit caput Joachin: vide quæ diximus ad Genesis xl. 13. Habet וַיִּשָּׂא, censum habere, et ad hæc verba מִבֵּית כְּלִא, ex domo carceris, adjunctum, significat, tollere de censu captivorum.

Ver. 29.

Au. Ver.—29 And changed his prison garments, &c.

Houb.—29 וַיַּחַד, et mutavit. Lege וַיַּחַד, ut ad marginem Codicum monetur legi quibusdam in Codicibus. Illæ וַיַּחַד מִן הַיָּמִים, et וַיַּחַד מִן הַיָּמִים permutationes, quæ sunt satis crebræ, Librariis Judæis, non Hebraicæ Linguae, sunt attribuendæ.
